Wayne becomes infatuated with Helen's beauty, proposes that she give up her job as his stenographer, and accept his offer to remain as his companion and pal. First rejecting his advances, Helen, in a moment of weakness, however, finally gives way. Lawrence Grove, upon his return from Canada, calls upon Wayne, who is his father's lawyer, and employs him to find Helen Warner, informing him of the details of their separation. Lawrence shows Wayne her photograph and Wayne realizes that the girl he has wronged is the object of Lawrence's quest.

Wayne makes an excuse and leaves his office, telling Lawrence to dictate a description of the girl to his stenographer, and there Helen and Lawrence meet. Lawrence urges her to marry him immediately, but she answers that she is unworthy of him, that another man has already entered her life.

Lawrence is beside himself with rage and urges her to reveal the man's name, vowing that he will kill him. Helen refuses. She leaves Wayne's employ and takes up her residence at the home of Wayne's managing clerk, Simpson. In the meantime, Helen has written Alice to the country, not knowing that her sister had returned to the city, and asking Alice to take her away. The letter is re-addressed to Alice in New York, and she calls for Helen at Simpson's home, at the same time that Wayne calls for the purpose of urging Helen to marry Lawrence. It is then that Helen learns that Wayne is her sister's husband.

Alice takes Helen to their home, where she meets Lawrence, who again pleads with her to marry him. She still refuses him. Wayne also urges her to accept the boy and finally, in orner to force her to consent, tells her in the presence of Lawrence that he knows the name of the otner man, and that unless she marries Lawrence, he will name the man and at the same time places a gun on the table in front of Lawrence, knowing Lawrence will carry out his threat and kill him. Helen realizes how many lives are dependent on her decision, and what it would mean to her sister especially, finally consents to marry Lawrence, whom she still loves, but of whom she has not felt worthy.

THE FORTUNATE YOUTH (Ocean Film Corporation—Five Parts—March).—The cast: Paul Kegsworthy, afterwards known as Paul Savelli (Wilmuth Merkyl); Silas Kegsworthy, his father, afterwards known as Silas Finn (William Cohill); Barney Bill Simmons (John A. Smiley); Colonel James Winwood (G. Davison Clark); Mr. Buttons (Charles Graham); Princess Sophie Zobraska (Lilie Leslie); Polly Gordon (Rita FitzGerald); Miss Ursula Winwood (Sue Balfour); Jane (Marguerite Forrest); Maisie Shephard (Betty Holton).

Silas Kegsworthy, arrested for assaulting his wife, is sent to prison. The wife, together with her baby boy, Paul, is under the protection of Barney Bill, a friend of her husband. Silas, injured in prison in an attempt to stop an explosion, is reported to have died. Mrs. Kegsworthy marries Mr. Buttons, and Paul, the drudge of the household, is abused by his stepfather.

The lad leaves home, assumes the name of Paul Savelli and travels about the country with Barney Bill, who is an itinerant hardware dealer, and meets Jane at the home where Barney Bill places him. The lad grows to be physically a perfect specimen of manhood and is sought after by artists to pose. He leaves this profession and becomes an actor in a traveling repertoire troupe. The company is stranded and the young man, penniless, trudging along the highway faints in front of the residence of Colonel James Winwood. He is brought into the home and receives medical attention.

Impressed with the wonderful classic features of the man, and his evident distress and refinement, upon his recovery he is appointed by Colonel Winwood, his secretary. His rise thereafter, in the face of strong trials and hardships is rapid, until finally he becomes a candidate for a seat in Parliament. In the intervening years, his father Silas Kegsworthy, having been released from prison and assuming the name of Silas Finn, has become a religious fanatic and a wealthy fish dealer. In the borough where "Paul Savelli, the Fortunate Youth" is running for Parliament, his father is his opponent.

Barney Bill and Jane are aware of the relationship and acquaint Finn with the fact. Finn determines that his son shall not oppose him, and telling the lad that he, Silas Finn was chosen by God, he urges the boy to decline the nomination, which he refuses to do. It is then that Silas reveals to the lad that he is the father. Stunned with this intelligence, Paul Savelli, acquaints Princess Zobraska, who is devoted to the boy, with the fact, and realizing the lowly source from which Paul had sprung, she spurns him.

Paul is successful in the election, and his father, overcome with heart disease, occasioned by the shock that his past prison record is revealed, is dying the night of the election. Paul goes to his father and to ease his last moments tells him that the cheers of the multitude are because of his father's success at the polls, and his father dies in that belief. Princess Zobraska, unable to subdue her real love for Paul, goes to him, and the story is concluded with their betrothal.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER (No. 6 "The Lightning Bell-hop"—April 5).—The flirty proprietor of the Outside Inn catches his bell-boy laughing at him and throws him into the street, just in time to be caught by Musty, who is passing by. When Musty learns that the bell-boy has been discharged and that there is consequently a vacancy in the hotel organization, he drops him to the sidewalk, enters the Inn and applies for the position. Proving himself the lightning bell-boy of the world, he is accepted.

Musty soon learns that the grand stairway of the hotel is a trick staircase and that by pulling a lever the stairs will straighten out, converting the stairway into a chute. After descending the incline on his own account, he tries it out on various patrons with satisfactory results.

The elevator, operated by handpower, sticks when a corpulent guest acts as cargo and a horse is commandeered to raise the lift. All goes well until a passing farmer inadvertently cuts the rope with his scythe. Then follows a vivid illustration of the descent of man.

Musty plays manys tricks on the proprietor and the guests, and enjoys waiting on the whims of an actress who stops at the hotel. He explains how the room is lightened by drawing a flame on the gas-jet painted on the wall, and darkened by erasing it. When the actress complains that there is no chair in her room, Musty obligingly paints one on the wall. After numerous amusing episodes, the reel ends in a general scramble, in which, of course Musty gets the worst of it.

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

THE SUPREME SACRIFICE (Five Parts—Premo Feature Film Co. March 20).—The Cast: David Aldrich (Robert Warwick); Rev. Phillip Morton (Vernon Steele); Lillian Drew (Christine Mayo); Helen Chambers (Anna Q. Nilsson); Alexander Chambers (Robert Forsyth); Kate Morgan (Jessie Lewis); Tom (Dion Titherage). Directed by Lionel Belmore.

David Aldrich aspires to be an author. The publishers reject most of his manuscripts because they seem to lack realism. David struggles on, however, determined to succeed and kept happy by his love for Helen Chambers and for his bosom friend Morton, who is a young minister working among the people on the East Side. Unknown to David and the world at large, the Rev. Phillip Morton, idol of the East Side, is systematically being blackmailed by Lillian Drew, a woman with whom the young minister had had an affair when a college student and who is now a woman of the town.

In desperation, Morton appropriates funds from a charity organization of which he is the head, and dies of heart failure when he realizes that the stock certificates, with which he hoped to make up the deficit, are worthless.

David, heartbroken by the loss of his friend, discovers to his horror the secret that brought on Morton's sudden death. The Committee of the Charity Society discover the shortage and suspicion falls on David. He submits in silence to trial and conviction, rather than expose his dead friend.

David goes to prison and serves a term of four years. Helen never loses her faith in David and spends the years of waiting in charitable and settlement work. Free at last, David attempts to rebuild his life, only to find himself beset by the police with their customary method of hounding ex-convicts and making it almost impossible for them to hold decent employment. But David at last overcomes all obstacles and forges ahead, though he has steadfastly kept himself from seeking out his old friends and the woman he still loves.

It is through Lillian Drew, the blackmailer, that Helen learns at last the secret of her former sweetheart's supreme sacrifice. Helen seeks him and forces David to acknowledge Morton's guilt and his own innocence. In the end the people of the East Side learn to know and reverence the man they thought a despicable swindler, and David, out of his bitter experiences, begins to write of life as it really is and finds himself on the road to success and change, and the latter is forced to accept a true happiness.

THE STRUGGLE (Equitable—Five Parts—March 27).—The cast: Major James Carew (Frank Sheridan); Lieut. Leonard Dames (Arthur Ashley); Col. Caldwell (Alfred Loring); Mrs. Caldwell (Isabelle Vernon); Marjorie Caldwell (Ethel Gray Terry); Mrs. Drew (Eileen Evans). Directed by John Ince.

Carew, surgeon at an army post, is in love with Marjorie Caldwell, but Marjorie, who is all for social stuff, thinks her feeling toward him is only friendship. Dames comes to the post as junior surgeon, and supersedes Carew in her regard, marrying the girl. Mrs. Drew, a widow, comes to the post and an intrigue begins between Dames and the widow. Carew sees it, and to save Marjorie tells her that his absences are matters of duty. He asks to be transferred to Manila, and he and Dames are both sent there. On the way Carew warns Dames that he will lose Marjorie's love, and they quarrel, Dames being partly drunk.

The ship hits a reef, and Dames, in an effort to save himself, wrenches a life preserver from a woman. Marjorie and Carew are left on the ship, but Carew rescues her, and in the morning they are on the shore of an island with an overturned boat and the bodies of their fellow-passengers in the surf.

On the shore of another island Dames is rescued by an Abbot, but his wounds cause him to lose his identity. On the first island, Marjorie comes to see the strength of Carew's character, but he refrains from telling her of the actions of her husband. A ship is sighted, and Carew, after a struggle, lights the beacon that will save them both but probably take Marjorie away from him.

In San Francisco they learn that Dames is reported missing. He asks her to be his wife, but she thinks Dames may still be alive. Dames is on the island with lepers, and works with the monks as Father Fabrician. Carew comes to the island and finds Dames at work among the lepers. He recognizes Dames, but the latter denies his identity. He goes to the monastery, tells the Abbot the truth, and Dames leaves with Carew for Manila, and an operation that will restore his memory.

After the operation Dames returns to his drunken habits, and reading some of Carew's letters learns of the feeling of his wife, giving it a sinister turn. As he prepares to assault Carew he sees the marks of leprosy on his arm, becomes agonized with fear, jumps overboard and is lost. In San Francisco Carew finds Marjorie tells her of the occurrences and of Dame's death, and while she feels sorry that he has gone as he did, she finds her true happiness with Carew.

THE HAND OF PERIL (Paragon—Five Parts—March 27).—The cast: James Kestner (House Peters); Maura Lambert (June Elvidge); Frank Lambert (Ralph Delmore); "Bull's Eye" Cherry (Doris Sawyer); Tony Morello (Ray Pilcer). Directed by Maurice Tourneur.

James Kestner is a government secret agent on the trail of a band of counterfeiters and particularly anxious to locate the head of the gang, Frank Lambert, who, in addition to his skill as a counterfeiter, is known to the underworld as the only man who can fill in the perforations of a used bank check. Kestner locates the band in their underground work shop near the river front. He cleverly maneuvers his way into the headquarters of the band when it is empty, but is caught in the act of searching for incriminating evidence by "Bull's Eye" Cherry, a clever girl crook, and one of the mainstays of Lambert's crowd.

Lambert and his daughter, who has been educated in crime by her father, return to find Kestner held at the point of Cherry's revolver. Lambert is for killing the detective outright. Impressed by Kestner's brave demeanor, Maura intercedes in his behalf, but finding her father determined in his intention to kill the government agent, she pretends that the police are outside. The counterfeiters make their escape without settling accounts with Kestner. Kestner locates the criminals in their new quarters. One of his assistants trails "Bull's Eye," who has the new counterfeit plates in her possession, but she cleverly evades capture and returns the plates to Lambert's headquarters.

Kestner forces his way into the gang's rooms, arriving just in time to witness a desperate battle between Lambert and Tony Morello, one of his accomplices, whose passion for Maura has led him to attempt to force his advances upon her. Lambert kills Morello with a knife, but before dying the man acquaints Maura with the fact that Lambert is not her real father, but that he stole her when a baby and reared her to this life of crime. Kestner places Lambert under arrest, but the crook evades capture a second time by a ruse. Kestner's assistant arrives with the police, but Kestner permits Maura to go free on account of her having saved his life on the occasion of their first meeting.

Kestner is determined to capture Lambert single-handed. He trails him to a midnight rendezvous on a wharf, where he and Lambert fight it out to a finish. The revolver battle between the two men in the dark culminates in a hand-to-hand encounter in which Kestner ultimately proves victor, but has barely strength enough to handcuff himself to his unconscious opponent before collapsing. In the end Kestner induces Maura to return to the straight road, and she takes up her home with his mother. The story closes with the intimation that the romance so strangely begun will lead, as time passes, to a life of happiness for them, together.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 20 (March 1).

The United States collier Prometheus starts from San Francisco to tow the steamer Crescent to New York on the longest trip of its kind on record.

When Chicago society women, enthused by the call for preparedness, joined a cavalry troop, a Hearst-Vitagraph cameraman caught the festive item, and another was on hand when the students of two classes at the University of California staged their annual fight. And in New York when six barefooted girls rehearsed their vaudeville act in the ice-crusted snow of Central Park, a Hearst-Vitagraph "movie man" was present to show their blood trickling-feet which resulted from the cruel experience. In like manner, a big blaze in Chicago's loop district was caught on the moment. Even Newton D. Baker, the newly-appointed Secretary of War, and Lindley M. Garrison, the retiring secretary, did not escape the Hearst-Vitagraph cameraman.

This issue also includes the novel sight of Gordon Ronneberg, of Chicago, aged six, in a thrilling high leaping ski exhibition and shows also society afoot on a winter hunt near Burlingame, California. And from over the seas, the French front in Greece and the Allied fleet in the harbor of Salonika are brought to the eyes of the Western world through the medium of Hearst-Vitagraph.

T. E. Powers, the cartoonist, drops in one of his famous gloom killers. Hearst-Vitagraph never neglects the women. In this release the fair ones may see the choicest creations of New York designers, of negligee, bathing costume and morning dresses, all veritable dreams of novelty and newness.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 21 (March 13).

Nothing in days has so affected the people of the United States as the raid of the bandit Villa and his blood-spillers of the Mexican revolution into the town of Columbus, New Mexico, and the subsequent rush of the United States troops across the border, in pursuit of the murderers. To avenge the death of the seventeen citizens killed in the massacre, a most thrilling man hunt is under way, and the Hearst-Vitagraph cameraman has secured scenes of this incident for this release.

Lively scenes of the Greek troops leaving Salonika and the occupation of the city by the Allies are also shown. Another view shows the curious splendor of the New Orleans Mardi Gras, and when the torpedo boat destroyer Portland had its first test in a gale at Rockland, Me., a Hearst-Vitagraph man was there to picturize the trip.

Down in Tampa, Florida, a Hearst-Vitagrapher overtook Joe Tinker and his Chicago Nationals and sent in a pre-season line of the activities of the Cubs. When Secretary McAdoo and other high officials started for a trade promotion trip to South America, a Hearst-Vitagraph cameraman "got" them as they sailed from old Point Comfort.

George Herriman and his funny Krazy Kat and Ignatz Mouse in an error in a study on bugology lend a hearty laugh to the reel, and a choice lot of afternoon gowns, tailored suits evening gowns, hats and footwear of the very latest New York creations furnish the interest for the women. In addition to this gunners on the cruiser San Diego being awarded a naval marksmanship trophy, and the boy scouts of Cleveland in a novel river hunt are shown.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 22 (March 17).

In this release are pictured the stirring scenes in Columbus, New Mexico. It shows General Slocum and his staff prepared for their dash after Villa and his outlaws while a guard of honor paces before the tent which contains the bodies of the seventeen Americans who were killed in the Villa raid. In addition, an animated cartoon by Hal Coffman illustrates the critical situation.

In Cincinnati, a Hearst-Vitagraph man was on hand when the famous old Trinity Church was destroyed by flames. The human fly was caught by another cameraman, while doing a daring slide on a wire, at Oakland and babies of all shapes and sizes and manifold chubbiness were clicked while rolling, walking, riding and toddling in the "Better Baby Week" exposition in Chicago.

In this reel, the Philadelphia National League champs are presented in Spring practice at St. Petersburg, Fla., and religious enthusiasts of Chicago are shown constructing a tabernacle for evangelistic services. In addition this reel contains views of Eddie Pullen winning a dashing hundred mile motor race at Los Angeles auto course; overseas pictures of the Allies, their work and their pleasures, together with some funny Krazy Kat and Ignatz Mouse cartoons from the pen of George Herriman, and a tempting glimpse of newest creations of the leading American designers, in the line of hats, sport suits, evening dresses, footwear and afternoon gowns.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 23 (March 20).

This release begins with scenes of the bloody strife at far-away Salonika. Then at Yarmouth Junction, Me., a Hearst-Vitagraph photographer registered the embarkment of three thousand mules for the Allies; further up in the Maine woods he caught great tractor engines hauling logs from a lumber camp over scarcely broken roads, and at Portland, Me., he photographed the steamer Herman Winter, which was beached when fire broke out in her hold.

Hearst-Vitagraph Staff Photographer Mathewson, who has faithfully recorded the exciting scenes on the Mexican border, gives another series of views, showing last tributes to the dead heroes of the Columbus raid, members of the 13th Cavalry, as their bodies started homeward from the scene of their murder.

In addition this reel contains an animated argument over a demi-tasse, between George Herriman's Krazy Kat and his Ignatz Mouse. nd for the women it has a rare lot of after-Easter hints that are both new and wonderful, ossessing many of the modern things that furnish joy and inspiration to feminine hearts.

What Is More Important Than Perfect Projection?

EXHIBITORS are realizing more and more the importance of perfect projection. Every day we see evidence of this. It is encouraging and shows that the Exhibition end of the motion picture industry is on a firmer basis than ever. We have contended that perfect projection is the keystone of a theatre's success.

The greatest example of the old axiom, "Penny wise and pound foolish," is the exhibitor who looks for the cheapest. The best should be considered none to good.

THE experience the Kleine Optical Company has gained in handling projection equipment exclusively for over twenty years has proved valuable to thousands of exhibitors. Our engineering department is at your service always and each installation we make has our personal attention following our aim for better projection.

Our stock includes everything for the theater—Everything that has merit. We do not exploit experiments.

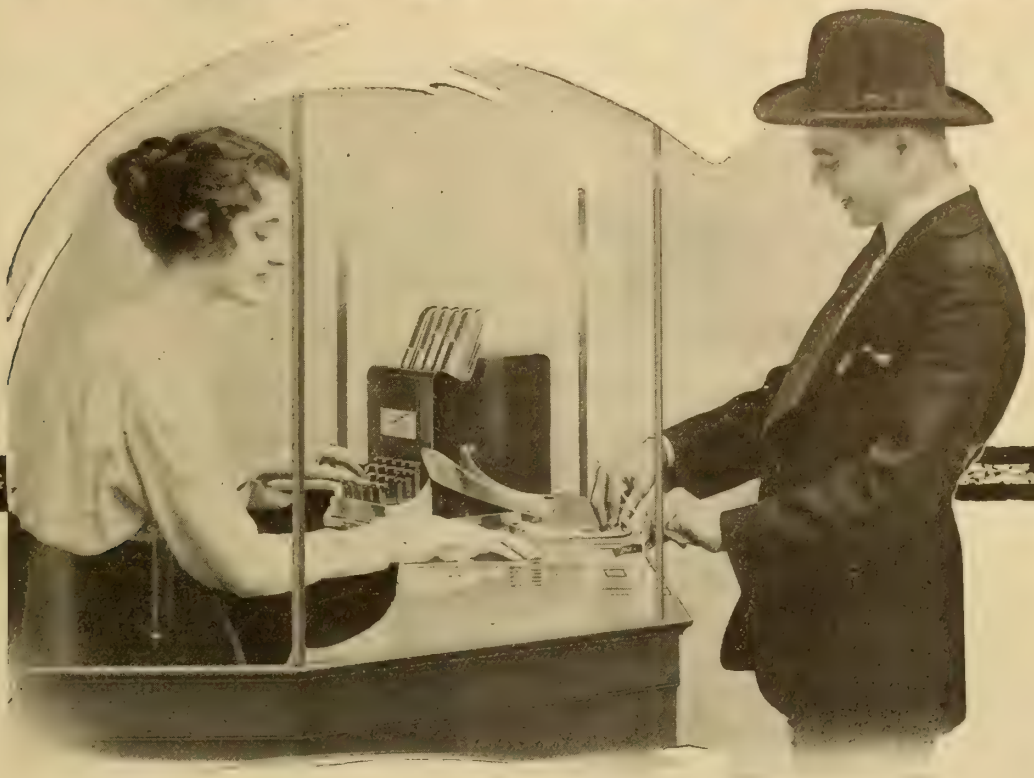
Save Time at the Window



Not only your time or your ticket seller's time, but the time of your patrons. Don't cause them to stand in line—no patron enjoys it—it hurts your theatre and turns business away. Install

CAILLE

TICKET OFFICE DEVICES

Caille Double Ticket Seller

They are designed by men whose close connection with "movie" theatres since their inception, places them in a position to know your needs from a practical standpoint. The savings produced by Caille Ticket Office Devices are not theoretical—they're based on facts.

Caille Ticket Sellers

sell tickets ten times faster than hand methods and eliminate errors. Every ticket sold is automatically registered by a register under lock and key. Tickets are delivered separately. They can't lie across the knives in the chopper.

Caille Ticket Choppers can be furnished for hand, foot or electric operation. They tear the tickets to shreds, making it absolutely impossible to use them again. Every chopper is fully guaranteed.

Our Lightning Change Maker

does the calculating and delivers the change direct to the customer. It shortens the time of transaction, prevents errors and disputes with customers. Easy to operate, fully guaranteed.

Speer Copper Coated Negative Carbons

Are now ready for the more particular operators who know the value of a small diameter lower negative carbon for D. C. Our Engineers have made exhaustive tests and find that a ½" lower carbon (Speer Copper Coated) will carry more current without danger of penciling than the ordinary ⅝" lower carbon on D. C. and the light is great and no chance of losing the arc.

Extra NET Profits For Your Theatre $600 to $3000 Yearly

My Bank Book Says—

Holcomb & Hoke Mfg. Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

Gentlemen:—The Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine is doing fine. I would not be without one. It is clearing on an average of $3 (net) per day. Sold $11 Saturday.

The Columbia Theatre, M. O. Moulden, Prop. Coffeyville, Kan.

You are actually losing $2 to $10 cold cash profit every day you open your theatre without this celebrated Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine that runs itself and requires no extra help. Make two profits from hundreds of people who pass or enter your theatre or stand outside waiting to get in.

This machine has a capacity of 80c. to $4.50 per hour and every bag sold brings you 3½c. clear profit. Makes the only popcorn with the advertised toasty flavor.

Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine

Stands anywhere. Occupies only 26 by 32 inches—move a chair and you have room. Superbly built with gleaming plate glass sides, oak, mahogany or white enameled cabinet.

Pay From Your Profits

like scores of theatre managers and owners are doing even in the smallest towns! A small amount down brings this sensational money-maker. Balance soon paid from its earnings.

"Little Gold Mine" FREE!

Send today for this inspiring photo-book—"The Little Gold Mine"—that gives full details, proofs of profits, documentary evidence from theatre owners who are making riches from this machine.

This book is worth a small fortune to any good live man. Sent FREE. Mail the coupon today without fail.

Holcomb & Hoke Mfg. Co.
519 Van Buren St., Indianapolis, Ind.
Largest Makers of Pop Corn Machines in the World

Human-like motion of machine makes people stop and look. Coaxing fragrance of Butter-Kist teases the money from their pockets.

Our national advertising brings people to your theatre for Butter-Kist. Means larger paid attendance.

Butter-Kist — untouched by hands — attracts better class who want Pop Corn but won't buy it from peddlers or street wagons.

You get $5 for every 100 bags of Butter-Kist Pop Corn, of which your net profit is $3.50.

Every time you pop the raw corn in this glass hopper you make a net profit of... $2.80

Every time this hot plate revolves it pops four 5-cent bags of Butter-Kist, making you a net profit of 14c. in 3 minutes.

This automatically butters each kernel. Every time it uses a pound you make a net profit of $1.40

In the Close Quarters of the Projection Booth

A film fire in the projection booth is a menace dreaded by every motion picture theater owner. The meets the emergency. It can be quickly brought into action by opening the nozzle and pumping, and it can also be made to discharge automatically. Ten seconds' easy pumping before opening discharge valve will compress sufficient air to exhaust the entire contents.

For the assured safety of your public, your employees and your property, you need J-M Extinguishers not only in your booth but at various points about your theater. Write nearest branch today.

Approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Read this distinctive feature list:

1. It may be operated by compressed air or used as a pump during operation.
2. An average steady stream of 30 ft.
3. A dielectric liquid that will extinguish all incipient fires, electrical, gasoline, oil and others. Harmless to skin or fabric.
4. Sealing device discourages tampering. At sight you can tell if extinguisher is always ready to use.

THE MASTER MODEL MOTION PICTURE MACHINE

The only projector to buy for durability, least cost of operation, splendid service—the American Standard Motion Picture Machine, the MASTER MODEL.

Built of comparatively fewer, but bigger and better parts. This insures you against breakdowns, and big repair bills, and is a warranty against short life. Many American Standards have been and still are running that were installed six to eight years ago. They give good service, too.

The many practical features which are exclusively found on the MASTER MODEL make for greatest ease in operation. When your operator can completely control the machine without having to fuss about with a dozen annoying details, he can devote more of his time to the artistic projection of the film on the screen. This is a point your patrons will appreciate; and they will show their appreciation by becoming regular visitors.

Projection

is better when you use

The Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converter

It produces a WHITE LIGHT of intense brilliancy, which will bring out all the details of your films. The light is steady and does not tire the eyes of your patrons. These are the important elements of good projection.

The White Light Converter combines the alternating current motor and the direct current generator in a single machine. It is, therefore, compact and comparatively light in weight. It may be installed in most projection booths. The cost of maintenance is lower than other devices for similar service.

Wagner Quality

The Wagner converter is quickly and easily installed, and is simple to operate. It requires very little attention. Reliability is an important characteristic of this device.

The name Wagnes on electrical apparatus is the "Sterling" mark in the world of electricity. It is our guarantee of a thoroughly satisfactory converting device. Literature on request. Bulletin 10923.

PAVL

JUST stop a moment and try to grasp, if you can, the magnitude of those figures. $720,000.00—nearly three-quarters of a million dollars in cash paid admissions, in eleven weeks' time to see PAVLOWA the Incomparable. The World's records smashed into smithereens—former facts and figures completely shattered as regards the colossal amount of money paid to see PAVLOWA. And mind you, this stupendous sum was taken in in two cities in the almost unbelievable short space of 11 weeks. In still another city in four performances over $25,000 in cash was taken in. In another city over $11,000 was taken in, in ONE SINGLE PERFORMANCE. And remember also that PAVLOWA had none of the countless wonders, none of the lavish splendor, to back her up as presented in that magnificent spectacle that defies all description—"The Dumb Girl Of Portici" — Produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, by arrangement with Max Rabinoff.

Imagine if you can—conceive if you have a brilliant imagination what PAVLOWA'S extraordinary drawing power must be—what immense personal magnetism and personal popularity she must possess to draw any such almost unbelievable CASH returns. The Press and Public of Chicago pronounced PAVLOWA in "The Dumb Girl of Portici" the superimposing achievement and unquestionably greatest accomplishment of the silent drama. To State Rights Buyers, the one extraordinary opportunity of a lifetime is now offered for—

"DR. NEIGHBOR"

RED FEATHER PHOTOPLAYS

Based upon the much discussed question of the right of a physician mercifully to end the life of a hopelessly incurable patient this big picture abounds in tense and thrilling situations. The allegorical prologue—a picturization of the scriptural story of the Good Samaritan—is a masterly presentation. This feature will appeal to any audience and add to the reputation of your theatre.

Book through any UNIVERSAL Exchange

UNIVERSAL

Mightiest Program on Earth

TO build your business on a rock you must be assured of such regular weekly service as the Universal Program alone can give. Producers come and go; producers spend millions of "stage money" in producing the "one, two and three reelers that will revolutionize the industry"; producers go up like a rocket and come down like a stick; producers holler their heads off about their wonderful stars—people who cannot measure up to 500 capable actors and actresses in Universal studios who never see their names in print—When you book from such producers you are on the road to ruin. Protect yourself, your good name and your fortune by playing the one safe program—the MIGHTY UNIVERSAL—which week after week releases more great plays, more novelties, more genuine stars, more capable actors and actresses, under the finest directors, more crowd-getting, money-making, punch photo plays than all other programs combined. If it isn't too late tie up to the Universal Program NOW—if you can't get it NOW—watch your chance and get in on it at the first opportunity. Write your nearest Universal Exchange or the Home Office at the address below.

Mary Fuller in "Thrown to the Lions." Cabaret life drama from the story by Wallace Irwin. Thirteenth Red Feather Production. Directed by Lucius Henderson. Released April 24. Granting that people don't like to be "preached at," it must be admitted that they do like "to be shown." This big and thrilling emotional drama shows the cabaret life along the "Gay White Way" and the dangers that confront an ambitious girl in a great city. Metropolitan characters abound and the scenes—the cabaret—the stage—behind the scenes—are not only the essence of realism, but as such they will prove a revelation to those unfamiliar with the most famous street in the world. This picture is truly tremendous. Its prologue alone will make it famous. Scenes in ancient Rome with Christian maidens literally thrown to the lions to make sport for the degenerate emperor Nero are depicted with a fidelity that will bring gasps of admiration and thrills of suspense from your patrons. This typifies the young girls who are thrown to the modern lions of lust. Produced by any other concern, this would be considered big enough to be labeled "special feature." Take a little tip from thousands of successful Exhibitors and book this quick.

"The Other Half" with G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson. Two Reel Gold Seal Emotional Drama. Directed by Jacques Jaccard. Released April 25. The boy's artistocratic papa didn't think the girl was of good enough family for his son. And when you consider that her father was "Blackie" Connors, a notorious dive keeper, you'll admit you might have hesitated yourself. But when "Blackie" stole the old man's rental records and disclosed more vile sources of "tainted money" than "Blackie" himself could show—well, there's the most surprising climax you ever saw.

"Bill's Narrow Escape." Billie Ritchie in Two Reel L-KO Komedy scream. Released April 26. How're ya goin' ta describe a laff? Huh? How're ya goin' ta even remember a coupla thousand places to laff in a coupla thousand feet of funny fillum? Huh? You can't. But you can book this smashing, screaming comedy and give your patrons the treat of their young lives. Do it.

"Miss Blossom" with Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and Fred Church. A Romance of Springtime. Two Reel Laemmle. Directed by Lynn Reynolds. Released April 27. Shad was only "po' white trash," but he was ambitious for an education. Fred's blue blood did not curb his brutal and contemptible nature and the clash of these two strong characters, rivals for Blossom's hand, makes one of the most beautiful as well as one of the strongest romantic dramas ever released on the Universal Program, which means the best in the entire world. Book this for profits and for the pleasure you will give your patrons.

"Why Mrs. Kentworth Lied." Three Reel Victor Detective Drama with Matt Moore and Jane Gail. Directed by Matt Moore. Released April 28. Her husband was shot by a burglar. Her gems are missing. She was found standing over the wounded man with a revolver in her hand. She wouldn't admit the shooting, but she was evidently shielding the burglar. The house was full of detectives. Who was the guilty man? Though you are told early in the picture, you can't get the reason why Mrs. Kentworth lied, till the big climax comes, which will surprise and delight every one who sees it.

"The Torrent of Vengeance" with Lee Hill and Ora Carew. Two Reel 101-Bison. Directed by Henry Macrae. Released April 29. Bigger, more sensational, more daring and more truly realistic than any moving picture ever shown—is the very least that can be said about this startling, thrilling, gripping picture of a flood that destroyed a town. Every scene is actual and real. You see a town swept away before your very eyes. Men, women and children; horses and cattle, houses and buildings, automobiles, bridges, all are doomed before the mighty torrent. The dramatic situation and story is as intense as the tragic flood scenes, and the whole is the most stupendous spectacular picture of its kind ever released. Don't fail to get this—it is a picture in a thousand.

"Through Flames to Love" with Harry Ben- ham and Edna Hunter. Two Reel Imp Romantic Drama. Released April 30. A married man ain't got no business foolin' around a young girl, but Gosh, Edna's so sweet and lovely ye have to admit the feller's got provocation. However, she was wise to his tricks and when she "spurned him" he tried a dirty trick for revenge. It was a darned good thing Harry came along and saved her, otherwise he wouldn't have won the prettiest screen bride, and you would have missed a climax that's as effective as it is unusual.

The above subjects that others would label "FEATURE" are all on the REGULAR UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

W. S. Hart in the Aryan

For the week of April 9th the TRIANGLE-Ince Play is of particular interest to exhibitors and public alike. W. S. Hart, who has established a reputation for his excellent portrayals of western characters, plays the leading role in "The Aryan" with that intensity and reality that only Hart can give to a picture.

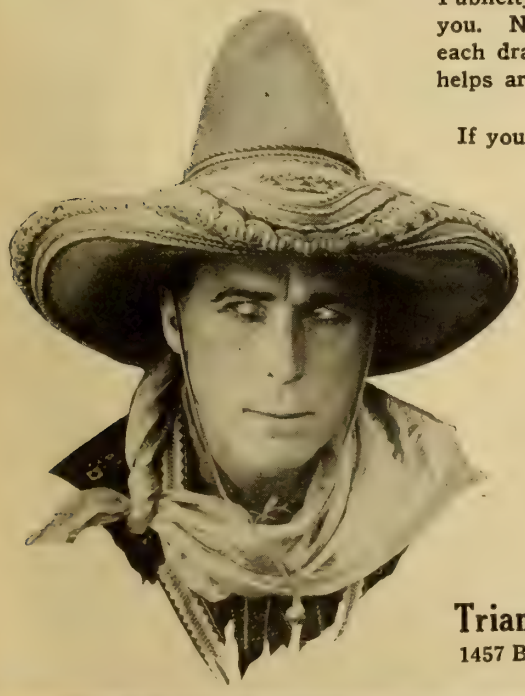
Produced almost in its entirety on the sands of the Mojave desert in California this picture gives ample opportunity for effective presentation.

Hart plays the part of a rugged man of the desert who, having been fleeced of his fortune by a degraded woman who deceived him, kidnaps her, and escapes to the desert to establish a lawless mining camp, there to become the personification of hate, utterly despising all women, until he is awakened to the code of his race by a gentle fearless girl who trusts him.

Bessie Love, who may be remembered for her appearance in "Acquitted" and in "The Flying Torpedo," plays the part of the demure, trusting little girl, while Louise Glaum, the popular vampire woman plays the part of the deceiver.

For this same week the TRIANGLE Fine-Arts Play will be Dorothy Gish, with Owen Moore, in "Little Meena's Romance"—a particularly interesting tale of the Pennsylvania Dutch. A love affair between a poor little Pennsylvania Dutch girl and a Baron salesman of patent clothes-wringers is the theme of this latest Triangle Play. Then as usual there will be two Keystone Comedies that are guaranteed to drive dull care away.

If you are a TRIANGLE exhibitor and need assistance with your publicity or advertising work let our Publicity Department be of service to you. Newspaper advertisements for each drama release and other special helps are at your service.



If you are not a TRIANGLE exhibitor why not use the attached coupon and secure information in regard to the presentation of these pictures in your town. Increased box office returns will surely result. Without question the matter is one worth investigation.

COMMENDATION

"William N. Selig is to be commended for his constant loyalty to the General Film Company's programs. When the feature craze started and some producers showed indications of slighting the one, two and three reel subjects, Mr. Selig never faltered in his policy of devoting important attention to this output. Nor did he content himself with this; he frequently advocated in print that the preservation of short photoplays meant the assured success of the business, because it not only kept the smaller theatres from passing out of existence, but it met the needs of a vast number of moving picture patrons who become tired of seeing long-drawn-out photoplays week in and week out. 'The Devil, The Servant and The Man,' has a story that might well be done in five instead of three reels."—James S. McQuade, in Moving Picture World, April 1, 1916.

Essanay Making Classics

The Greek idea of a classic was something clear, concise, condensed—not a word too much.

Essanay is producing classics in its one, two and three reel photoplays by making them clear, concise, condensed.

This eliminates unessentials and quickens the action.

Essanay gives just as much care and attention to the production of its short subjects as it does to its features.

Short subjects have always been in demand and always will be.

Helen Ware in

"SECRET LOVE"

As a great legitimate star, Miss Ware's appearance in BLUEBIRD Photoplays broke down the last barrier between stage and screen.

The Perfect Woman, Ida Schnall in

"UNDINE"

A Sea Fairy Tale greater than "Neptune's Daughter." The most beautiful picture ever released.

Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley in

"HOP—THE DEVIL'S BREW"

Produced by the Smalleys. An expose of the opium traffic. Authorized by the U. S. Secret Service. Released at the time of San Francisco's nationally heralded clean-up of Chinatown.

Carter De Haven and Flora Parker De Haven in

"THE WRONG DOOR"

Gave to moving pictures a new type of play—serious drama, brightened by the genius of two of America's most popular musical comedy stars.

The Most Beautiful Woman on the Screen
Louise Lovely, in

"THE GRIP OF JEALOUSY"

A celebrated Australian star whose appearance here in a lavish production of a beautiful play of the Old South met with an ovation.

The Popular Screen Star, Jane Gail in

"RUPERT OF HENTZAU"

This great play by Anthony Hope, has appealed to millions in play and story form, and registered an even greater success on the screen.

The Idol of Millions, Mary Fuller in

"The STRENGTH of The WEAK"

In these days of frank sex discussion, this great play strikes a new and wholesome note in the leading role as played by Miss Fuller.

"THE YAQUI"

Released at the very climax of the tense and strained Mexican situation, showing the exact condtiions of guerrilla warfare along the much raided Mexican Border.

"THE FLIRT"

With Marie Walcamp and Antrim Short

Booth Tarkington's celebrated Saturday Evening Post story. The boy character was the forerunner of the famous Tarkington "Penrod" stories, and Antrim Short is the exact "Penrod" type

Beautiful Louise Lovely in

"TANGLED HEARTS"

Here comedy and tragedy are separated by the faintest of boundaries. This sparkling production is a splendid example of the BLUEBIRD'S high standard.

One of America's Leading Actors,
Tyrone Power in

"JOHN NEEDHAM'S DOUBLE"

The American stage is proud of the genius of Tyrone Power. Of this remarkable Smalleys picture, an eminent critic said: "As near perfect as the most critical could require."

Facts and Comments

WITHIN the last six months some of the most prominent European producers have been in this country looking over the American market. The war is responsible for this. The vast commerce between the various European countries has come to a standstill. Italy and France find Germany, Austria and Southeastern Europe closed to them. Russia is difficult to reach in peace times, at present it is almost impossible to carry on a lucrative film trade with that country. Producing, too, has diminished in every belligerent country. Hence the eyes of the European manufacturer are turned toward us. There may be an invasion, which will from present indications very much antedate our own contemplated invasion of the Latin-American market.

ALL over the country newspapers are declaring themselves on the question of screen censorship. They are all against it. You Mr. Exhibitor can do your share to increase this kind of valuable publicity. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has a complete anti-censorship literature. It's yours for the asking. Send it to your local paper. It's bound to help you individually and of course it will redound to the benefit of the industry as a whole. Write for it today.

PUBLICITY is no substitute for quality. We would like to see this simple sentence plastered over the walls of every publicity mill in the country. The cleverest kind of publicity will be like a blow in the air unless the intrinsic quality supports every statement sent out by the Perpetual Publicity Promoters. "Give Me Publicity or Give Me Death," sounds all right as the agonized cry of the press agent, but there is in it no echo of common sense.

THE National Board of Censorship is no more. Instead of a group of censors we now have the National Board of Review. It was a consummation which THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD had wished devoutly and advocated strongly. The reasons given by the board for dropping the odious word are as brief as they are excellent. Congratulations on behalf of the entire industry.

SPORADIC complaints about bad business in the exhibiting end of our industry are caused by sporadic conditions. But recently the writer listened to the manager of a prominent house in the city, who was deploring the backwardness of his public. While thus listening I watched the picture and presently the hero was brought into the presence of the agonized heroine. The hero was supposed to be badly wounded and as he was carried in on a stretcher the leader of the orchestra started a strain of lively Oriental music distinctly reminiscent of the Hoochee-Coochee. If this sort of thing was typical, the small attendance of the public was but natural. From all accounts that reach this office and from our own observations, it may be stated with a good degree of certainty that bad business is often the fault of bad management, and that business is normally good.

IT IS our view that the drastic and unfair Children's Law in this state is not supported by public opinion. Arouse public opinion on this subject and some such bill as the Ellenbogen measure allowing children under age to attend motion picture theatres during certain hours without adult escorts will be enacted into a law. The mothers are not in favor of the present law. There is not a box-office in any theatre of a residential neighborhood where mothers do not file requests to admit their children after they come out of school. The mothers go to the show and leave written notices with the cashier or doorman asking that their children be admitted when they present themselves later. As the law stands today it may lead to unpleasant consequences if these mothers' requests are heeded. In some theatres the mothers are called out when their children come. This angers the mothers, who may lose their seats and whose enjoyment of a good picture is often spoiled by the sudden summons. The State League deserves great credit for seeking a remedy for this condition and we earnestly hope their effort will be successful.

Picture Inspiration*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT IS possible to intensify the main line of action in a big screen story through effects rarely suggested by authors because not demanded by that action, yet it is their duty, not that of directors, to provide and appropriately place such effects in the story structure. We are just now enjoying some very beautiful sunsets to the detriment of other matter and some equally beautiful dawns where there is no particular reason for them to appear. Vivid lightning and torrents of rain are shown where there are no "dark deeds or strange," and lovely formal gardens, of themselves a delight to the eye, are thrust upon attention to the complete distraction of interest in the play and its characers.

If an author feels that his inventive resources would not stand the strain of devising a new effect, the older arts may lend a small fraction of what has accumulated during the past twenty centuries. An empty stage may be shown when the curtain rises with a view to causing a hush of expectation in the audience, then the scope may be enlarged and a scene revealed which suggests the story's mood. Or a symbol may be exhibited, or some mechanical accessory on which events depend. A little glamour, a suggestion of mystery, a stretch of fair country, some keynote to the composition, may start the imagination of an audience before the play begins.

There is a sad note at the beginning. A fond girl is parting from the man she loves. She will linger after he has gone, her heart aching as she contemplates the scene, for a shadow has fallen on her most cherished hopes and plans. The slanting sunlight is painting dark shadows on the hills, shadows that deepen until the whole world seems dark. A day comes when she receives notice that the absent one is to return. She rises and opens a window. She looks out on a scene so bathed in early sunshine that every flowering plant is tipped with gold—the whole world is radiant.

The story opens with a view of flowers. While attention is confined to a study of their beauty there is no other movement than theirs. When attention has given place to curiosity a butterfly is seen, drifting this way and that, impelled by every vagrant breeze. It vanishes and a light-hearted girl appears. She stops here and there, impelled by every shifting caprice in her nature. She dances off scene, and no other characterization is needed. We know what to expect of her in the events that follow.

Ah! Here is a closeup of a splendid spider on his intricate and well-constructed web! Carnivorous and highly predatory, he can afford to wait in his Wall-Street office until the foolish come along and speculate on a margin. He does not have to hunt his victims—they hunt him. The spider fades out as one of the characters seated at his desk fades in, and we need no other introduction.

It is through symbols that this new art often gathers its strength. It may appeal to intelligence through its representations of thought and reach that intelligence the more directly through an excited imagination, through arousing the sympathies, through the magic of suggestion. To stir soul appreciation, one must have soul appreciation and ingenuity enough to contrive means of communicating such appreciation to others.

*Copyright 1916, Louis Reeves Harrison.

The story is of a man who conceives the idea of curing all the ills of the world through laughter. The ordinary method is to explain his plans by means of screen imprint, but there is a method quite as effective without words, and therefore more in accord with story visualization. By double exposure the Spirit of Joy visits him, perhaps a pretty little girl who laughs because she cannot help it. He feels brightened by her spiritual presence, but his nature is sunny, and he ascribes his sense of pleasure to what is within him.

Not the little Spirit of Joy leads him away by invisible influences to where a group of discharged workmen are growing bitter over a strike that has failed. The Superintendent makes overtures, but they glower at him with suspicion and hatred. The Spirit of Joy leaves the main figure of the story and draws near the Superintendent. He is worried over the situation, but the near presence of Little Joy, though she cannot be seen, has an effect on him. He bows his head in amused reminiscence, then he raises it and tells a funny story. One by one the angry faces around him soften; there is a snicker here, a giggle there, and then a burst of laughter. The day is won.

Through other, similar adventures, the Spirit of Joy is seen leading the one who is to be an exponent of cheer and encouragement. He sees that people take their small woes too seriously, only forgetting them when some greater sorrow puts in an appearance. While the Spirit of Joy is gradually taking possession of his mind, there is inspiration in the scenes which form no part of the main action. It is seen that poverty is the arch enemy of man, depriving him of opportunity, souring his disposition, impelling him to be guided by those primitive impulses which lead to demoralization.

Not only is there a distinct purpose enforced by effects not demanded by the main line of action, but that purpose is in harmony with the main one and well-calculated to strengthen it, and by such methods effects can be produced which might be resented if less subtle—no audience wants a preachment, but any audience will stand for what it is permitted to interpret on its own sweet account.

The story is that of a husband whose heart is bound up in a wife who has enriched and beautified his otherwise dull existence. Suddenly this better half of him, this very essence of his being, is swept away into the unknown. He is completely prostrated by the blow. All his hopes of the future are blighted. He wanders about his home, only to burst into tears at the sight of what he and his loved one had built together. He yields to despair and starts on some form of self-indulgence which would have formerly been repugnant to him. In the midst of his debasement he takes out his watch and sees her picture pasted there—her eyes seem to be filled with tender reproach.

By a form of suggestion, one leading from the face in the watch, he can feel her near presence—it can be shown as a spiritual one. He is led to a window and given a view of some pitiful creature whose misery he could relieve, or he is brought into new relation with the life all about him, which he could not see in the midst of his selfish happiness. Through suffering his whole soul is refined until he glimpses some great divine purpose in which he must play his little part courageously to the end. It is from these neglected spiritual influences that the audience draws its finest inspiration.

There is No Demand for Censorship

By W. Stephen Bush.

I HEAR it often said by doubting Thomases that "some kind of censorship" is bound to come. Why not make concessions on our part? Now, I have been fairly close to the actual agitation for and against censorship and I state it as my firm belief that there is not now, and there never was any general and genuine popular demand for screen censorship. Down in Washington the house committee on education was profoundly impressed by the weak support of the Smith-Hughes bill. Sum it up: Who urged the passage of the Federal Censorship Bill? Of course there were the two trumpeters—Crafts and Canon Chase. They are professional reformers with which English speaking countries have been infested from the days of Titus Oates. Who were there besides these two agitators? I counted three colored ministers and about a dozen nice old ladies, whose zeal obviously outran their judgment. These facts were not lost upon the committee. To be sure the committee were impressed by the many public-spirited citizens who appeared against the bill and who had not the remotest connection with the film industry but they were impressed even more with the pitiable weakness of the support of the bill. The members were plainly beginning to wonder whether after all they had not made a mistake when at the last moment the film industry presented the tragic spectacle of a house divided against itself. Then, and only then, did the members of the committee or a majority of them waver in their new found convictions. Trenton, Albany, Annapolis—all tell the same story. Not in one of these state capitals did it appear that there was any great and honest demand behind censorship for motion pictures. The Holy Name Societies, excellent organizations productive of much good declared for censorship because the men at the head of the parent society had never given the slightest consideration to the subject. Outside of these societies there was no evidence of any sound public sentiment.

There are eight and forty states in this Union and only three have resorted to censorship. Motion pictures have been the most popular amusement for the last ten years at least. Is there any one with even a slight knowledge of American history who does not know that we would have censorship throughout the country at this very moment if the American people really wanted it?

Here is the situation in a nutshell: The politicians are after the industry. It is not statesmanship seeking constructive legislation, but it is the job-hunting and tax-digging politician that is after us. Not until there has been a reckoning at the polls with the spoils hunters, not until we have again and again demonstrated our power with the electors will the politicians leave us alone. Public sentiment is with us, the politicians are against us.

"First and Foremost"

By W. Stephen Bush.

WE TAKE these words as applied to the Moving Picture World from the letter of a prominent and successful exhibitor in Oklahoma. Speaking of the recent convention of the organized exhibitors in Oklahoma our correspondent says: "All those exhibitors to whom I had an opportunity to personally speak at the convention were unanimous in their praise of the Moving Picture World . . . . and I can assure you that the Moving Picture World is first and foremost in the hearts of the exhibitors. We have always regarded it as our friend and a strong powerful paper that is right on every big question."

The sentiments expressed by our friend are the same throughout the vast army of men who conduct the exhibiting branch of our great industry. While we realize our imperfections and while we are ever striving to turn out a better paper we are profoundly conscious of having tried to serve the exhibitor to the best of our ability. There is a small but constantly diminishing group of men in this industry who suffer from "arrested development." They have stood stockstill since 1907 or thereabouts. Like the Burbons of France they have "forgotten nothing and learned nothing." From such fossilized notions the Moving Picture World has always been free and the whole industry realizes that its success has been due to its progressive qualities. In years it is the oldest motion picture journal, but in its ability to travel in the vanguard it is the youngest thing alive. The Moving Picture World represents week after week the best concerted efforts of a large corps of trained and conscientious men and its progress is due to this splendid cooperation and not to any single individual.

This is a good opportunity to repeat what we have often said before: The Moving Picture World aiming to be the most useful organ in the industry welcomes suggestions for improvement. To attain our ambition of serving the reader faithfully and intelligently we have to hear from the men on the firing line. Their daily problems and troubles are our concern. Reading the paper as regularly and thoroughly as most of them do they no doubt discover room for some improvements. The Moving Picture World will sincerely thank its readers for any suggestions that will tend to increase its usefulness and its power of service.

Just Rumors

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE daily press of the country, always in possession of weird knowledge of motion picture things has lately been filled with rumors of a billion dollar merger, which was to stand the film industry on its head. The daily press where motion pictures are concerned leans slightly so the sensational. I doubt whether the invention of a new chromatic process in kinematography would get much space, but a tale of billions in moving pictures is sure of prominence at any time.

After these rumors were spread broadcast throughout the country the head of the concerns which were to be amalgamated came forward with plain simple statements substantially denying that they were contemplating any thing in the way of a merger. Will the daily press hasten to give these denials the same prominence which was lavished on the fabled combination? We fear not. The headline builders find no nourishment in denials of this kind. A careful and unprejudiced analysis of the evidence in the case leads us to the conclusion that there may have been lots of talk mostly of an informal, tentative and gossipy kind, but there was no action of any kind.

With full allowance for the emptiness of these rumors it must be admitted that there are signs of unrest all through the producing branch of the industry. The huge and ridiculous salaries paid to stars of even lesser magnitude constitute a grave evil, which affects not only the producer, but the exhibitor as well. There is a feeling that economies in production are imperative. Increasing cost of production and uncertainty of fair returns make a bad combination. The cost of distribution is absurdly high even under the best system now in vogue. It is a well-known fact that to the newcomer in the producing branch the cost of distribution is simply prohibitive. Talk of an unification of interests in the distribution of features has been heard on all sides. It is inspired by the hope of reducing "the overhead" entailed in distribution. Right here I think is to be found the psychology of these latest rumors.

Brady Assumes Active Control

Prominent Theatrical Man Will Pass on Productions of All Companies Associated With World Film and Equitable.

WITH a firm conviction that the great opportunity of American amusements lies in an alliance between men directing the destinies of the speaking stage and men who control the great motion picture companies, William A. Brady has completed arrangements to assume active control of all productions of the World Film Corporation, the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, and Paragon Films, Inc. Mr. Brady announced that in assuming this new office he would not lessen his activities in the speaking stage.

One of the immediate results of his taking an active interest in both fields, he explained, was that he would be able to make motion pictures of his New York successes and release these in the smaller cities where the original companies of the plays could never go. "The arrangement," said Mr. Brady, "provides a substitute for the No. 2, 3 and 4 companies whose day has passed. The smaller cities refuse to take imitations of the players whom they know were in the Broadway productions.

Wm. A. Brady.

"What I propose to do now is to make motion pictures of my New York productions with the original cast in each case, and then release these at the close of the Broadway run, when the play is being given on the stages of the large cities. In this way I can give the one night stands and places other than first-class cities, the best version available of a New York hit; I can reach every hamlet and cross-road with the original production."

Mr. Brady announced also that his activities in the field of motion pictures proper would be on the broadest scale. He made the agreement with Arthur H. Spiegel, president and general manager of the World and Equitable corporations, to assume entire charge of all productions of those companies, while Mr. Spiegel should conduct the business affairs. This means that Mr. Brady will oversee the work in all five of the studios controlled by these companies, and all the productions turned out by their directors. Pictures made by the Premo Film Company, the Frohman Amusement Corporation, and the Triumph Film Company, all of which are affiliated with and release pictures on the World-Equitable programme, will have to meet with Mr. Brady's approval. Many well known stars appear in these productions, and the equipment of the companies is most elaborate, with studios on both coasts. Mr. Brady spoke of the Paragon studio at Fort Lee, New Jersey, in particular as being the last word in equipment.

Plans for the immediate future of the companies, Mr. Brady announced further, include the erection of a motion picture theater on Broadway which will be the largest and most elaborate theater of its kind in the world. Detailed arrangements for this have been completed, and work will be started in the near future. As an example of the scale, the seating capacity is to be 5,000.

As for the kind of pictures that he would strive to provide for these corporations, Mr. Brady said: "I shall use the great facilities and the unlimited capital at my disposal to turn out what may truly be called great productions. Some of these will be on an enormous scale, reaching to eight, ten and twelve reels. I shall put into picture form the works of great authors. I shall make productions such as "Romeo and Juliet," "Ingomar," "Faust,' the novels of Sir Walter Scott, of Dumas, the plays of Ibsen, Maeterlinck, Sudermann, as well as subjects of the hour, and more especially of America. In the immediate future I shall have screened "Friday the 13th," by Thomas W. Lawson. I hope to see all of this work done intelligently and in good taste.

"Among the directors with whom I shall be associated is Maurice Tourneur, who produced 'Trilby' and other important feature pictures. I can say truly that I am proud to be associated with him and with other important directors including Albert Capellani, Emile Chautard, Frank Thornby, Edwin August, Barry O'Neill, George Lederer, Frank Crane, John Ince, Travers Vale, James Durkin, S. E. V. Taylor, Harley Knoles and Ray Psysioc."

JONES TO DO FREE LANCE WORK.

Marc Edmund Jones has resigned from the World and Equitable Film Corporations and will return to script writing as a free lance. His work will be handled entirely through the Authors' Associated Agency in the Longacre Building, New York City.

Mr. Jones returns to his typewriter after a nearly a year's absence, his work with the Equitable and World being entirely technical and executive in character. Originally associated with the Equitable at its inception as scenario editor, he resigned and was succeeded by Russell E. Smith, but later was persuaded to return as manager of the film department.

Previously Mr. Jones locked up his typewriter to become a director, and, on another occasion studio manager, making good in both instances. The solidity of his reputation as a writer is demonstrated by his ability to return to the free lance field after the long absence in spite of the present kaledioscopic condition of picture productions.

ADOLPH ZUKOR LEAVES FOR TOUR OF COUNTRY.

Accepting the invitation of many of the largest exhibitors in the country to visit their theaters, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, left Saturday on the 20th Century on a tour which will embrace every principal city in the United States.

This is the first time that Mr. Zukor has left the Famous Players studios in New York since his visit to the Coast studios of his company before they were closed last spring.

Mr. Zukor's first stop will be Chicago, where he will probably remain for some time after his arrival, making a study of film conditions in that central city which, through its geographical position, most truly reflects screen influences upon the country at large.

Millarde with Kalem

HARRY MILLARDE, one of the best known of screen leading men, but in recent years gaining greater prominence as a director, was added to the Kalem producing staff last week and started on Thursday for the Pacific Coast, where he will join the producing ranks at the rapidly expanding Kalem Glendale and Hollywood studios. Because of his known ability in that line it is probable that Director Millarde will stage comedy subjects.

Prior to entering the silent drama Harry Millarde had a long and successful stage career, including many seasons with Robert Mantell in Shakespearian productions, with Walker Whiteside, Mabel Barrison and Elsie Ryan. He entered the screen world with the Kalem Company three years ago and speedily gained recognition as a leading man. But within the last year and a half he proved his ability as a producer and was soon devoting all his attention to directing, including in his list of productions many of the most successful Kalem subjects.

Harry Millarde.

When Kalem recently decided to devote its entire energies to the production of one and two-reel subjects and temporarily curtailed activities at the Jacksonville studios where Director Millarde was working, the producer decided that his three years of constant work before the camera had earned him a vacation so the past few months have been spent in gaining a long-delayed rest. Back in the harness once more Mr. Millarde is filled with ambitious plans for his work on the Pacific Coast.

Hampton Explains

Promoter of Big Motion Picture Merger Tells What He Has Been Trying to Do—Rowland Talks Sense.

FOR the past several weeks motion picture circles have been stirred deeply by rumors of an impending merger of the principal companies engaged in making and marketing pictures. These rumors led to Ben B. Hampton, one of the officers of the American Tobacco Company, and that company, together with the United Cigar Stores Company, were suspected of being anxious to invest in the picture business. None of these rumors could be substantiated upon diligent inquiry among those said to be interested, but it was learned that Mr. Hampton had been at work on such a project for some months and that he had been given a respectful hearing in various quarters.

Then the daily papers of New York and Chicago took the matter up and connected a number of companies with the rumors. This has impelled Mr. Hampton to come to the surface with the following explanatory letter:

For several months I have been conducting informal discussions with various moving picture manufacturers, looking towards a consolidation of various motion picture interests.

In these discussions, I have represented no corporation or no individual but myself.

So far the matter has reached only the stage of preliminary plans. So many items must be taken into consideration that the project is one that may never materialize.

The Lubin interests are not controlled by P. S. Hill.

Relative to Mary Pickford, I have no statement to make.

The stories of a large merger originated in Chicago. Newspaper men advise me that these stories started with some one connected with a moving picture concern with whom I have had informal discussions.

The newspaper reports brought into the situation the names of a great many concerns with whom I had had no discussions. This is unfair to these concerns.

At no time have my plans contemplated anything like a large consolidation. Six or eight companies—producers and distributors included—were all that had been considered at any time.

My relations with the producers and distributors with whom I have conducted informal discussions have been most pleasant, and from the little I have learned of moving picture conditions, I should say that the industry is in a very flourishing, profitable and satisfactory condition except for the fact that some form of consolidation is undoubtedly needed to prevent over-production with the consequent unfortunate results on players, producers, distributors, exhibitors and authors.

March 31st, 1916. BENJ. B. HAMPTON.

Rowland Laughs at Mergers.

While on the subject of mergers it is well to quote a statement emanating from the president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, Richard A. Rowland, who takes a common sense view of the matter. He says:

"I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I rise to remark that the motion picture industry will not be sewed up into a combine now or any time in the future, because there are elements in the business that defy combination.

"In the first place, motion pictures are not a business in the same way that the making and selling of automobiles and tobacco or farm machinery are businesses. It is an amusement enterprise, rather than a business and its artistic elements are dependent upon newly-created brain products, which must be fresh and different with each succeeding week.

"No amount of capital can control such an enterprise or keep it tied fast. Under present conditions the only possible combine that could hope to succeed would be a theater merger, which would include the majority of picture theaters in the United States. And with this effected, and sewed up, there is nothing to prevent private capital in any city in the land from putting up opposition houses.

"Supposing an enterprising organizer should succeed in getting the majority of the big fellows of motion pictures into a combination and they would all put their studios, laboratories, stars, directors and the entire works into one concern. What could prevent new blood from stepping into the field and, with energy, enthusiasm and capital, putting out pictures that would upset the whole plan and disrupt the combine? We must remember that out of the 100,000,000 of persons in the United States a very small percentage of talent has been drawn upon for picture making. There's plenty of material left and if the need came a formidable rival for any combine could be developed in less time than might be imagined.

"Another reason why there should be no apprehension over a prospective combine is that several very important and very successful elements of the picture field would not enter into it. It is quite possible that millions of dollars in cash might bring a member of the traders to sell and quit, but those now successful and operating on a sound as well as a progressive basis would not have to sell, and if they like the game as well as we do they wouldn't.

"Exhibitors need have no feeling of uncertainty. They will not be frozen out nor will they be at the mercy of any combination.

"In plain United States English, why does any motion picture producer or marketer want to combine, unless he feels that he can't stand the gaff of competition?"

Alice Rinaldo Retained by Horsley

ONE of the leading roles in "The Conscience of John David," a David Horsley production starring Crane Wilbur and scheduled for release April 24 as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, will be played by Miss Alice Rinaldo, a recent acquisition to the David Horsley forces.

When Mr. Horsley engaged Miss Rinaldo he did so with the intention of using her in only one picture—"The Love Liar." Her portrayal of the character allotted to her was so striking and forceful, however, that he did not terminate the engagement when "The Love Liar" was finished, but made provisions for her in the cast of the next Crane Wilbur picture.

Alice Rinaldo.

In "The Conscience of John David" she will play a character described as "The Worldly Woman." It is a part of the vampire type, one which Miss Rinaldo is particularly well fitted to play.

Miss Rinaldo is known best in this country and abroad as a ball room dancer. She was born in San Francisco and took up dancing at an early age. Three years ago, however, she entered motion pictures. Spurred on by a determination to succeed, she decided to perfect herself in the art of acting and went to Paris to study.

Since her return to America, Miss Rinaldo has been engaged with various producing companies on the Coast, among them the New York Motion Picture Company, under whose banner she appeared in the support of George Beban and other stars.

JAMES CRUZE ENGAGED BY METRO.

James Cruze, the widely known and popular screen artist and director, has joined the Metro forces and will make his first appearance on the Metro program in "The Snowbird," a five-part wonderplay starring Mabel Taliaferro, which is being produced by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. Mr. Cruze was happy to join the Metro family for many reasons, not the least of them being the fact that his charming wife, Marguerite Snow, is one of Metro's most prominent stars.

Mr. Cruze has been in motion pictures for more than nine years, and is perhaps best known for his finished performance as the reporter in "The Million Dollar Mystery," a serial produced by the Thanhouser company. Miss Snow was also in this serial, and it was while both were engaged by the Thanhouser company that a romance in real life began which resulted in their marriage.

V-L-S-E HOUSE ORGAN FOR KANSAS CONVENTION

E. R. Pearson, manager of the V-L-S-E branch office at Kansas City, is a strong believer in journalistic enterprise, and the two-day convention held under date of March 20 and 21 at Wichita, by the Kansas members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, gave him just the opportunity he wanted to make a practical demonstration of his theory.

In conjunction with his chief publicity expert—L. J. Scott—Mr. Pearson opened up temporarily publishing headquarters at Wichita, from which point of vantage they issued "extras" of the house organ "The Clansman," dealing with convention news, the transaction of business by the committees, and items of general interest to the visitors.

Managers Respond to Appeals for Fund

Motion Picture Theaters Throughout Country Agree to Give Part of Receipts on May 15 to Actors' Fund.

NORTH, east, south and west are represented in the hearty responses received by Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the National executive committee of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund, in the appeal that has been made that a part of the receipts of motion picture theaters on May 15 be donated to the cause for which the campaign is being conducted.

This is to raise from manufacturers, actors and exhibitors exclusively in the motion picture field $500,000 of the million-dollar permanent endowment for the Actors' Fund of America and the Actors' Home on Staten Island.

Jacksonville Screen Ball for Charity

The Thanhouser Club Gave a Charity Ball at the Hotel Windsor, Saturday, April 1, for Actors' Fund and Children's Home.

ON Saturday, April 1, the Thanhouser Club of Jacksonville, Fla., gave a charity ball at the Hotel Windsor at which Mayor J. E. T. Boden of Jacksonville and Marguerite Courtot led the grand march. The dance was a joint benefit and the proceeds of it are to go to the "Actors Fund of America" and to a local charity, "The Children's Home Society," and patrons of both are in evidence. It was indeed a very brilliant affair.

All the motion picture stars of the companies working in Jacksonville were in attendance, including those from the well known Vim, Gaumont, Thanhouser, Kalem, Famous Players, and other organizations, which happen to be in the city. Some prominent dramatic stars who are spending the winter in the southern part of the state came to Jacksonville for the event.

SELZNICK SEEKS BIG STARS.

Since the organization of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation and the announcement that Lewis J. Selznick, it's president, intends to create a group of similar companies, each named after and headed by a big film star, both Miss Young and Mr. Selznick have been besieged by dozens of the most brilliant stellar lights of the screen, all eager to grasp this opportunity to realize their greatest ambition.

"If I were at liberty to mention names," says Mr. Selznick. "I could give a list of stars who have sought to sign contracts with us that would surprise the whole industry. Mere money is evidently not the only aim of the biggest film stars of the day, for we have been approached by several players willing to sacrifice half their huge salaries in order to be given the chance to head their own producing companies and have an authoritative voice in the production of their pictures. We are negotiating with a number of the established favorites of the profession and will be able to make a definite announcement shortly."

SCENARIO WRITER ELECTED PRESIDENT.

Bob Horner, scenario writer, has been elected president of the United Pen Club, an organization composed of many authors in and about the middle west. At a banquet held March 26 at 4040 Broadway, Chicago, the big surprise of the evening was that Mr. Horner was unanimously elected president. The United Pen Club is a secret organization devoted to helping and protecting its fellow-members, both in and out of the photoplay field. Bob Horner is devoting his time to original manuscripts.

Smalley's Picture Endorsed

Opinion of National Board Concerning Universal's Birth Control Drama Is Not Shared by Dr. Parkhurst and Other Eminent Men.

FOLLOWING the run of the Pavlowa picture at the Globe theater, New York, the Universal Company plans to show another of the ambitious productions made by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley. It is called "Where Are My Children?" and bids fair to become one of the most discussed films of the year, because of the subject treated—birth control and its abuse—and because of the firm stand being taken by the Universal Company in insisting that the picture shall be shown, whatever the attitude of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, formerly the National Board of Censorship.

Lois Weber.

Believing that the Smalleys have produced a really important photoplay from a story by Lucy Payton and Franklin Hall, and that the public should be allowed to judge of its merits, the Universal officials were unwilling to accept the opinion of the National Board as final, when endorsement was refused on the ground that the subject might exert a harmful influence on miscellaneous audiences. President Carl Laemmle, General Manager Joe Brandt and others high in the councils of the Universal, determined to present their case to a committee comprising men of nation-wide fame, as leaders in religious and social affairs. If these men agreed with the verdict of the National Board it was understood that the picture would not be publicly displayed, or, at least, not without radical changes.

Under the direction of Hal Reid a special showing was arranged for March 28, those in attendance being Rabbi Jacob Kohn, Father W. E. Cashin, Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Superior Paulist Father John Hughes and three representatives of the National Board, Dr. Cranston Benton, Dr. William Snow and L. D. McGuire. No alterations had been made in the picture since its rejection by the general committee, yet the opinion of the Universal's guests, not connected with the Board, was unanimously favorable. In the discussion a few changes were suggested, but none that would seriously alter the tone and meaning of the photoplay.

Dr. Parkhurst was especially enthusiastic over the fine dramatic quality of the story, the delicacy displayed in handling a difficult subject and the possible benefits to be derived from calling attention to a dangerous social evil. General Manager Brandt recently received a letter from Dr. Parkhurst reiterating his high opinion of "Where Are My Children?" and expressing a willingness to be of any possible assistance in bringing the picture to the attention of the public. Father Cashin, Rabbi Kohn and Father Hughes, also have advised Mr. Brandt that he may call upon them any time if their endorsement of the production is wanted. It is probable that before the film is released the Universal Company will have the backing of other men whose opinion carries equal weight.

Tyrone Power plays the character of a district attorney, whose wife remains childless. Helen Riaume portrays the wife and Marie Walcamp, is her vain, pleasure-loving friend. Beyond dealing with a subject of vital moment, "Where Are My Children?" is said to be a notable production from an artistic and dramatic standpoint.

MOROSCO ENGAGES JACK NELLSON.

Jack Nellson, the handsome delineator of juvenile characters, has been engaged by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and is now at work on his initial portrayal under this management at its Los Angeles studios.

Screen Club to Hold Actors' Fund Night

Entertainment Will Take Form of Beefsteak Dinner, With Daniel Frohman Guest of Honor.

THE Screen Club announces for the evening of Saturday, April 8, which it denominates Actors' Fund Night, a beefsteak dinner. The fun will begin at 8:30 o'clock, promptly, Billy Quirk says. The guest of honor will be Screener Daniel Frohman, president of the Actors' Fund. The entire proceeds from the sale of tickets, which are $2.50 each, will be given to the fund.

A wide variety of talent is promised for the evening's entertainment. The committee says that details will be given later. Just to start something it says—and it says a lot when it says it—that the appearance of Nat C. Goodwin is assured as the chief speaker of the evening. Members of the club are invited to make their reservations without delay.

Arthur Lang—Expert on Latin-America

ARTHUR LANG, the well-known "foreign attache" of Nicholas Power, is an enthusiast on the subject of the Latin-American market. Mr. Lang, though he speaks English like an Anglo-Saxon, is by descent if not by birth a Latin-American and he knows Latin-America as few other North Americans know it. He has recently contributed several articles to Cine-Mundial, the Spanish edition of the Moving Picture World and to El Mundo Cinematografico, the well-known Spanish motion picture journal published in Barcelona. The theme of all his articles is the opportunity which awaits the enterprising Yankee manufacturer in the Latin republics to the South of us.

Arthur Lang.

It may be doubted whether there is another man who is as thoroughly familiar with the film situation north and south of the Panama canal as Mr. Lang is. He has studied the situation from every conceivable angle, he has absorbed to the last dot on the "i" every bit of literature on the subject and he has a wonderful fund of knowledge based on personal information and first hand observation. It is needless to point out that he speaks the purest Castilian and that he knows the habits, the political institutions, the tastes, the philosophy and withal the psychology of our Latin-American neighbors. His one consuming ambition is to utilize his extraordinary grasp of his subject for the benefit of every American producer who thinks of going into the Latin-American market. He is one of the most highly valued contributors to "Cine-Mundial" which he regards as the ideal connecting link between the North American seller and the South-American buyer.

LOOK OUT FOR ALLEN.

A clever party, answering to the name of Jos. L. Allen, and claiming to be a salesman with the World-Equitable Corporations, is touring the state of New Jersey at the expense of confiding film folks. Allen, if he retains that name two consecutive nights, spent one day last week at Bridgeton. Mrs. J. G. Rosay is short fifteen dollars as a result. Allen arrives in the city, talks films, shows a few World Film letterheads, trills about the big productions past, present and future, and then discovers a check for fifteen dollars—which, if one is gullible enough, will be returned marked "no account."

In the future, World and Equitable traveling salesmen will carry some definite means of identification. Allen is about twenty-two years of age, about five feet seven and one-half inches in height and weighs about 150 pounds.

Hearst Exchange Organization

J. K. Burger Has Been Appointed Manager—Branches in Charge of Well Known Men.

UNUSUAL interest is aroused in the big cities of the country regarding the new type of exchanges, which is to be inaugurated by the Hearst organization. Mr. MacManus gave out the interesting statement that J. K. Burger had been appointed in charge of the exchanges. Inasmuch as the "hue and cry" of the new Hearst motion picture enterprise seems to be service to the exhibitor, Mr. Burger's appointment is particularly significant. It is one thing to want to give service to the exhibitor, but Mr. Burger has prepared his plans to do it.

Exchanges will be opened in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Atlanta and Boston. These, for the reason that a Hearst newspaper is in the city and for the reason that the entire newspaper staff will be part and parcel of the motion picture company. Also Washington, D. C., Philadelphia, St. Louis and Pittsburgh, where important newspaper connections have been established. Each exchange will be complete in itself, absolutely independent and the duplicate of headquarters in the number of men employed and the facilities at their disposal. Later Mr. Burger gave out the names of his exchange managers.

New York will be under the jurisdiction of the well known Joseph S. Engel. Boston is under Frank H. Vine, who has been helpful for many years to exhibitors in his past work with Eclectic, World and the General Film Company.

Chicago is in good hands in the person of John F. Bowman, who has the newspaper idea, which is "Get it done, get it done right and get it done on time." He is known to his local exhibitors for his work on the Chicago Examiner and lately on "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Goddess," etc.

Los Angeles is in the hands of George H. Atwood, one of the pioneers of the film industry, one of its best versed men. He is an old show man and one of the first theatrical men to appreciate the possibilities of motion pictures. He has managed the office of Boston, Albany and Dallas for the General Film Co., and has been in charge of Philadelphia for Pathe. His policy is "Treat the exhibitor on the level."

Atlanta will look to George R. Allison, the original pathfinder of the South, for big feature productions. He is affectionately known to exhibitors south of the Mason-Dixon line. Allison fits into the Hearst organization because he has the newspaper idea, as well as motion picture production, and he will always be on the alert to give his exhibitors an opportunity at publicity.

Philadelphia exchange is under the management of E. W. Sweigert, one of the real hustlers of the industry, known to the field for his work with the Eclectic and General Film.

E. W. Dustin, who heads the St. Louis exchange, has been in the amusement business for eighteen years. He has been the producer, exhibitor, the exchange man and therefore, he can look at all sides of the fence and particularly appreciate the view point of the exhibitor.

The capital city, Washington, D. C., is under the jurisdiction of Fritz B. Wathne, known for his studio knowledge, his acquaintance with newspaper editors in his territory, and his intimate knowledge of home conditions.

B. F. Lyon, in charge of Pittsburgh, is a comparative newcomer in the film industry. But his work for Pathe in reorganizing and building up their Newark, N. J., office, was nothing short of phenomenal. He has been in Pittsburgh but five months and since his arrival he has become the confidant of every Pittsburgh theater man.

The San Francisco office is in charge of H. L. Knappen, one of the real brainy men of the film industry. He was formerly a newspaper man of wide experience. His most recent newspaper work was as editor and advertising manager of the American Photoplay Weekly of Salt Lake City. He was serving in this capacity when he decided to enter the motion picture business. In 1915 he became identified with the Pathe Exchange, Inc., representing that company in Northern California and Nevada, with headquarters in San Francisco. Mr. Knappen made such a showing in the field that he was soon made manager of the Denver Branch for Pathe, later transferred to Atlanta, Ga. He entered the service of the International Film Service, March 13th, and has marshaled his forces in the campaign for business now enthusiastically underway at 280 Golden Gate avenue, in the Coast metropolis. The Hearst policy of securing the best men available will be followed in every department of the picture enterprise.

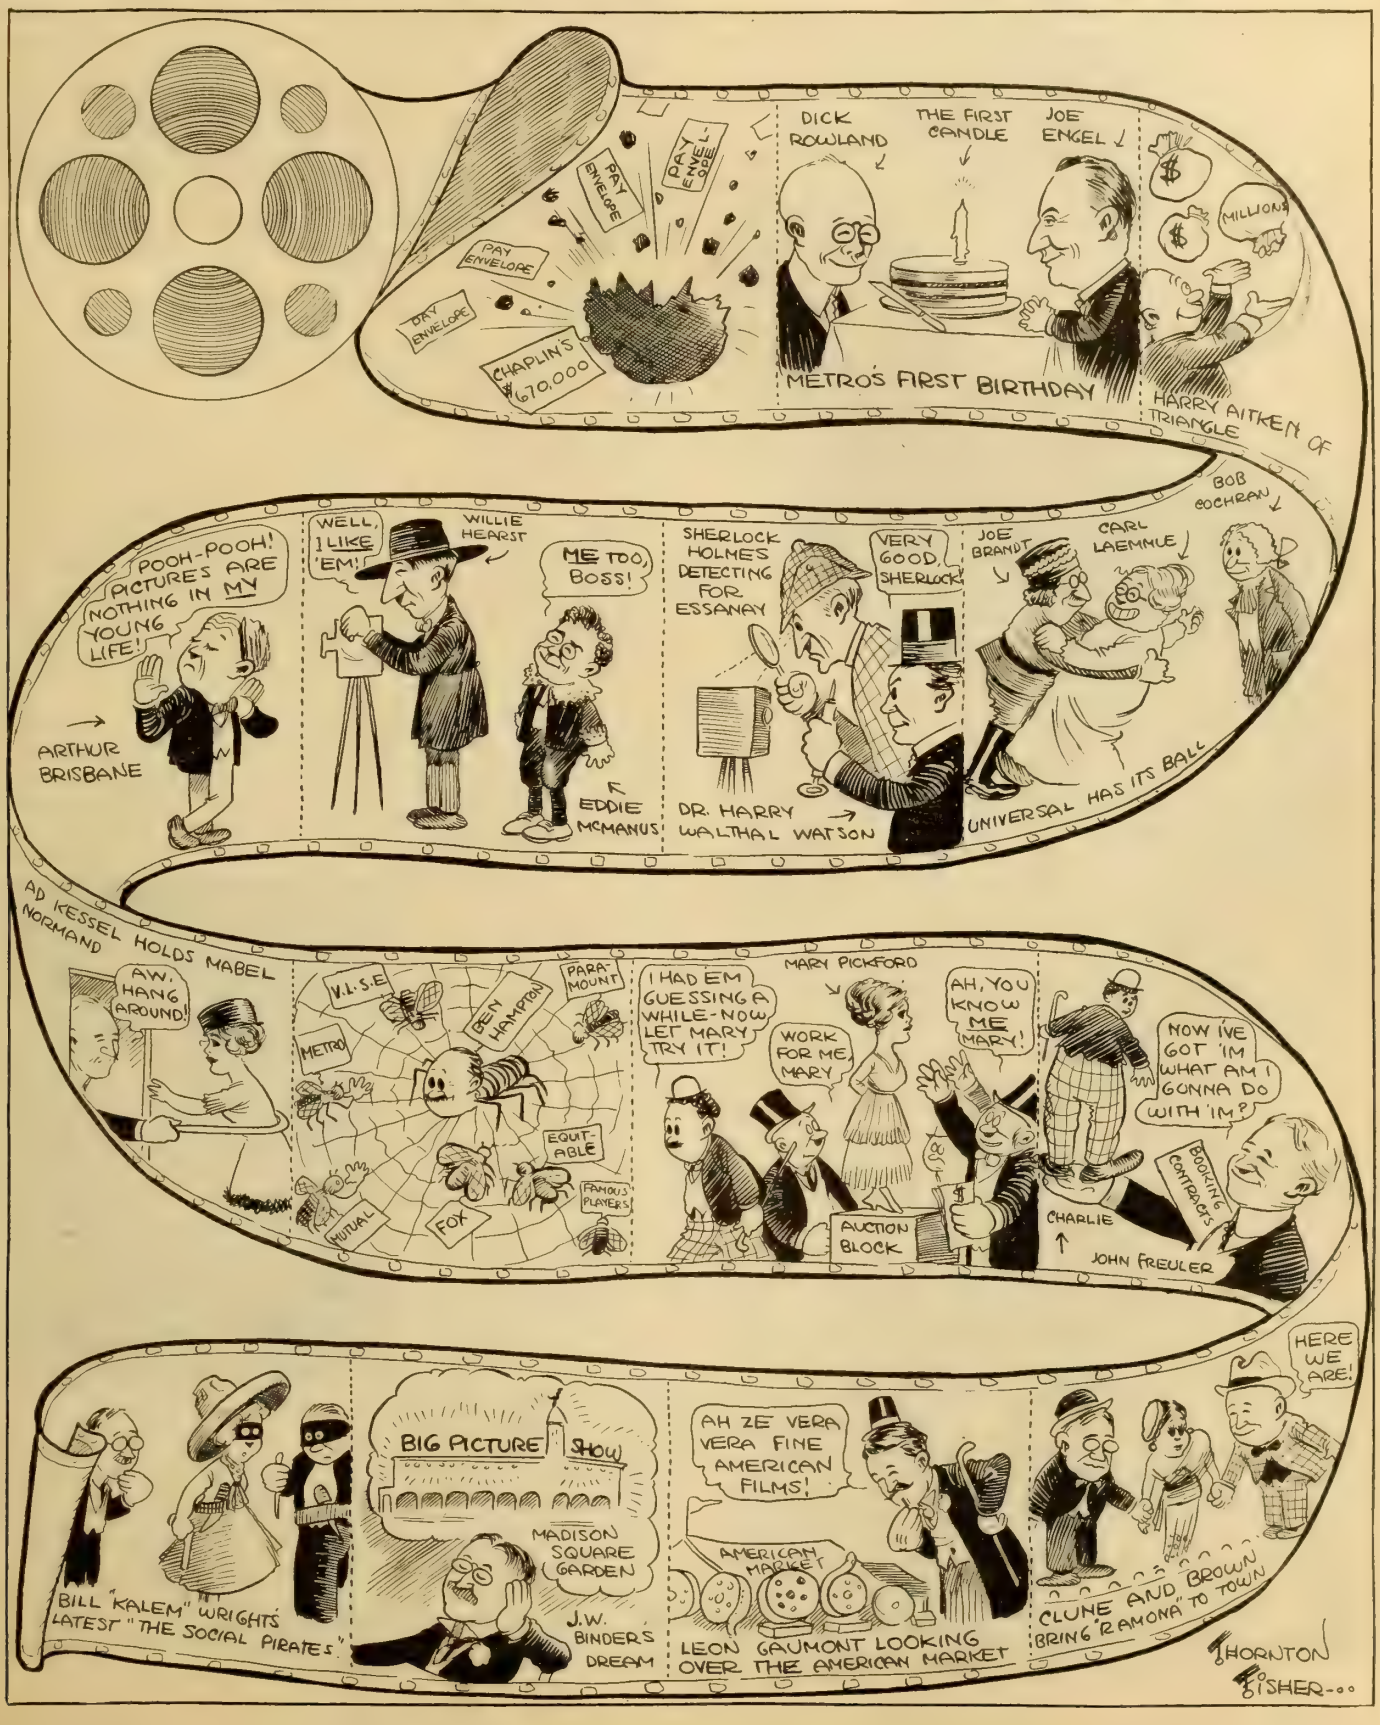
MOVING PICTURE WORLD NEWS REEL for MARCH...



Facts About Jamaica

Interesting Information Concerning That Famous Island of the Sea Which Motion Picture Men Should Know.

J. ALAN TURNER, an experienced motion picture technical man, has just returned from Jamaica, British West Indies, where he has been working with the Herbert Brenon-Fox Company, and favors the Moving Picture World with a careful description of the advantages which are offered in that locality for the production of pictures. Mr. Turner goes into the subject in detail and has gathered his facts carefully in the following article:

J. Alan Turner.

Jamaica is a British colony situated ninety miles south of Cuba and measuring 150 miles in length by forty-four miles in width, and the English language is spoken throughout the island.

Arrangements can be made for passenger transport at $80 per head, including meals for round trip, by the United Fruit Company Line, leaving from New York weekly. Accommodation may be had at the best hotels run on modern lines in Kingston at $10 per week. Several smaller hotels and boarding houses cater to visitors at a lesser charge, giving comfortable accommodation therefor.

The island is traversed from end to end by railroad with central terminus at Kingston (the capital). The roads are splendidly adapted for motor and vehicular traffic. There are several garages in Kingston, and there is always an ample supply of motors for hire at very reasonable prices. Almost any part of the island can be reached by motor in a few hours.

Scenery.

Tropical scenery is here seen in its most varied and luxuriant form, and may be divided into two classes—the Inland Scenery and the Coastal.

The island is of mountainous formation, and from end to end ridges of towering mountains divide up the whole land, forming beautiful valleys and glades in which tropical wild palms and other vegetation flourish. Down the gorges, along which some of the largest rivers flow on their way to the sea, almost any description of desert appearance can be found within a few hours' run from Kingston. Rivers abound all over the island (the name of the island signifies "land of water"). Some of these are navigable for smaller craft, and all of them possess many points of natural beauty along their banks. Tropical trees and vines overhang their course, and make bowers of gorgeous natural formation.

There are natural caves and bridges along and across the courses of the various rivers as well as otherwise, and there are many waterfalls of very picturesque effect.

The entire coastline is fringed with stately cocoanut palms, and there are many beautiful plains stretching from their base line of hills in the interior down to the water front.

Kingston itself is set at the water edge of a horseshoe-shaped and almost completely landlocked bay. The bay is of an extreme length east to west of twelve miles, with a width of three miles, and the outer side of the bay is divided from the ocean by a natural breakwater formed by a narrow strip of land. The waters of the bay are beautifully clear and the bay lends itself admirably to any sea or water scenes. The waters are usually calm in the mornings, but get rougher in the course of the day.

There are in many of the coast towns beautiful stretches of white sands which make very attractive and comfortable bathing spots.

Motor boats are available in Kingston and other towns, and so are sailing yachts.

Kingston is built on a plain that slopes gradually to the sea, and which in area is about 45 square miles, and to the northeast and west of which towering mountains overlook the bay.

A serviceable electric tramway system operates in Kingston, going out into the suburbs for many miles, and in the city itself horse-drawn coaches ply for hire.

Labor Conditions.

Labor rates are as follows:

Carpenters and masons, etc.	per diem,	$1 to $1.25
Seamstresses	" "	50c.
Common laborers	" "	25c. to 50c.
Extra hands for mob scenes:
adults	" "	25c.
children	" "	12c.
Intelligent clerical assistants	" "	$2

The people available for these mob scenes are whites, native blacks, East Indians and others of mixed breeds. There are whole communities of East Indians (natives of India), who live in thatched huts and under conditions exactly similar in regard to their manner of dress, etc., as prevail in India.

Horses and mules to any reasonable number can easily be supplied in the island at moderate charges.

The competency of the laborers mentioned above may be guaged from the fact that the Fox Film Company, who are now engaged in the island producing a great Feature Film with Miss Annette Kellerman as star, employ all native seamstresses in making the thousands of costumes for this feature.

The native workmen skilled and ordinary displayed adaptability for new ideas and intelligence in the execution of their work. The whole of the work incidental to the building of the various scenes was executed by native workmen under my supervision.

In swimming scenes the natives are unexcelled and are at home in the water.

Materials.

Lumber, hardware and other building materials, plaster, etc., are imported and sold at a cost very slightly in excess of their price in the United States and cheaper than any individual company could place similar goods here.

Dry goods, linens, flannels, clothing, etc., can be bought very much cheaper in the various stores in Kingston than they can be purchased in the States.

Every condition exists there for the erection and successful operation of a laboratory for the proper developing of films made in Jamaica, and the proper printing of positive and negative films, and such a laboratory is now in successful operation in Kingston and owned by the Fox Film Company.

There are several moving picture theaters where arrangements can be made for the showing of test films. A picture may be cut and the proper tested negative may be sent to the States to the home laboratories for printing and distribution.

Facilities are afforded by the authorities of the island for the development of the moving picture business in Jamaica, and to this end customs duties are remitted on all goods and supplies incidental to the film business, including materials for construction of scenes and costumes and electrical goods.

The health conditions of the island leave nothing to be desired. Pernicious fevers are unknown, and Europeans and Americans, of whom there are a large number here, find the climate agreeable and healthy.

Al. Ray at Vim Studios

THE latest acquisition to the Vim Comedy Company, releasing every Thursday and Friday on the General Film program, is Al Ray, the young director. He is now hard at work in the Jacksonville plant of this company, and his first release is expected shortly. Although one of the youngest members of the Vim Company, as far as his age is concerned, he is also one of the oldest in experience, for he played in his first picture fifteen years ago as a kid at Biograph, and has been in the theatrical game ever since. Vaudeville and musical comedy have been his chief occupations before he entered the film again for good and at one time he published a magazine on boxing, and managed professional boxers, and yet today he is but little over twenty-two. He started directing about two years ago, and has been at it hot and heavy ever since, and is at present the youngest director in the business. He will appear in juvenile roles as well as characters in the Vim pictures also. It will be the first time in quite a while that he has been seen on the screen as he really is, and ought to be quite a treat for his friends. Since his return from Baltimore, he has received many offers from the leading film concerns, but the Vim proved to be the best, and he accepted it, leaving shortly afterward for their Jacksonville studios. He will be seen in the "Pokes & Jabbs" comedies of this concern, playing opposite pretty Ethel Burton.

Chaplin in "Carmen"

V-L-S-E to Release Essanay's Burlesque Production of the Famous Opera.

THE V-L-S-E announces the immediate release of Essanay's new four-reel production, a burlesque of "Carmen," with the great and only Charley Chaplin as star. At any time the appearance of Chaplin in a new role is something of an event in filmland, but his presentation in a four-reel comedy is such an unusual occurrence that it bids fair to rank as a genuine sensation. This is only the second time that the famous comedian has starred in a four-reel picture, the other occasion being his appearance in "Tilly's Punctured Romance," last year.

Thanks to the open booking policy of the V-L-S-E the distribution of the Chaplin "Carmen" picture will mean that every exhibitor throughout the country will be given an opportunity to obtain this much-desired attraction for his house. There is no doubt as to the eagerness of the motion picture public to view the world's greatest mirth maker in a new bid for popularity, and the fact that the fun will be of an extended type, keeping the favorite disporting himself before the camera for four reels, is a sure guarantee of the feature's success.

Those who have had the good fortune to view the film in private are a unit in declaring it to be the most wildly amusing production yet screened for the purpose of enhancing the gambols of the inimitable Charley. The weirdly burlesque tale of the well known opera furnishes the comedian with a wealth of opportunity to exhibit his peculiar abilities, and the name of "Carmen" is probably destined hereafter to be linked forever with the unforgettable cognomen of C. Chaplin.

BIOGRAPH CLOSES WESTERN STUDIO.

Action Has No Significance, Company Official States, Other Than That It Is Preparing Plans for a New Program.

WORD comes from Los Angeles that the Biograph Company has dismissed its local employes and players. It is said that some of the latter have secured other employment in Los Angeles, while others are on the way east.

When the dispatch was called to the attention of the Biograph Company in New York one of its officials stated that while it was true the studio employes had been dismissed at the same time all executive heads had been retained and that not a bit of scenery had been removed from the Pacific coast plant. In Los Angeles as well as in New York, the company maintains a complete outfit. The lease on the western studio has many months yet to run, and the company holds an option on extension of the present leads.

The action in California, it was said, had no significance other than the company desires time in which carefully to consider and put into operation plans for its new program. Beginning with May 1 and continuing through the summer the company each week will release a one-reel and a two-reel subject alternating with a one-reel and a three-reel.

The official added that the Biograph had taken a new lease on 11 East Fourteenth street, the home of the Biograph prior to its removal to the big establishment in the Bronx. The Fourteenth street property will be devoted to special work.

METRO CONTRIBUTES TO TERCENTENARY.

Bushman and Bayne to Be Starred in Elaborate Production of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

ONE of the most notable contributions to the Shakespearian Tercentenary celebration will be the elaborate screen version of "Romeo and Juliet," which is now being completed by the Metro Pictures Corporation with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the stellar and name parts. The production was begun last August, immediately after Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne arrived in New York from California, and the many scenes have been made from time to time, when these two stars were not engaged in working on other and current Metro subjects.

John W. Noble, who is directing the Bushman-Bayne features, is producing "Romeo and Juliet." He is an enthusiastic student of the Bard of Avon, and the making of this classic for the silent drama is the realization of his highest ambition and the dream of many years. He has devoted every leisure hour he had away from his regular task to working on this production. Days were spent in long automobile trips scouring three states for proper locations. The best costumers and technical experts were employed to fashion the picturesque costumes worn in the production. Several of the costumes are reproductions of those worn by E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe on the speaking stage. Mr. Noble spent many tedious hours to obtain novel lighting effects for the many romantic scenes.

To Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne the making of the pretentious feature has been love's labor, and they believe it will mark the greatest achievement of their career in the silent drama. They have given over their holidays—and many times worked long into the night—that the picture would prove an artistic success. It was produced on a plan wholly devoid of the usual hurry and rush so common in the making of many features. Metro did not spare any effort or expense to insure it being a crowning event, as it was realized that the newer art would be in competition with the older art, and subjected to a critical analysis. Then, too, it was known that the production will attract many persons who are not regular patrons of motion pictures.

OUIDA BERGERE JOINS AMERICAN PLAY COMPANY.

THE AMERICAN PLAY COMPANY announces the establishment of a department for the securing of engagements for actors and actresses, not only in the dramatic field, but also in the moving picture world. As manager of this department the company announces the acquisition of Miss Ouida Bergere, already most favorably known as the successful representative of many stars and prominent players who have figured frequently in films. Under Miss Bergere's management, the Players' Engagement Department will be conducted in such a manner as to avoid criticism. Personal attention to the needs of the player and also of the engaging dramatic or picture producer will be the keynote. That same type of straightforward efficiency as has distinguished the activities of the American Play Co. in the building up of its business as the agent of the world's most famous authors and dramatists, will also be applied to the Engagement Department. Prominent actors and managers have been consulted as to the most equitable and straightforward methods and their suggestions embodied in the new working schedule, and both John W. Rumsey, president of the American Play Co., and Louis Francis Brown, manager of the moving picture department, are to personally aid Miss Bergere in building this department into what such an agency should be, namely, a business-like and dependable representative for members of a profession.

Ouida Bergere.

UNIVERSAL MAKING PREPAREDNESS FILM.

The Universal, working hand in hand with the American Defense Society, will shortly issue a special preparedness release constituting a pictorial debate on the danger which the country incurs by neglecting the upbuilding of its army and navy. The American Defense Society demands forty-eight dreadnoughts, a host of submarines and an army of 250,000 with 2,000,000 reserves. This fact is brought out in the film debate as well as the argument of those opposed to preparedness, who contend, using Germany as an example, that an army makes for war.

GOLDSTEIN OF EXCLUSIVE BACK ON JOB.

After being away from his duties for the past four weeks, owing to a serious illness for which he was operated on by Professor Wiener, the first thing Mr. Goldstein did on his return to the office, was to advise Moe Streimer to buy "The Unwritten Law," regardless of the cost. After competing with others for the said picture, the Exclusive Features, Inc., were finally successful in obtaining this wonderful photoplay. Goldstein's policy is to get the best pictures that can be procured in the open market, irrespective of the cost.

Some Coming Kalems

Sis Hopkins Continues to Shine in One Release Every Week —Daring "Hazards" Promised.

FOUR releases a week, each with a featured headliner, is the Kalem announcement for the coming month's releases on the General Film program. These releases, which include three one-reel comedies and a single-reel "Hazard of Helen," are in addition to "The Social Pirates," released as a special through General Film.

"Romance and Riot," "A Double-Barreled Courtship," and Scene from "Romance and Riot" (Kalem).

"A Lucky Mistake" are three of the Sis Hopkins Comedies announced for early release. In the first-mentioned subject, released April 14, Sis is the center of attraction for the police chief and the police force, both men being bitter rivals in their attempts to pay her attentions. The love affairs of the young lady of the house and an escaped burglar for whom a large reward is offered are responsible for the plot.

Sis finds herself in a peck of trouble in "A Double-Barreled Courtship" through changing places with a pretty visitor to the house where she has just accepted a position. At the completion of "A Lucky Mistake," released April 28, Miss Melville wrote an official of the Kalem Company, "I think you would call this a 'Hazard of Sis' had you seen me running for two Jacksonville blocks after a speeding automobile for one scene in this picture. The director said I looked funny, but I didn't feel that way."

"The Race for a Siding," released April 15, and "The Governor's Special," on April 22, are two coming one-reel "Hazards of Helen" that are said to furnish strong opportunities to that daring star. In the former she races downgrade on a runaway box-car and later leaps to a speeding engine on an adjoining track. Helen Gibson combines the railroad feats with some of the daring horseback riding that has proven so popular in "The Governor's Special."

One of the best of recent Ethel Teare comedies is promised for April 19, with the release of "Their Taking Ways," which finds a Mr. and Mrs. Raffles deftly trimming each other. "Millionaires by Mistake," promised among the coming "Ham and Bud" comedies, finds those comedians the sudden possessors of a million. An elaborate hotel setting in this latter production, with real fountains and hundreds of guests, makes this an unusually lavish one-reel production.

KLEINE MEETS WESTERN REPRESENTATIVES.

George Kleine on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, March 25, 26 and 27, presided over a convention of his western representatives at the Kleine offices in Chicago, 166 North State street, called for the special purpose of considering the forthcoming motion picture novel "Gloria's Romance," from the pen of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, in which Billie Burke is being starred.

Mr. Kleine explained to his audience the tremendous preparations that have been made for the filming of the new novel and cited some of the lavish expenditures that have already been made, for Mr. Kleine frankly declared that it is his ambition to present in "Gloria's Romance" the greatest film production that has ever been given the screen —bar none. Every exchange manager in attendance at the convention reported that he had already been swamped with requests for bookings on the Billie Burke picture though, at the time the various managers left their home offices, the release date (May 22) and title of the picture were still unknown. Now, that both have been announced, all the largest and best theaters in the country will vie with one another in bidding for "first run" showings of the story by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes.

Several of the early chapters of the film were screened for the exchangemen and all were unanimous in the belief that a new high record in motion picture novels has surely been attained.

Falstaff Comedies Force Market

Thanhouser Says Novelty Replaces Violence Profitably— Subjects Have Good Demand.

IT IS now about a year since Edwin Thanhouser launched one of his new ideas in the form of the Falstaff brand of comedy. It was at that time announced that these single reelers would represent the direct line of legitimate comedy, in contrast to the more strenuous action of the comedies in vogue. It was pointed out by Mr. Thanhouser that attention would be given first to story, as that was the most conspicuous missing element of rapid-fire funny films. To this end the genius of Lloyd Lonergan, author of the "Million Dollar Mystery" was put into play, also Phil Lonergan, his able younger brother.

From the very first the big feature of the Falstaff brand was the oddity of the alliterative titles; and they quickly caught on. The character of the subject is quickly proclaimed by such titles as "Perplexing Pickle Puzzle," "Busted But Benevolent," "Oscar, the Oyster Opener," "Pedro, the Punk Poet," "Pansy's Prison Pies," "Film Favorite's Finish," "Clarissa's Charming Calf" and others, all of them funny to the tongue and ear. They caught on quickly and after a few releases the trade realized that Falstaffs were a different kind of comedy.

Then, when the Mutual Exchanges were booking them out at a top rate, the "Wizard of New Rochelle" let fly his heavy artillery. He signed up Riley Chamberlin to appear in Falstaffs exclusively, and soon after that Louise Emerald Bates, the blonde Ziegfeld beauty who is now known as "The Falstaff Girl." Claude Cooper, funmaster, was made an acting director, and Walter Heirs, the fat comedian, was engaged to foil Chamberlin, Claude Cooper then reached out for a fun partner and finally landed Frank E. McNish, the famous old eccentric comedian. While all of this was being done, the Falstaff output was doubled to two a week, and William A. Howell was added to the directing staff.

The original Falstaff director is Arthur Ellery, and his company remained in New Rochelle when it came time to go to Florida. Ellery's grasp of legitimate comedy values makes him easily the most consistent performer in his line, and he gets his results through his very seriousness when he stages the funniest scenes. Frances Keyes is his chief comedy character and her versatility will be amply exhibited in a forthcoming release entitled "Pansy Post, Protean Player." Ellery's methods seem to assure positive results, possibly due to his success as a writer of comic short stories.

Under the present release schedule the two Falstaffs per week have established their following, but it is expected that new additions will be made to the staff which will put them over with still more vim and smash.

"Number 13 West Bound" is the title of an unusual railroad drama soon to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company. Kathlyn Williams is the heroine and is supported by Guy Oliver. It is not generally known but Miss Williams almost lost her life during the production of this picture. She slipped and fell on the track in front of a speeding locomotive. Her presence of mind saved her life for when she saw that the train could not be stopped she rolled down a steep embankment.

GASNIER RETURNS.

L. J. Gasnier, president and general manager of the Astra Film Corporation releasing through Pathe, has returned from Havana, Cuba, where he spent several weeks in connection with the production of a new serial for Pathe.

Universal for Week of April 18

A Well-Blended Program of Drama and Comedy for the Followers of the Big U.

THE Universal program for the week of April 17, 1916, presents a varied assortment of photoplays, all of distinctive type. On Monday, April 17, Cleo Madison is presented in "Her Bitter Cup," a five-reel Red Feather drama for which the poster department is issuing two six-sheets with four-sheet streamers to be used for combination sixteen-sheet or separately; two three sheets and two one-sheets as well as special window cards. On the same day Billie Rhodes and Ray Gallagher appear in a one-reel Nestor comedy.

On Tuesday, April 18, Herbert Rawlinson will be seen with Francelia Billington in "The Best Man's Bride," a two-reel Gold Seal drama. Victor Potel and Jane Bernoudy are a scream in the Imp comedy, "Love Laughs at Dyspepsia," which is released on the same date.

"Royal Love," a three-reel Victor drama, is the subject for April 19. On the same day the L-KO comedy, "A Meeting for a Cheating," with Billie Ritchie and Dan Russell, and No. 16 of the Universal Animated Weekly are released.

The baseball season soon commences and the Big U comedians have put on "Oh! What a Whopper!" a two-reel comedy of the diamond, which will be released on April 20. "The Gambler," a Laemmle drama, with Fred Church and Myrtle Gonzalez, and the Powers split-reel novelty, "The Toyland Villain," and an educational are released on the same date. King Baggot is featured with Edna Hunter in "The Haunted Bell," a two-reel Imp mystery drama which will be released on April 21. Joe Martin, the famous Universal Ape, appears in a Victor drama, "A Strange Confession," and on the same date Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson spill a bagfull of laughs in the Nestor comedy, "Eddie's Night Out."

Harry Carey is starred with Olive Fuller Golden in "The Passing of Hell's Crown," a two-reel Western Bison western drama, which will be released on April 22 together with the Joker comedy, "Just Yet, But Not Quite," with Ernest Shields and Marcia Moore.

On Sunday, April 23, Ben Wilson with Clara Beyers are featured in "His World of Darkness," a three-reel Rex drama. On the same day little Billie Jacobs and Olive Johnson appear in the L-KO comedy, "Little Billy's School Days."

During the week of April 17 the nineteenth episode of the Universal Special feature, "Graft," will be released. Richard Stanton, Jane Novak and Glen White play the leading roles in "The Photo Badger Game," constituting the latest two-reel episode written by Hugh C. Weir and Joe Brandt.

Curacao, Dutch West Indies

An Island Whose People Speak a Language Not Found in the Books.

By John H. Clapham.

Willemstad, Curacao, Dutch West Indies, March 21, 1916.

IF the owners of the Cine Habana had to select a language for the titles used in the films shown here, they would have some troubles of their own. The island is Dutch, there are some Dutch people there, some of the people speak Dutch, some speak Spanish, some English, some Portuguese; but the language best known is called "Papamiento," a mixture of several languages. It will be understood from this that there are some difficulties when ordering the titles for films.

The manager of the Cine Habana, Jacobo Prins, invited me to see the show running when I called at the theater. The films come from an exchange in Caracas, some twenty hours by boat, and the program is generally made up of a variety of brands, including American. A Powers comic had the titles in English, but the most pronounced linguist would have trouble in getting the meaning out of "Bill Jones' Stag Party," or "Me for the Water Wagon." These terms have their equivalents in Spanish, of course, but very few people understand English well enough to know the meaning of such titles.

Mr. Prins would be glad to run such films as "The Million Dollar Mystery," but the cost for a short run would be prohibitive. It is his desire to show the best films, but his location is against any extensive program. The theater is well patronized by all classes.

Vera Pearce a Metro Actress

VERA PEARCE, one of the most striking young models in New York, who has posed for Charles Dana Gibson, Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy, J. Campbell Phillips, Harry Watrous, Herbert A. Morgan, and hosts of other famous artists, and whose pretty face has graced the leading magazines of the country, has answered the call of motion pictures and is now appearing exclusively in Metro productions. So far, Miss Pearce has played but small parts, but she has proved exceedingly gifted in dramatic work for a beginner and with her great beauty as an asset, she should rapidly forge to the front.

Vera Pearce.

Miss Pearce was last seen with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "Man and His Soul," and before that with Julius Steger in "The Blindness of Love." Miss Pearce was first engaged to play the part of a model in a studio scene, and she became so enamored of the new life that she has practically given up posing for artists, and is devoting all her energies to the study of motion picture work.

Miss Pearce was born and reared in Middletown, New York, and while on a visit to her brother in New York City at a New Years' Eve party she attracted the attention of a famous artist, who sought an introduction to her. At first her family was opposed to her posing, but finally gave into her wishes. Within a year she became one of the best known models in New York, with a national reputation. Not only has she been in demand with pen and ink and water color artists, but she has posed for many portrait painters and was the original of many well known pictures in oil. Among them are "The Fairy Tale," by J. Campbell Phillips, which was hung in the National Academy, and "The Age of Wonder," by the same artist, which was shown in the Lotus Club.

BALBOA MAKING NEW SERIES.

"The Grip of Evil" is the name of Balboa's forthcoming photoplay series, in which Jackie Saunders will be seen as the starred attraction. The piece, consisting of fourteen two-reel episodes, will be released by Pathe, which has handled all of the Long Beach "house of serials" big productions such as "Who Pays," "Neal of the Navy" and "The Red Circle."

Harry Harvey is the director in charge of the production. His company includes two new featured film players brought out from New York to support Miss Saunders. They are Roland Bottomley, a leading man of wide experience, and Marie Empress, a "heavy" of renown.

MISSOURI VALLEY FILM COMPANY.

The Missouri Valley Film Company has been incorporated under the laws of Nebraska with a capital stock of $10,000. It has taken over the business of the Missouri Valley Film Company, owned by Charles Strader and R. R. Smith. The principle business of this concern is the handling of educational, social service, public welfare, industrial and religious film service in schools, churches, colleges and Y. M. C. A.

The concern's business extends as far as Great Falls, Mont., west, as far south as the Oklahoma line, as far east as Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Charles Strader is president, M. H. Wright, vice-president, H. B. Werner, secretary, R. R. Smith, treasurer and manager. The office is at Lincoln, Neb.

BACHELLER QUITS MIRROR FILMS.

Irving Bacheller has resigned from the board of directors of the Mirror Films, Inc., as he finds that the literary engagements do not give him the time required for a faithful performance of his duty in that position.

Roscoe Arbuckle a Spendthrift

Builds Two Costly Sets for New Keystone Comedy, "His Wife's Mistake," at Fort Lee.

AN outlay of $33,000 for scenic effects alone is the total piled up by Roscoe Arbuckle at the eastern Triangle-Keystone studios, where he is putting the finishing touches on "His Wife's Mistake," a companion piece to "He Did and He Didn't," and "The Bright Lights." One set represents an office building with its arcade of booths and shops. Arbuckle is the new janitor who is mistaken by a broker's wife for a rich customer. They go to a popular cafe for luncheon, and here is where the star and his technical director, F. G. Schaefer, spent most of their money.

Schaefer, who received his early training under the famous Stanford White, endeavored to reproduce the Moorish Room of the Cafe Boulevard in Paris. He ventures to boast that the Oriental interior with its fountains, balconies, etc., would outclass anything on Broadway if removed and made permanent there. Around the upper balcony is a series of mural paintings 125 feet in length and carrying out a Turkish harem scheme. This balcony required three weeks for the painting. "His Wife's Mistake" is announced for early Triangle release. William Jefferson, Al. St. John and other popular Keystoners will be seen in the cast. Mabel Normand is the only absentee. Her place is taken by Betty Gray.

Virginia Norden Joins Balboa

Stage and Screen Player Will Be Featured in Large Subjects Now in Preparation.

IT IS announced by H. M. Horkheimer that Virginia Norden has departed for the Balboa studios, Long Beach, Cal., where she will be featured in large photoplays now in course of preparation. Mr. Horkheimer expressed himself as much pleased in being able to secure for his firm this well-known player.

Miss Norden was for ten years on the stage before entering upon picture work. She played for three years in stock before coming to New York, where she immediately entered the American Academy of Art for further dramatic study. Her last appearance on the stage was in Guy Bolton's "Rule of Three." Before that for nearly three years she had the lead in Eleanor Gates' "Poor Little Rich Girl," in which Viola Dana was starred.

For the last six months Miss Norden has been at the Vitagraph studio. Here she had prominent roles in two Blue Ribbon subjects, now ready for release—"Peter God" and "The Dawn of a New Day." The new Balboa player has good looks and a statuesque figure. Added to these she possesses brains and ambition—a winning quartet for any actress. As an illustration of her concentration on a character it is said that when on one occasion she had been engaged to play a part written by Cecil and William De Mille in a story that later was not put upon the stage owing to the difference of opinions of the lawyers, Miss Norden went to the East Side of New York City to study sweat-shop types. For two weeks she pursued her investigations. When at the rehearsal she delineated her conception of a girl of the sweat-shops, William De Mille told her she had exactly portrayed the woman he had in mind in writing the story.

Following the signing of the Balboa contract, Miss Norden remained in New York only long enough to stock up on wardrobe and left for the coast on April 1.

DOINGS OF VITAGRAPHERS AT BAY SHORE STUDIO.

Work of making important feature pictures in the fully equipped studio of the Vitagraph Company, located at Bay Shore, Long Island, is progressing in fine form. Director Ralph W. Ince, has started work on a coming Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature with an excellent cast, headed by Miss Lucille Lee Stewart and Huntly Gordon. This production promises to surpass the high standard already set by this successful director. Many of the sets in this feature will be noticeable for their excellence in architectural construction.

Edward Montagne's latest effort in comedy is being filmed as another of the "Freddy Series." William Dangman is seen in the lead which is fittingly directed by Frank Currier. George O'Donnell plays a good part which just lacks the name of "slap-stick comedy." However, he does it in his usual manner which is always a laugh-producer.

ANTONIO MORENO DENIES KNOWLEDGE OF GIRL'S DISAPPEARANCE.

The reports of the disappearance of Ethel Oakes of San Francisco a week ago with a Miss Soto, who claimed to be a sister of one Antonio Moreno, said to be a moving picture actor in New York, have gained currency in local moving picture circles, and have displeased the friends of Antonio M. Moreno, the prominent Vitagraph star. Antonio M. Moreno has requested that it be made known for the benefit of his friends that the person mentioned in the reports is no one he knows anything about. The person is an impostor, as there have been several criminals of late assuming that name and operating in various parts of the country. Mr. Moreno has not been in San Francisco and has no sister who has been there. He knows of no one who answers the description of Miss Soto.

MEETING OF UNITED FILM SERVICE MANAGERS.

The branch and district managers of the United Film Service met in Albany a few days ago to have their quarterly get-together meeting in order that they might talk over the many little details that are not feasibly written about, and it is also the custom of the energetic president and treasurer of the corporation, Fred B. Murphy, to infuse some of his own dynamic force into these meetings, thereby enthusing the force to greater effort. As may be judged by the photograph below it was not a painful operation, and any one who knows the genial Fred Murphy would not suspect him of inflicting pain to his own. One may judge the worth of this method by the fact that the United is now the biggest independent film service in New York and New England, their territory embracing that district except Greater New York City. Their capacity is twelve reels of new subjects each week, though they invade the open market for all the independent films they desire.

Vitagraphs for Week of April 10

Edna May in Seven-Part Blue Ribbon Heads a Goodly List of Releases.

EDNA MAY, the former "Belle of New York," in the seven-part special Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "Salvation Joan," heads a list of representative Vitagraph photoplays. "Mr. Jack's Hat and the Cat," the latest of the one-part comedies of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack" series, featuring Frank Daniels, now being released through the V-L-S-E; a single-reel comedy-drama, "The Hoyden"; "Susie, the Sleuth," another thousand feet of laughs, and the three-part dramatic Broadway Star Feature, "The Other Way," make up a well-balanced program.

In "Salvation Joan" Edna May plays the part of Joan Crawford, a wealthy and beautiful woman who gives much of her time and efforts for the relief and reformation of the people of the underworld. As a Salvation Army lass she accomplishes great work. Harry T. Morey plays opposite Miss May. The remainder of the cast is made up of a selection of Vitagraph favorites, including L. Rogers Lytton, Dorothy Kelly, Donald Hall and Bobby Connelly. This seven-part masterpiece will be released on Monday, April 10, through the V-L-S-E. It is an original plot by Marguerite Bertsch and was filmed under the direction of Wilfrid North.

Another V-L-S-E release on April 10 is "Mr. Jack's Hat and the Cat," in which Frank Daniels has the time of his life in his effort to lose his wife's pet cat. In this "escapade" Mr. Daniels is supported by Rose E. Tapley. C. Jay Williams produced this adventure, which comes from the pen of Ross D. Whytock.

"The Hoyden" is a one-part comedy-drama, also released April 10, in which Mary Anderson and Webster Campbell, supported by Otto Beninger and Edith Reeves, portray a story of every-day life and show the trials and tribulations experienced by two young girls in their struggle for existence. Dave Smith directed the action of this story by William E. Wing.

Kenneth S. Webb is the author of "Susie the Sleuth," a single-reel comedy, listed for April 14, in which Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno furnish many funny situations. George D. Baker directed.

On April 15 the Western Division of the Vitagraph Company gives us a three-part dramatic Broadway Star Feature, "The Other Way," of which Fred W. Hiller is author and William Wolbert producer. Mary Anderson and Webster Campbell are supported by Corrine Griffith, Anne Schaefer, Otto Lederer and F. W. Hiller.

Roth to Build Theater

San Francisco Exhibitor Making Tour of Country for Ideas —Brings Architect with Him.

Eugene Roth, of the Portola theater, San Francisco, is making a tour of the middle west and east, inspecting theaters en route, with the intention of acquainting himself with the latest innovations of the most representative theaters in the country, for a new house which he proposes to build at the Golden Gate. He is accompanied by a Californian architect, who will formulate plans for the construction of the theater, in which will be incorporated all the best features of the houses viewed by the pair during their journey.

"This is one case in which no expense will be spared to furnish screen patrons with a theater of the latest design, equipped with up-to-date improvements," said Mr. Roth, when discussing his plans. "It will be a motion picture palace de luxe in every sense of the phrase. It is my intention to provide seating accommodation for 3,500 people, and by the time all my arrangements are completed, a structure will be under way that will be absolutely the last word in the line of show places for the silent drama.

"We have let nothing escape us on the trip likely to prove of suggestive value, and I confidently believe that the result of our joint experience will astonish the screen world. I shall continue to exhibit V-L-S-E features in the new house as in the old. In my opinion the open booking policy of the company has proved the greatest boon ever conferred upon exhibitors. It enables the showman to maintain a standard of uniform excellence at a minimum of cost, which cannot be obtained under the old flat rate system."

Mlle. Valkyrien

MLLE. VALKYRIEN, formerly star of the Royal Danish ballet and Great Northern Film Company, has just finuished work in "Hidden Valley," a five-reel feature, an African drama, for the Thanhouser company. In the picture, which was photographed in Jacksonville, Fla., Mlle. Valkyrien portrays the leading role, that of the only white woman in the story. Chief in her support is Boyd Marshall. A majority of the African scenes were taken in the palmetto jungles near East Mayport, Fla. Edwin Thanhouser, who dropped into Jacksonville just as the picture was nearing completion, declared his belief after seeing the film on the screen that "Hidden Valley" will be a famous picture.

Mlle. Valkyrien.

During his visit to the south it is said Mr. Thanhouser offered Mlle. Valkyrien a two-year contract, and according to word from Jacksonville, it is more than likely the return of the player to New Rochelle in May will be followed by an acceptance. Mlle. Valkyrien is already at work on another five-part feature for the Mutual program, "The Image Maker of Thebes," in which her great talent for classic portrayal will have full play. The subject opens two thousand years B. C., and finishes on the piazza of a Florida hotel.

The stage name of the player is taken from the title given her by the King of Denmark—"Valkyrien, Year of 1914"—as the result of her selection from representatives of every community as the woman best typifying the beauty and racial characteristics of the legendary Danes.

CLEARING THE WAY FOR BILLIE BURKE.

George Kleine Presides at a Conference of His Branch Managers on the Exploitation of "Gloria's Romance."

GEORGE KLEINE arrived in the city Saturday, March 25, and returned to New York the following Tuesday. The chief object of his visit was to preside at a conference of his branch managers in the middle west and from other points, during which the pre-service bookings and the general release of "Gloria's Romance," the moving picture novel in which Billie Burke and her all-star associates appear in the various characters, were considered and discussed.

The pre-service bookings will be made with houses of large seating capacity throughout the country, ranging from about 1,000 seats and up, beginning the weeks of May 8 and May 15. In these larger houses each chapter, or episode, of the moving picture novel will be shown for a period of from four days to one week, the latter period being the usual length of the run of one chapter. The entire pre-service bookings will, therefore, as a rule, cover a period of 20 consecutive weeks. The general release of "Gloria's Romance" will be made on Monday, May 22.

During the conference much emphasis was laid on the fact that every chapter of this moving picture novel will be a separate feature film, and not the mere release of an episode of a serial film. This follows from the fact that the production of each chapter has been made distinctly on the feature plan, not so far as mere footage is concerned, but in the high quality aimed at and secured through the efforts of an exceptional cast of the greatest artists, and by an unlimited outlay on costumes, settings and all the other accessories that combine to form a perfect atmosphere for Rupert Hughes' novel.

Each chapter will, therefore, be exploited as a feature subject, and every exhibitor who books it will treat it as a feature subject. And—it might also be said—everyone who sees it will look upon it as a feature subject.

Numerous applications and bids concerning "Gloria's Romance" are pouring into the George Kleine's offices throughout the country, I have been told. Indeed, every branch manager I talked with was enthused over the prospects, and each firmly believes that this moving picture novel will be the precedent that will fix the standard for a long time to come.

The branch managers and others present at the conference were: B. T. Hardcastle, Atlanta; James Sheldon, New York; Merle E. Smith, supervisor of all branch offices, New York; W. H. Jenner, Chicago; H. A. Bugle, Cincinnati; W. E. Condell, Dallas; H. H. Buckwalter, Denver; Frank Rutledge, Detroit; A. Melvin, Kansas City, Mo.; C. M. Thall, Minneapolis; I. T. Dodge, Seattle; W. O. Edmunds, district manager of the Pacific Coast, formerly branch manager at Kansas City, Mo.; I. Rosenberg, Richard Fox and Harry Wellington, Chicago, salesmen; Frank L. Hough, general manager of the Kleine Optical Co., and Paul Kuhn, of the Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Co., Chicago.

Exhibitors! What Have You Done Against the Passage of the National Censorship Bill?

Max Schwartz, general manager of the Chicago Cinematograph Co., which controls a circuit of moving picture theaters in this city, has taken an active part in combating the National Censorship Bill that might well be imitated by exhibitors all over the country.

If every owner of a moving picture theater would write his congressman, or even sign a petition to his congressman, against the passage of this bill, the combined effect would be enormous on the side of pictures.

Mr. Schwartz wrote to his congressman, Adolph J. Sabath, at Washington, and his letter makes so many intelligent points against the passage of the bill that it is here given space:

Being a voter in your district for the last twelve years, I wish to voice my sentiments against the National Censorship Bill. As I understand it, this measure, if passed, would subject every great producer to the criticism and caprices of five censors. Whether these censors are men of great intelligence or men of no intelligence, in my opinion there are no five men in the world who are capable of saying what the American people should see and what they should not see.

Motion pictures are a new art and a complicated system of censorship is growing round them. There is no particular reason for censoring motion pictures more than anything else, except that they are new and their unsettled status gives the censorious instinct a chance to assert itself. Crime of all sorts is constantly described in print that is within the reach of any literate child possessing a penny.

There is no more need of censorship for motion pictures than there is for censoring newspapers.

The motion picture business is not an outlaw business; it should be allowed the same freedom that is allowed the newspapers of today. There are ample provisions for punishing those who release improper pictures, and this may be amended and made as strict as can be, without offending any motion picture producer of good standing.

We exhibitors are business men enough to accept or reject any picture that would offend the morals of our patrons, and I think that a man having all of his money invested in a motion picture theater which is making him a livelihood would be a very poor business man to show a picture in his theater that would send his patrons out in a bad humor.

Trusting you have studied the situation over carefully, and that when the time comes you will vote against the bill, and give us struggling exhibitors in Chicago a chance to make a living, I am, etc.

Congressman Sabath made the following reply:

I have received your communication expressing your opposition to the National Censorship Bill. Your statements as set forth appear to be valid ones and I assure you that this matter will receive my most careful and earnest consideration.

Mr. Schwartz has made this National Censorship Bill his personal business, for it threatens his investment and his livelihood. How many of you, exhibitors, have done this; or, rather, how many of you have not done it?

Don't you think it is time to act a little late than not at all? You will need every ounce of influence that you can possibly exercise to overthrow this attempt to block the progress of the great industry on which you depend. Permit this encroachment on your liberties and it will soon be followed by others. At least show a fighting spirit and save yourselves from the charge of being disinterested as to whether you shall be slaves or not.

Come out fearlessly at once for freedom of moving pictures, as your forbears have done for freedom of the press, freedom of speech and freedom in religion.

Moving Pictures Now the Chief Entertainment in Paris.

A recent cable dispatch to the Chicago Journal from Paris states that 226 places of entertainment—theaters, cinematographs, music halls and cabarets—are now running in Paris, as against 190 on Jan. 1, 1915. This number includes practically all the theaters of Paris and the opera, whose performances are, however, only intermittent matinees. No elaborate productions are contemplated until circumstances radically change.

Of the larger theaters the Comedie Francaise is the only one now playing every evening; the others give from four to five performances per week, while the smaller theaters of the different quarters give three to four performances.

The moving picture shows are running far ahead of the theaters in popularity and total attendance.

During the month of December last the number of spectators in the theaters was 805,765, while during the same month 1,604,519 persons witnessed cinematograph performances. As compared with the preceding year, the increase in the number of theatrical audiences was about 530,000, while the increase in attendance at moving picture shows was 800,000.

The greater popularity of moving picture shows is attributed largely to the interesting war films that are shown each week. American police films have also had a remarkable vogue during the season.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Director Frank Beal arrived in Chicago last week from Selig's Pacific Coast studios and will shortly take charge of the production of "The Birth of Indiana," a spectacular historical production which the Selig Polyscope Co. will produce in co-operation with prominent men of Indiana, including the Governor of the State. Gilson Willets wrote the story of the big historical film, and the committee of prominent Indiana men who read it are much pleased with its scope and with its inclusive attention to all the important historical incidents in the history of the state.

I. Van Ronkel, manager of the Chicago branch of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has informed this office that he has been obliged to double his office floor space in order to meet the increased business demand for the Bluebird product. The offices are at 109 North Dearborn street, and include one of the largest exhibition rooms in Chicago, accommodating nearly 200 people. I. R. Parnass, recently with the World Film Corporation, C. H. Miller, formerly of the Central Film Co., and P. Dunas, formerly connected with V-L-S-E, Inc., are now on the Bluebird roster of salesmen.

Eugene H. Roth, manager of the Portola theater, San Francisco, and interested in a chain of theaters there, stopped over in this city Monday, March 27, on his way to New York City. Mr. Roth was accompanied by M. V. Politeo, of the firm of Cunningham & Politeo, architects, in San Francisco. This firm has been awarded the contract for the building of Mr. Roth's new theater, at Fourth and Market streets, that city. This is one of the best sites in San Francisco, being in the old Phelan Building, one of the busiest business centers in the city. The ground is 100 by 170 feet, and it alone cost $1,250,000. Mr. Roth assured me that this theater when completed will be one of the very finest and largest devoted to pictures in the United States. It will seat 3,246 people. Mr. Roth informed me that business was extraordinarily good at the Portola.

Moving pictures showing the complete operations of the plant of the North American Pulp & Paper Co., at Chicoutimi, Canada, formed the feature of the big banquet recently given at the Bellevue-Stratford, Philadelphia, to J. E. A. Dubuc, by Chandler & Co., Inc. These pictures give every detail of paper manufacturing, from the cutting of the trees from which the pulp is made to the finished newspaper in the hands of a reader. These pictures were made by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., of this city. President Rothacker also informs me that a prominent feature of the recent entertainment of the Chicago Advertising Association was the presentation of moving pictures made by his company for the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., of New Haven, Conn., and for the H. J. Heinz Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., in which the former pictures illustrate fancy shooting with rifle, pistol and shotgun, and also educational scenes of the big Winchester plant. The Heinz pictures, of course, show how the famous "57" varieties are manufactured.

The following bills have been announced at the prominent "Loop" theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday or Monday, April 2 and 3:

Colonial: The Fine Arts film, "The Good Bad Man," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, and a Keystone comedy, "Stork's Delivery"; also the Colonial educational film.

Studebaker: Lenore Ulrich in "The Heart of Paula," a Pallas-Paramount feature; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a Metro comedy, "Number One"; also Burton Holmes travelogues and the Hearst-Vitagraph Weekly.

Ziegfeld: Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in Ralph D. Paine's military story "The Wall Between," a Quality picture, and "Dollars and the Woman," a V-L-S-E photodrama by Lubin, in which Tom Moore and Ethel Clayton are the stars.

Strand: Lillian Gish in the Fine Arts feature "Sold for Marriage," the Nestor comedy "How Times Do Change" and George Kleine's "Film Jaunts."

La Salle: Blanche Sweet in "The Sower," a Lasky feature, a Harry Watson comedy by George Kleine, and Brady's Cartoons by Paramount.

Wm. K. Ziegfeld, president of the Ziegfeld Film Co., was arrested in New York City Saturday, March 25, on the complaint of Miss Izora J. Deady, who charges him with having obtained $500 from her on false pretenses. The warrant charges Ziegfeld with operating a confidence game, the details of which were given in my last letter.

Corporation Counsel Ettelson authorized the issuance of a permit last week for the erection of a moving picture theater at W. Grand and N. Kenton avenues, in opposition to the contention of officials of Siani Social Center, who held that the permit should not be issued on the ground that the theater was within 200 feet of the buildings of the social center. Mr. Ettelson in his opinion held that the rule applied only to the synagogue, as provided by a city ordinance, and that the distance from the synagogue to the site of the proposed theater was more than 200 feet.

The owners of the Hyde Park theater have filed a second petition for a writ of mandamus in the Circuit Court to compel the city to issue a permit for the re-opening of that house. The petition denies that the theater is within the prohibited radius.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse has signed with the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., and left for Universal City Thursday evening, March 30. She will appear in a new seiral for Universal at the outset of her year's contract. Miss Stonehouse was long connected with Essanay and has a large following among the picture fans in the country. She has the best wishes of Essanay and her late colleagues, and of many friends in this city.

Hugh Coogan, known by the sobriquet of "Ham," and said to be a member of the Chicago Moving Picture Machine Operators, Local No. 110, I. A. T. S. E., was shot three times and killed on Sunday night, March 26, in this city. Three men passing in an automobile opened fire on Coogan at Justine and Fifty-first streets, and at the time of writing Edward "Spike" O'Donnell, a contractor, living at 2448 W. Forty-seventh street, has been charged with the murder. Political trouble and a conflict between the two locals of Chicago moving picture operators are said to be the cause of the fatal shooting. The police scoff at the statement that politics had anything to do with the murder. They declare that O'Donnell is a labor slugger and that the killing was the outgrowth of the rivalry between the two warring unions.

At a recent meeting of a sub-committee of the judiciary committee of the city council of Chicago, while the members were discussing the city ordinance, which forbids moving pictures and other amusement houses operating within 200 feet of schools, churches and hospitals, it was pointed out that an ordinance recently passed allowed moving picture shows both in schools and churches. This discovery evoked the following statement from Alderman John Dempsey, one of the members of the sub-committee:

"We are spending our time foolishly. We have two ordinances that conflict. Theater owners may designate their places as churches and show pictures despite one of the laws."

AS TO GENUINE NAPOLEON AND HIS LITTLE HIP.

During the past few weeks the notice of the E. and R. Jungle Film Company has been called to an act now circulating in small time vaudeville, headlining Napoleon, a chimpanzee, and Little Hip, an elephant. The company wishes to state that these animals have nothing whatsoever to do with the comedies produced by E. and R. featuring Napoleon the Great and Sally. The chimpanzee acting in these pictures is the original Napoleon the Great, while the original Little Hip, once in possession of the owners of the film company, died in Australia in 1915.

This announcement is made because several state rights holders and exhibitors complained against the supposed practice of the E. and R. Jungle Film Company of exhibiting Napoleon on the stage in opposition to his appearance in the pictures.

CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME.

That admirable doctrine "charity begins at home" was never better exemplified than in the mammoth motion picture campaign for the Actors Fund of America now sweeping the country. The personal contributions of the people of the films are proving most gratifying to Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the committee which undertook to collect no less a sum than $500,000 in fifteen weeks. They range from Mary Pickford's $2,000 Hippodrome check downward to gifts from the smallest salaried screen actors and actresses. Stimulated thus, it would seem that the public will respond materially in this most commendable undertaking—the establishing of a million dollar endowment of the Actors Fund and Home on Staten Island.

Only six weeks of the campaign remain, but its successful termination seems assured. With sufficient contributions from the public which will come strongest in the last few days of the collection, there will be no question of the raising of the full amount.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

PASS ORDINANCE FOR FILM COMMISSIONER.

City Council Abolishes Local Board of Censors and Substitutes Single Film Commissioner.

BY unanimous vote Wednesday morning this week the Los Angeles City Council passed the new motion picture ordinance as recommended by the Public Welfare Committee and which creates the position of a single film commissioner in place of the old board.

The ordinance was passed over the protests of the Church Federation of Los Angeles through its secretary, Rev. E. Guy Talbott, who at the session of the council declared that the Los Angeles City Council is in danger of becoming known as the "programming council," and as the film ordinance had been programmed, he said, he did not see that there was any reason to talk further about it.

"We protested in this matter on behalf of the democratic citizenship of Los Angeles," declared Mr. Talbott. Councilman Topham took exception to the inference cast against the council. The church federation wanted a board of appeal provided in the ordinance.

Councilwoman Lindsey and Councilman Langdon spoke in favor of the ordinance as a good compromise.

The new ordinance creates a film commissioner at $2,100 per year.

Prohibits the exhibition of any motion picture film "which pictures or illustrates the human figure is such detail as to offend public morality or decency."

Prohibits pictures or illustrations "of any murder, suicide, robbery, holdup, stabbing or beating of any human being when such act is shown in gruesome detail or in a revolting manner or in any manner objectionable to the moral sense."

Prohibits loaning, sale, gift or exhibition of any film as above described.

Prohibits exhibition of any film from which eliminations ordered by the national board of censors in New York until such eliminations are made in Los Angeles.

Compels proper lighting of motion picture theaters.

Provides that the penalty for each violation shall be a fine not exceeding $500 or 180 days in the city jail or both fine and imprisonment.

The new ordinance will go into effect the 1st of May

George Bronson Howard Visits Kalem.

George Bronson Howard, author of the "Social Pirate" series, visited the Kalem studios to see how his "Social Pirates" are sailing along. He was much pleased with the "course" they are taking under the "Captaincy" of Managing Director James W. Horne and says that it is clear sailing to "Treasure Island" for the exhibitors.

The eighth episode, entitled "Sauce for the Gander," is now being produced with a cast of players, which includes Frank Jonasson, Thomas G. Lingham, Paul C. Hurst, Edward Clisbee, Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby.

Weather conditions have been rather unfavorable for the "Pirates" trip north to San Francisco and Seattle, but they expect to be off in about two weeks for the purpose of producing the story entitled "For the Service of the State." It was necessary to charter a steamer for this production and the company has also been fortunate enough to secure as locations, the Mare Island Navy yard and the U. S. Army headquarters at the Presidio in San Francisco.

At the Hollywood Kalem plant the Ham and Bud, Ethel Teare and Hazards of Helen companies are busy.

Harry Edwards, who recently joined Kalem, has just completed the production of a one-reel comedy for the "Ham Comedies" release. Lloyd V. Hamilton's life hangs in a balance while he teeters on the very edge of a cliff that drops to a depth of five hundred feet. After the first scene had been safely made Mr. Hamilton was told that the following scene would be almost the same action, but to add variation another member of the company would gently push him in the face as he balanced on the edge of the precipice. The "other member" was Bud, and it lookd to Ham as though all scores for past treatment of the former were to be scored out with one "gentle push." The scenes were made successfully and the two cameras caught them, but upon completion Mr. Hamilton stated emphatically that if they were not good there would be no retakes. As the company were leaving the location a bystander volunteered the information that it was at the same spot at which Mr. Hamilton had been working that a year ago an automobile with five people had gone over the cliff.

Bill Beaudine directing the Ethel Teare company, has completed a very funny picture in which an aeroplane plays a "highly" important part. Jack McDermott makes a flight with aviator Silas Christopherson.

Helen Rose Gibson, the girl who can drive a locomotive as well as most engineers and whose thrilling chases on motorcycles and fast motor boats are well known on the screen, has purchased a new touring car. The machine is a fast one and bets are in order as to just how long the speed law is going to be kept.

Kalem will literally be "on the map" after this week. The new stop on the Salt Lake Railroad at which an up-to-date depot has been built espcially for the filming of scenes for "The Hazards of Helen" series, produced by James Davis will fulfill all the requirements of a city depot, from which train orders can be issued, freight shipped and the general business of a station carried on. This will be the first depot listed as a regular stop with any railroad company to be used for pictures exclusively.

For a new picture this company built a parlor car "interior" on the new station platform.

The new station will be known as "Kalem" and the building will be so arranged that interiors for freight rooms, telegrapher's office and general offices can be photographed and will remain permanent settings.

Lasky's Directors Busy.

This has been a most busy week at the big Paramount plant. The studio, which started in a barn on a small corner lot, with a two by four stage, and which now occupies a full gigantic block, is teeming with life and activity.

James Young, who is handling Mae Murray in her production of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" had to take a rain storm scene the other day, and as J. Pluvius was not on the job, the rain had to be supplied from sprinkling carts. The next day when the entire Lasky stage was set for a huge ball room scene in the same production, it started raining at nine o'clock and continued all day.

Mr. Young next will direct Blanche Sweet in a new photo drama written especially for her by Beatrice de Mille, the brilliant mother of Cecil B. and William C. DeMille.

George H. Melford, Lasky Company director, will shortly start work on a new scenario by Willard Mack, in which Fannie Ward and Jack Dean will play the leads. The title of the picture has not yet been settled upon. "The Love Mask," with Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgley, has been connected.

Blanche Sweet immediately upon the completion of "The Sowers" hied herself to her native heath, Chicago, to spend her vacation with her grandmother.

He Who Returned Is Now Civilized.

This week Thomas H. Ince has changed "He Who Returned" to "Civilization." This was done following the conclusion that the former title is misleading and ambiguous, while the title "Civilization," satirical as it is, unmistakably conveys the thought behind the production.

For more than six weeks, Ince has been debating whether to give the "city of films" preference of viewing his masterwork before New York and he has decided to follow the same course he pursued in respect to the first showings of his two previous multiple-reelers. "An Alien" or "The Sign of the Rose," with George Beban, and "Peggy" with Billie Burke. Both were exhibited to Los Angeles playgoers before being shipped for Eastern presentation.

Which of the several first-class theaters in Los Angeles will show the picture has not been determined. The producer is now negotiating with the respective managements and an agreement is expected to be reached before the middle of April. Plans will then be rushed for the opening performance. At the termination of an indefinite run in Los Angeles, the production will be given its New York presentation.

Several Powers at Universal.

P. A. Powers this week held open house for film manufacturers. He is shown below with a party of visiting headds of firms.

Watching a Comedy Scene at Universal City.

They are, from left to right, P. A. Powers, of the Universal, C. O. Bauman, N. Y. M. P.; J. McKeon, of New York; H. O. Davis, manager of the great film city, and Ad. Kessel, Jr., of the N. Y. M. P.

There is much activity at this plant; new stages going up; more space being cleared, and other improvements going on. Everyone seems busy and since the sun has favored the western filmers with a few weeks of shooting weather they have made the best of it.

Mr. Davis told about little Lena Baskette, the nine-year old dancing marvel, whom Carl Laemmle recently signed for a six-year contract with the Universal Company, and how she was one of the chief entertainers at the recent Actors' Fund Benefit—dance held at Pasadena's fashionable Hotel Huntington. Egyptian and snake dances were the numbers danced by Miss Lena, who is in popular demand at all big social functions, in which, the Los Angeles film colony takes part.

A most unique role has been assigned this nine-year old prodigy at Universal City; it is that of lead opposite Carter De Haven in a coming feature. To fill this role Miss Baskette will wear debutante clothes and high heeled shoes to make her look a girl of seventeen. It was his suggestion that she be thusly cast. Her wonderfully dramatic facial expression, which is like that of a grown-up, inspired Mr. Davis to this decision.

Harry Mestayer to Leave Selig.

Harry Mestayer's contract with the Selig Company terminates on May 1st. When the Holbrook Blinn theater now in course of erection in New York, is completed, Mr. Mestayer will begin a leading engagement there. Meanwhile Mr. Mestayer will be available for screen work, and expects to connect with some film concern as soon as he is at leisure.

This young dramatic star has a list of noted films to his credit, "Stop Thief," "The House of A Thousand Candles," "The Millionaire Baby," "The Dragnet" and many others equally as popular.

Gale Wrecks Fox Village.

A company of Fox players headed by William Farnum and under the direction of Oscar Apfel experienced a new thrill this week while making scenes for a picture at Catalina Island, when a terrific wind storm hit the island.

A launch broke from its mooring, but was saved before it was seriously damaged. The glass bottom rowboat Margreat, had a hole stove in it. The wind moderated a little at 5 o'clock Friday morning. None of the vessels crossing the channel were able to make their regular run Thursday.

The entire village that had been built by the Fox carpenters near Catalina Harbor had been totally wrecked during the storm Thursday night and workmen will be compelled to rebuild the village before the camera man and the actors can start to work.

The sixty actors are quartered at Avalon awaiting the abatement of the wind. The Catalina Flyer, the speed boat chartered to carry them to Catalina Harbor daily, was unable to make the trip Friday, owing to the rough seas prevailing on the west side of the island.

So furious was the wind at Avalon Thursday that the work was stopped on the Tuna club and the Hotel Catalina. It was resumed again Friday morning. The company will for this reason be compelled to prolong their stay on the island.

Now It's Matinee-Tea.

A new fad has started in Los Angeles. It is the Matinee-tea, and last week D. W. Griffith, Hamburger's store and the Majestic theater introduced something new and unusual in photoplay features. The two stars of the Fine Arts company, Norma Talmadge and Seena Owen, now appearing in "Martha's Vindication" at the Majestic, entertained at tea at Hamburger's Cafe Beautiful between the hours of four and five.

The two young actresses are among the most beautiful women appearing in photoplays today and each one was a most charming hostess. The tea is by invitation only.

Every lady entering the Majestic theater from the hours of eleven to four received an invitation to the tea.

Additional interest is attached to the affair by the presence of Marie B. Tiffany, the soprano soloist, who will aid the two girls entertain their guests by rendering a few selections which have helped to make her famous in Southern California.

Tea and photoplays! It is a fad which promises to be popular and D. W. Griffith, Mose Hamburger and Manager Sam Rork of the Majestic theater say that photoplays with tea afterwards will be a pleasing divertisement all summer. And there was a large gathering of female film fans to see the two picture girls at the tea party.

Lands Proposition on Bet.

Ashton Dearholt, a new arrival at the Santa Barbara studios of the American, tells an interesting story of how he happened on the screen.

His engagement was the result of a wager, made by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual. It was in Milwaukee, Wis., the home of both Mr. Dearholt and Mr. Freuler that Dearholt just out of a military college, sought a film engagement from Mr. Freuler. The applicant's persistency finally won from Mr. Freuler the provision that if young Dearholt would earn and pay his own expenses across the country, that when he arrived at Santa Barbara, a place would be waiting for him. Dearholt accepted the provision, found himself a job that day in Milwaukee, worked at it long enough to get the wherewithal to purchase a second hand car of popular make, and with just money enough in his pocket to pay for meals and gasoline, set out across the country for Santa Barbara. He arrived there at the end of two weeks and presented himself at the "Flying A" Studios for the promised "job." A wire from Mr. Freuler told him that he had earned his opportunity to appear on the screen. Mr. Dearholt's ability and good looks have made his position as juvenile lead one of importance to the various "Flying A" directors.

Universal After Villa.

H. O. Davis, who is piloting the big Laemmle plant in the west, when the present war with Mexican bandits opened, immediately detailed two live wire news men to get the story of the battles.

He assigned Beverly Griffith and Gilbert Warrenton, who are now below the border.

Beverly Griffith, who has been assistant to Henry McRae, was detailed to proceed immediately to Mexico and join the United States Army in pursuit of Villa and secure actual photographs of fighting and any other subject which would prove interesting in the Universal's Animated Weekly.

At the border they secured animals and assistants to accompany them to the front. Each man realized when he left Universal City that he had undertaken a hazardous expedition, but they agreed that they would get the photographs or not return to tell the tale. These films of the actual happenings with the U. S. Army and probably the Mexican forces will be released as rapidly as attained by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Warrenton is a crack cameraman and a merry one, and the stuff that comes from the war zone should be punctured with thrills and bullets.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

The Actor's Benefit Fund has been increased by the receipts of a supper-dance, held on the evening of March 22, at the Hotel Huntington in Pasadena.

Charlie Murray, of the Keystone, was charge de affaires, and he did proud for the fraternity of screen artists. The program, called a fifty-thousand dollar cabaret, was a sure enough star one. The first number was Harry Williams in new songs, assisted by Harry McCoy at the piano. William C. DeMille, Lasky's author-director, gave a sketch "In 1999," written by himself, with Frances Ring and Minnette Barrett heading the cast. Mr. DeMille played the other part. The assemblage raved over the dancing of little Lena Baskette, who is with the Universal. Ruth Roland, ever smiling and ever popular star from Balboa, gave a few popular songs, accompanied by Harry McCoy. The comedy for the evening was produced by De Wolf Hopper, who is sojourning at the Fine Arts studio. His "Casey at the Bat" was received with great applause. Mae Murray and Stafford Pemberton did some clever dances. Earl Carroll, writer of the music for "So Long, Letty" and who is preparing "Canary Cottage" to be produced by Oliver Morosco, sang some of the unpublished selections from the new play. The flower girls were Anita King, Edith Johnson, Marcia Moore, May Busch, Fay Tincher, Margaret Gibson, Margery Daw, Mae Gaston, and Florence Dagmar. The next event will be at the Maryland hotel in Pasadena.

At Lasky's they are building two rows of dressing rooms on top of the old ones, saving space and increasing the room. Other activities here show that the Paramount producing plant is working full blast every minute.

Paul Dickey, writer and actor, has left the Lasky Company and departed for Chicago where he will be gone according to report, for a week.

Russell E. Smith, formerly with Griffith, has left the Lasky Company and is free lancing around the film capital. He is doing a serial for the American, and will write a number of pictures for other big companies, meantime turning out a three-reel feature for Jack Pickford every two weeks.

Demure Doris Schroeder who turns out heaps and heaps of scenarios, and two times as much publicity for the Hollywood Vitagraph, has a fine new office occupying the entire top floor of the studio office building which is in an old mansion. Doris commands a preview of the entire studio and its many acres of territory.

Lewis J. Cody, who has been with Ince and other producers on the coast, has purchased a new six-cylinder touring car.

Biograph Releases Three-Part Comedy

During the Week of April 24 the Company Will Also Put Out a Two-Reel Drama and Single-Reel Reissue.

ONCE in a while there comes along a farce comedy with a real plot—which makes it ideal for screen production. Such is "The Spring Chicken," the smashing Broadway comedy success that was hatched from a ten-line newspaper item about an incubator baby. The plot was the cause of its tremendous popularity on the stage, and even more humorous is the development of the idea in a forthcoming Biograph production.

From the moment when the baby is put into an incubator to save its life, through all the comical situations resulting from the boy's "inheritance" of the chicken instinct, until he is finally cured of the remarkable ailment by being accidentally treated as a human creature, the big humorous idea of "The Spring Chicken" is kept constantly in mind. The result is three reels of sparkling comedy without a trace of "slapstick."

Gertrude Bambrick was never more spontaneous than in the principal role of the musical comedy soubrette about whom the action centers. Dave Morris and Bud Ross share the honors with her. The production is up to the minute with its inclusion of a spectacular scene—the burning of a big hotel, at which much of the action takes place. It is scheduled for release on the Biograph program as the three-reel featurei n the regular service for April 26.

Completing the Biograph program for the week of April 24 are a single reel reissue and a two-reel drama. "The Blind Princess and the Poet" is the title of the former. Blanche Sweet and Charles H. West, under the direction of D. W. Griffith, have the title roles. "Celeste" is the title of the two-reel drama featuring Vola Smith and Claire McDowell. It is a story of the sea coast, concerning a child lost during a shipwreck.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of April 3 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Heart of Paula" at the Strand.

LENORE ULRICH was seen at the Strand in a photo-dramatic production, "The Heart of Paula," a screen romance of love and adventure. The scenes are laid in old Mexico, and the action includes many phases of daily life and this exotic country. The rest of the bill consisted of a new comedy, scientific, travel and educational studies, and the Strand Topical Review. The soloists on the musical program were Grace Hoffman, soprano; Bruce Weyman, baritone, and Alfred Newman, pianist.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

"Little Meena's Romance," a drama of child life, with a touch of the immigrant and religious problems, was the principal film offering at the Knickerbocker theater. It is a Triangle-Fine Arts production, featuring Owen Moore and Dorothy Gish. The former is a nobleman, compelled through a temporary lack of funds to sell clothes wringers from door to door; the role allotted to Miss Gish is a simple little Pennsylvania Dutch girl, Meena. Before the romance in little Meena's existence is reached, all she knows about life is that cleanliness is above godliness and that idleness is vice. Consequently, when, after the death of her father, she goes to the magnificent New York home of her aunt to live, she just naturally never thinks to tell them that in her old telescope-bag she has a fortune of her own. The comedy complications that follow are very amusing. A Keystone comedy, the news of the world in film form, an interesting travelogue and a series of nature studies complete the picture program.

Blanche Sweet at the Broadway.

Blanche Sweet in the Jesse L. Lasky-Paramount production, "The Sowers," founded upon Henry Seton Merriman's novel of the same name, was the headliner at the Broadway theater. The screen version was made for Miss Sweet by Marion Fairfax and produced under the direction of Wm. C. De Miller. "The Sowers" deals with the movement to free the serfs in Russia. Many of the scenes are laid in the domiciles of the Imperial family, and the costumes worn by Miss Sweet were designed by Fedoe Raskolnikoff, for a number of years costumer at the Russian Court.

The remainder of the program included the weekly events, a colored scenic, a short comedy and a cartoon.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

SHELBY THEATER, LOUISVILLE, KY.

H. G. Peltier Operates Model Suburban Photoplay House—Very Plain in Its Decorations, Yet Most Attractive.

THE Shelby Theater, Louisville, Ky., located at 1226 South Shelby street, is an excellent example of a high-class, modern, fireproof, suburban moving picture theater. This building was erected at a low cost, but is one of the most attractive of its kind in the Louisville district. Through careful management the company is building up a nice and profitable business.

On November 13, 1914, the South End Amusement Company was incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 for the purpose of building the Shelby. The incorporators were John M. Keaney, president; H. B. Strube, vice-president; H. G. Peltier, secretary-treasurer and general manager, these three men holding the majority of the capital stock. Building operations started directly after organization of the company, and the theater, costing $15,000, was completed and opened on April 10, 1915.

While the interior of the theater is severely plain, at the same time it is very attractive in that it lacks the over-decoration which has been one of the chief causes in ruining the appearance of many of the smaller houses that through a too plentiful distribution of "gingerbread effects," have been made to look like cheap museums rather than playhouses. The interior color scheme is carried out in old rose, cream and high lighting gold effects. The stage opening is bordered in fancy plaster ornamentation, and brackets of the same material are placed at intervals along the side walls to support the electric fans.

Following the organization of the company, a lot 150 x 55 feet, at the corner of Shelby and Guendaline streets, was purchased. This lot extends back to the alley and opens on public streets or alleys on three sides. From side wall to side wall of the auditorium the distance is 52½ feet, while from the box office to the stage the auditorium measures 104 feet. The concrete floors are covered with wood for warmth, and the aisles are of cork to deaden sound. The seating capacity is 600, divided into two groups of 300 each by a five-foot center aisle. There are also two side aisles, each 5 feet wide. The seats, which are 20 inches wide and 32 inches from back to back, are of dark wood and were supplied by the American Seating Company. In the matter of exits the building is equipped with five 5-foot doors, one at each side of the box office, one at the side near the front, and two at the rear at each side of the stage, and reached by runways.

The heating system consists of a quick steaming boiler located in a concrete basement underneath the stage. The radiators are arranged, three at each side, two at the front, two at the rear and two on the stage. The side radiators, instead of being hung on the walls or placed where they might be stumbled over, are recessed in cut-outs in the walls, which have been braced overhead with bars of steel. Indirect lighting is employed throughout the building. Three large, brass fixtures are placed at regular intervals down the center of the theater. Four side lights are arranged on each side of the building, footlights for the stage, and stage lights, or border lights, are provided. Gravity ventilation is employed in the building. Three large ceiling ventilators open onto the roof, and they are manipulated by means of cables which enter the operator's booth. Four Westinghouse, 6-blade, oscillating fans are arranged on each side of the theater, and four 5 x 8 windows, 10 feet from the floor, are on each side of the building. These windows have double sash and are of the old English, small pane type.

The construction of the building, as said before, is fireproof throughout. The roof supports are of the steel truss type, the walls of brick, the roof of metal, and concrete is liberally used throughout, all steps and floors being of this material. What little woodwork is seen is of mahogany. The stage is 25 x 16½ feet and eighteen feet deep. An ordinary cloth, coated screen, 19 x 15 feet is employed, and is placed at the stage opening, directly in front of a fireproof curtain. In front of the stage is a concrete orchestra pit, 5 x 15 feet, about ten inches deep. This pit is large enough for an eight piece orchestra, but at present a $1,500 Wurlitzer instrument is being used. A three-piece orchestra was used at the time the theater was opened. At the rear of the auditorium is a nicely fitted combined rest and toilet room for women, and a separate room for men.

Fireproof construction has also been carried out in the booth which is also of concrete and steel. It is 10 x 10 x 8 feet and is over the ticket office. The throw to the screen is 104 feet. Metal doors cover each of the port holes. Two Powers 6 A projection machines have been in use for nine months, but look as if they might have just been installed, due to the excellent care taken of the machines by Edward Clay, the operator, who is busines manager of the local operator's union. The equipment includes a Wagner converter, placed in a wire covered cage. In the ceiling of the operating room is an exhaust fan which carries all heat and fumes out through the roof. Directly adjoining the operator's room is a large storage room in which the motor driven rewinding outfit, work bench, etc., are installed.

Ten-foot vestibules divide the lobby from the main auditorium, the latter being given about eight feet in the clear between the last row of seats and the back wall. These vestibules are equipped with double sets of handsome mahogany doors which have plate glass mirrors and brass rods. Located between the two vestibules is the box office which is 5 x 8 feet, and which is equipped with a plate glass front, marble trimmings, etc. A white tile wainscoting extends up to the plaster walls in the entrance, which is 15 feet deep and 25 feet wide. The interior of the entrance is finished in cream, while the floor and wide sidewalk is one solid sheet of concrete. The facade of the building is of green tile and white stucco, equipped with a double cornice of metal. Several large lighting globes are installed in the entrance and on the front of the building. A large blue and white electric sign, extends out over the sidewalk at the corner where it may be seen from both streets.

Manager Peltier does not believe in having the entrance of the theater crowded with huge boards carrying paper of shows on the screen and to be seen later. A few attractive brass poster frames, of the one sheet type, are used in the entrance. Two three-sheet posters are used, one on each side wall, and six sheet posters are used on the large bulletin boards which form a half circle at the corners of the entrance. Mr. Peltier started as a drummer at the Preston theater five years ago, and was a stockholder in that concern for some time. H. B. Strube has been in the business for several years and owns the Empire theater, on Market street, and the Sun theater, on Eighteenth street. A short time ago president Keaney sold his interest in the company to M. Switow. He later sold his stock to Mr. Peltier and Mr. Strube, who now own practically all of the stock.

Shortly after opening the house the management purchased the old Palace theater, a half block away. At the time the Palace was purchased the operators of that theater had a four months' lease which was still to run. After running two months an offer was made to the Shelby which took the unexpired lease and equipment and closed the theater. It was later sold under restrictions which make it impossible to put a theater in the building again. The old Palace theater for many years did a thriving business. This theater had a free car service whereby it drew a large volume of business from an area of several blocks. At that time the Louisville railway company operated a belt, or loop road as a feeder to its main Shelby street line, and no charge was made for riding on the cars. Later a transfer arrangement was made whereby the people living in that district were forced to pay to ride on the line, and the free service was stopped about the time the Shelby went into business.

Contributing largely to the success of the theater is the fact that it is located in a thickly settled German district, and the only competing theaters are the Preston, 4½ blocks away, and the Empire, the Strube, theater located 9 blocks further in. While the theater was not a money maker for several months it is now on a good paying basis. On Sunday the shows start at 2:15 in the afternoon and run to 10:30 at night while during the week the shows start at 7.20 and wind up about 11 o'clock. Admission prices are held at five cents for children and ten cents for adults.

Long programs, of seven to nine reels are shown at this theater at all times. Operating costs are held to a minimum in the management of this theater. The number of employes is small for a house of its size and consists of one operator, one assistant operator, a door man, cashier, janitor and manager. Ushers are employed only on rush nights, and are secured from the neighborhood easily on the payment of a small sum.

NEW BIJOU THEATER, GREENFIELD, MASS.

Although Seating Only 530, Brunell's House Making Big Profits With Feature Pictures—Entirely Redecorated and Remodeled—Has All Comforts and Conveniences of Larger Theaters.

THE New Bijou theater, located at the corner of Main and Wells streets, Greenfield, Mass., has the distinction of being one of the most home-like photoplay houses in this part of the state, owing to the overhauling and extensive remodeling which was done to it by A. B. Brunell, who took over the management of the theater in August, 1915.

Mr. Brunell, who hails from Worcester, Mass., brought with him Fred P. Dean, an experienced sign and scenic painter, and it was through his efforts that the interior of the theater proper was transformed from cold dull walls to a most pleasing soft French gray effect, while the woodwork was set off in white enamel. Over the numerous one-color imitation stained glass windows on both sides of the auditorium, the frame woodwork forms a sort of arch relief frame for the select scenic pictures Mr. Dean so skillfully sketched.

New Bijou Theater, Greenfield, Mass.

On the stage, at both sides of the gold fibre screen, imitation autumn leaves interwind the white lattice work which was so arranged as to give one an impression of Spanish architecture, with large jardinieres of plants and flowers in the foreground to bring out the desired effect. This piece of architecture can be readily removed should the management ever have cause to use the entire stage. The four-piece orchestra, which is located on the main floor in front of the stage, is boxed in with a brass trimmed railing from which hangs folds of green velvet drapings.

Upon entering this cozy little theater one has to pass under a square marquee frame of large red and white globule electric lights while directly above this covering a massive electric sign helps to add to the brilliancy of illumination at night. As one goes up the easy accessible stone steps into the lobby more fancy colorings in decorations of painted flowers on white walls greet the eye, and these together with the brass trimmed door, chain chandelier of electric lights, brass framed signs and framed pictures of screen stars plainly show that Mr. Dean, backed by the management, intended to make it an open living room. The box office, located just outside the door of the theater, contains a National ticket seller which is operated by a uniformed girl. The ticket taker and two ushers are also uniformed.

With a seating capacity of only 530 this little photoplay house has no balcony other than the small one located directly over the main entrance which is utilized exclusively by the projection department. This department is equipped with two projectors, a Powers 5 and 6B and spotlights which have a throw of 92 feet. A five horse-power motor and generator are used which furnishes light for the entire interior of the theater and which runs the eight electric revolving fans located at the sides of the house. By a perfect ventilating system the air is kept pure and fresh at all times and in summer it is considered one of the coolest theaters in town. Besides the main entrance there are two exits, one located at the left of the stage and the other being directly opposite. Three shows daily are given, one in the afternoon and two at night with a five-cent admission at the matinee and ten cents at night. A Sunday program is in vogue for the benefit of the poor. The weekly program consists of Paramount releases on Mondays, Tuesdays, Fridays and Saturdays with other features on Wednesday and Thursdays, including Metro releases.

For the convenience of patrons the management has had installed a telephone booth, a sanitary drinking fountain, two toilets and an illuminated clock. Mr. Brunell is a hustling and progressive person, and can most always be found around his theater. He is a firm believer in publicity and uses the newspapers and heralds together with his numerous signs which are located in different parts of the town. By running a clean up-to-the-minute show Mr. Brunell has gained the confidence of the town populace and the box office receipts bear out this fact for the patronage of the new Bijou is steadily on the increase.

LOEW CIRCUIT BOOKS "MUSTY SUFFER."

Contracts were closed last week by George Kleine's New York booking office, which provide for the appearance of George Kleine's "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" in all the vaudeville and picture houses of the big Marcus Loew circuit. Aside from the compliment paid these remarkable comedies by better-class theaters and circuits all over the country, it is noteworthy that the American theater, New York, plays the first feature comedy in its history with "Musty Suffer."

The booking, which covers the entire Marcus Loew circuit, was made after a try-out with one of the episodes of the series. "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" comprises ten one-reel comedies.

HOME THEATER, WASHINGTON, D. C.

"All the Comforts of Home" Can Be Enjoyed in the Capital City's Latest Photoplay House—The Exterior Very Attractive—E. J. Dolan, Lessee and Manager.

THE Home theater, at Twelfth and C streets, Northeast, is Washington's latest place of amusement, and its name is a most fitting one, for the house contains "all the comforts of home." It is located in a well-populated section, and from the start has done a most satisfactory business. The house is built along lines widely different from those of others of the city's houses. It is surmounted by a huge dome, the top of which is illuminated with small electric lights and can be seen for quite some distance. The interior as well as the exterior is highly attractive.

The lobby has been so fashioned as to represent a large sea shell, the lines of the shell starting at the top of the ticket booth, at which point is also located the promenade. In the lobby is a four-foot base of white marble. The upper walls match in color that of the mahogany doors and fixtures. Mahogany framed poster boards occupy the larger part of the sides. The ticket booth is large and roomy and is largely of glass, the upper section being of opal glass topped with a weathered copper roof. It is equipped with an automatic ticket machine. The front of the theater is attractively stencilled. On each side is a small store equipped with a marquee of green metal at the entrance. The upper part is outlined with electric lights. The front is 38 feet high to the bottom of the dome. The lobby is 22 feet wide and 16 feet deep.

Inside the theater is a space about 22 feet square on the one side of which is the men's retiring room, and on the other a similar room has been provided for women patrons, and on each side is the stairway leading to the lounge room and balcony. The floor is of cement, as is also the side walls which are paneled in old rose and shaded colors. There is a space eight feet square set off by silvered rails to prevent patrons coming in contact with the two large radiators which heat the front of the house, and this also sets off the entrance to the ticket booth. There is a double set of entrances and exits at each side. This section is lighted by a dozen small bulbs. The walls of the auditorium are paneled and fitted with four side lights each. At the left is a double exit and there is another double exit at each side of the stage. The auditorium is lighted by six large lights enclosed in bowl shaped globes suspended from the ceiling by brass chains. Four large radiators aid in heating the auditorium. The stage is twenty feet wide and has a depth of eight feet. The pictures are projected on a Mirror screen 13½ by 17½ feet, the throw being about 60 feet.

The ventilation of the house is exceptionally good. There is a good sized vent at the rear which opens into a very wide alley and through this fresh air is brought and carried over the steam pipes by means of a 36-inch fan in a volume sufficient to provide 20 cubic feet of fresh air per person at all times. There are vents in the ceiling through which the vitiated air is drawn out by means of a similar fan. The operating booth is large, running as it does the full width of the house and having a depth of 25 feet over the lobby. Here are two Powers 6-A projecting machines and the usual equipment of a first-class booth. A fully equipped bathroom is attached to the booth. Here also is a large workshop. The floor is of cement, the walls of cement and brick.

A feature of the house is the lounge room, forming a part of the balcony. This is equipped with large mahogany and leather easy chairs and reading table; there is an attractive rug on the floor and here and there are large photographs of well known stars. The four arches within this room are shaded blue and each set with a large electric light. In the center at the front is a double door, the upper part of which is of opal glass, through which one may pass to the balcony facing on the street. On each side is a retiring room, the one at the left for men, that at the right for women. Both of these are well fitted out and contain drinking fountains of the so-called bubbler type. At one side, but over the lobby, is the manager's office; there is a second room that is to be fitted out as the manager's reception room, while a third room is used for storage purposes. One may take it easy in the lounge room, or sit in the balcony where there are about fifty comfortable opera chairs, and view the pictures equally as well as from the floor. The lounge room is about 30 feet square. The Home Theater is to be operated as a feature house. It was erected by the Home Amusement Company and E. J. Dolan is the lessee and manager. Mr. Dolan is a native of Washington, but is perhaps better known in the theatrical section of New York, for he is an old-time show man. A three-piece orchestra is at present employed to produce the music.

FRANKLIN THEATER PLAYED BIG FEATURES.

The Franklin theater, Ensley, Ala., a photoplay house with a seating capacity of 575, has been playing big features. "Cabaria," "The Birth of a Nation," and "The Battle Cry of Peace" were shown at very big profit. The latter production was booked for two weeks. D. S. McEachern, manager of the Franklin, says that this is another proof that a moving picture house in a small town can book at great success big feature subjects. The Franklin is a well conducted and up-to-date picture house.

PRICE TAKES PARTNERS.

O. N. Price, who has been conducting the Travis theater in Traverse City, Mich., has taken I. Railey and J. M. Loudon as partners. The name of the company now running the theater is The Travis Theater Company. Mr. Loudon manages the Travis.

CAPITOL FILES INCORPORATION ARTICLES.

Articles of incorporation of the Capitol Theater Company, Louisville, Ky., with a capital stock of $3,000, divided into 300 shares of a par value of $10, and with authority to incur an indebtedness of $10,000, were filed in the office of the County Clerk yesterday. The incorporators are Fred Dolle, D. H. Long and Henry Reiss, each with three shares of the capital stock.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

AMONG the thousands that engaged in discussions to kill time while awaiting the staging of the championship fight at Madison Square Garden the other night were two men who are interested in the moving picture business. They found much to interest them in noting the arrangements that had been made to take moving pictures of the fight and naturally discussed the probable results of the picture taking end. This, of course, led to speculation as to whether the so-called reformers would attempt to interfere with the exhibition of the pictures and a discussion of censorship in general. One of them said, "They can do nothing in this state, but the promoters will in all probability have to fight their way in other states on account of the Inter-State Commerce laws. The reformers are always on the alert to make trouble for people in our business, regardless of justification. Here we see 12,000 or more people who have assembled here, and have paid over $150,000 to see this fight between Willard and Moran, yet the law can be invoked to prevent anyone from exhibiting motion pictures of the fight outside of the State. It certainly presents a remarkable condition of affairs. The original event is attended by thousands of representative people from all parts of the country, people engaged in all professions and commercial pursuits, as well as prominent office holders and law makers; all under police protection, with the fight sanctioned by law; yet if moving pictures of the fight are taken into New Jersey, about a mile distant, the Inter-State Commerce law steps in and prohibits their exhibition as illegal. This is the result of one of the trick lobbying acts of the so-called reformers. They caught the moving picture people when they were asleep. At the time, a large proportion of the sporting public felt very bitter because Johnson, the negro, had won the fight with Jeffries and were ready to do anything that might thwart the negro in any other avenue of success. Their first step was to try and kill the pictures of the fight, so as to cut off Johnson's revenue from them. The crafty reformers were on the job at once and little effort was required to get the people of the South to protest against exhibition of the pictures. The chief question was as to the most effective prohibition measure to be secured in the quickest time and some fertile mind suggested amendment to the Inter-State Commerce laws. The enactment being directed against fight pictures failed to attract attention of the moving picture trade. My recollection is that it aroused interest only on the part of those who were financially interested in the pictures and they were appeased by assurances that as their pictures had already been produced and exhibited the law would not affect them, at least for a certain period. 'The law cannot be made retroactive, and it will not amount to anything, anyway, as it is only one of those crank measures. If Jeffries had won there would have been no trouble. Why spend money to test the law? Let it go. It will become a dead letter in time.'"

"This was the pap given the picture people by the so-called reformers and their unsuspecting allies, the disgruntled sports who tried to get even with the negro champion. It was not until efforts were made to get into this country pictures of fights taken in Paris, London and Havana that the allies discovered they had unwittingly aided the reformers to bind themselves and the picture people hand and foot so effectively that nothing but a decision of the United States Supreme Court, or a repeal of the law, could release them. The enactment did not die with Johnson's popularity. It is still very much alive, although it has been tested in a lower United States Court in New Jersey and sustained both in that court and an appellate court. An appeal to the United States Supreme Court is still pending."

"Well," said the other picture man, "that goes to show that anyone who takes these high brow reformers for yaps needs the attention of an optician. They are always ready and can 'put one over' as good as the best in the game. You need an accident policy every time you couple with, or try to make use of, them."

"Of course," said the other, "They would not be taken from the pulpits for that kind of work if they were not fitted for it, and I have failed to hear of any of them that are ready to go back to the pulpits. Why just take New York State, for instance. The Assembly at Albany has a pack of them there at every session tinkering with censorship measures. Between sessions they alternate between New York and Brooklyn and the up-state sections picking champions for each new measure. I don't think they know what they are doing half the time. Of one thing I am sure, they have not got the slightest conception of consistency."

"Say, boy," exclaimed a sport sitting beside one of the picture men, "you make me butt in when you say those people don't know what they are doing? I sympathize with you picture men because as a sporting man I have been through the mill with those reform gangs. On the level, don't you think these reformers know what they are doing, or are you only kidding me? You might just as well tell me that Henry Ford's peace party didn't know what they were doing. They got where they wanted to get and back again. The reformer always gets what he wants, even if he doesn't clear the trenches. Let me call you attention to something. You see the bankings represented by this house here. Do you suppose that these thousands of people would have put up all this good money if there was the slightest suspicion that either of the fighters were not in condition for the match? Well, three weeks ago a bill was presented to the Assembly at Albany to stop this fight because one of the Assemblymen, an ex-prize fighter, said he believed that Willard was not in condition to fight. Bear in mind, that was three weeks ago. Willard had all that time to get into condition—there he is now. He looks all right, doesn't he? There they go—o—o-o-h! Did you see that one? That was a smash!" At this point the sport concentrated all his attention on the fight.

The contest being over, the moving picture men started to leave, but the sporting man detained them. "Say, wait just a moment. Give the crowd a chance to get out. I was telling you about that bill in the Assembly three weeks ago. I don't know what became of it. But, on the level, don't you think the people behind that bill knew what they were doing? Well, Willard wins. Good night."

There is an old saying to the effect that if certain people are allowed to go to the end of the rope they will hang themselves. This may be applied with truth to the official censorship boards. Each week brings developments warranting the conclusion that the time is not far distant when official censorship acts will form a record that will induce the public to demand abolition of the system which has proved to be solely one of reward to political heelers and lobbyists. Reports from Philadelphia (the resting place of the Hall of Independence and the bell that proclaimed liberty throughout the land) show that the Board of Censorship there has not only been repeatedly defeated in the courts where its decisions have been tested, but has now assumed an arbitrary position that makes it positively tyrannical. A film recently submitted for its approval contained a sub-title declaring that political censorship of moving pictures is becoming so serious that the ruination of the moving picture industry is threatened. It also contained an appeal to all who believe in the freedom of the screen to ask their Congressmen, State Representatives and Mayors to demand the free screen. The Board of Censors ordered elimination of the sub-title from the film. The Censors evidently looked upon the sub-title in the light of lese-majeste. The Philadelphia exhibitors' association is thoroughly aroused over the ruling and threatens to make a test of it in court. It is hoped they will do so without delay and that the issue will be thoroughly and decisively contested. The ruling has attracted much attention among the moving picture people in this city and the question is looked upon as the most important that has arisen since the contest to defeat the creation of the Philadelphia board. The scope presented for a contest affords an unusual opportunity to secure a court ruling as to the discreation of the censors. Careful reading of the title does not disclose the slightest indication of any infringement of the laws creating the board, or of its self-enacted regulations. It would appear that the only ground upon which the board can attempt to justify its action is one of personal privilege, and it is not at all likely that the board can successfully sustain that position in any court. The sub-title does not attack or ridicule the Board of Censors, either collectively, or individually. It is simply an appeal against a system as a whole for the conservation of one of the largest and most laudable industries in the world. The Philadelphia exhibitors should not allow this opportunity for a decisive contest to slip by.

GERMAN TRADE NOTES.

THE third annual meeting of the Society for the Protection of the General Interests of the Cinematograph and Allied Trades was called to order in the halls of the Berlin Chamber of Commerce. Practically every Berlin film concern as well as a majority of out of town firms were represented. The results of this meeting were awaited on all sides with great anticipation inasmuch as it was expected that the Society would here officially take action in the Nordische question. The Nordische opponents and the Nordische sympathizers were represented in force. At the opening of the meeting the Nordische body gained an advantage by causing the discussion to be drawn away from the all-absorbing topic into an argument over a new trade journal. This fruitless discussion occupied the attention of the body during the entire forenoon session. Late in the afternoon Messrs. James Henschel, Hamburg, Chr. Muelleneisen, and Martin Berger, Berlin managed to bring up the Nordische question. After a short debate, the matter was postponed to be discussed at a special meeting to be called at a later date. With the few customary business matters the third annual meeting came to a close. Such really important matters as kinematograph tax, the censorship question, the establishing of a board of arbitration to act between renters and theater owners, the ever increasing prohibition of children visiting cinemas, which should have been settled at this meeting were not even introduced but supplemented by a prolonged debate over an inoffensive trade paper.

Film-Engineer Sborowitz has compiled some interesting statistics concerning notables at present before the public eye. From a large number of cinematographic pictures showing these persons going through practically the same movements, Mr. Sborowitz has ascertained the number of movements each man makes per minute. Kaiser Franz Josef makes 50 movements in one minute, King George 55, the Swiss General Wille 60, Prince Henry of Prussia 80, Kaiser Wilhelm 90, Field-Marshal Mackensen 90, Hindenburg 100, Grand-Duke Karl Friedrich of Austria 130, Czar Nicholas 140, Crown-Prince Wilhelm of Germany 150, and General Joffre 160. Kaiser Wilhelm holding the middle point in this list shows, according to Engineer Sborowitz, that from all these notables the German ruler exercises the greatest control over himself. The ease of King George denotes indifference and unconcern while the number of movements made by Kaiser Franz Josef and Crown-Prince Wilhelm denote respectively age and youth. Hindenburg and Mackensen show ease and decision whereas the Czar and General Joffre register nervousness and restlessness.

Interesting as are these statistics, it is doubtful if the exact figures can be obtained unless pictures are also taken of these personalities in an unofficial capacity.

Crowded houses have caused a prolonged engagement at the Tauentzien Palast of the Alwin Neuss drama "Die Stimme des Toten" (The Dead's Voice). The difficult role of the singer who loses his voice and social position during an American tour and after years of wandering returns to his native country a broken-down old man is executed in masterful style by Mr. Neuss who virtually excels himself in this piece. The supporting cast plays in a highly creditable manner. Especially pleasing is the finished acting of little twelve year old Lotte Mueller.

The Mozartlichtspiele presents two interesting pictures. Comedy is represented by a laughable film with Emil Sondermann, Addy Romberg and roguish Manny Ziener in "Sondis dunkler Punkt" (Sondi's Dark Point). The serious vein is upheld by "Durch Nacht zum Licht" (Through Night to Light) which met with the success which was predicted for it some weeks ago in these columns.

A take-off on Waldemar Psilander's many feminine admirers is the attraction at the Kammerlichtspiele. "Psilander Heiratet" (Psilander Marries) is the title of a very amusing comedy dealing with the popular Danish actor's troubles in selecting a wife from the mass who continually swarm for his favor. Although perhaps a trifle too much Psilander, the film nevertheless provides a clean enjoyable evening's entertainment.

An Austrian war drama "Mit Herz und Hand Fuers Vaterland" (With Heart and Hand for the Fatherland), is being shown at the Union Theaters. 12,000 people were used in the production of this film which shows in a realistic manner the adventures of a young cadet on the Italian front. Music to accompany this film was especially arranged by Franz Lehar. Asta Nielsen once more demonstrates her ability in the Union film "Die Ewige Nacht" (The Eternal Night) in which this versatile actress plays with wonderful aptitude the part of a blind girl.

The German-Asiatic Border Company intends showing by means of the cinematograph to the inhabitants of all the larger cities in European and Asiatic Turkey the growth and advantages of German industry. Films showing the workings of each industrial section of Germany as well as of single factories will be taken and sent to Turkey for this purpose.

The Berlin branch of the German-American Aid Committee has purchased from the National Film Company two war dramas, "Wir Barbaren" (We Barbarians) and "Des Kaisers Stolz" (The Kaiser's Pride). The films will be used for propaganda purposes in America.

Berlin, February 23, 1916.

TWO LUBIN PLAYERS DEAD.

Mrs. Steven Morris (Edith Ritchie), died at Bryn Mawr Hospital, Philadelphia, on the 24th. Mrs. Morris was well known in Philadelphia and Haverford society and made many successes in amateur theatricals. Financial reverses came and she applied for and secured employment at the Lubin Studios, where, after a few weeks on the extra list, she became a regular member of Barry O'Neil's company in responsible parts. Later she became secretary of a booking concern, and it is believed that hard work in that position brought on a nervous ailment which resulted in her death, leaving a husband and invalid daughter to mourn her loss.

Bartley McCollum, one of Lubin's most capable and interesting character actors, died at St. Joseph's Hospital, Philadelphia, on Saturday last. Mr. McCollum was one of the best known actors in his line for many years, and his engagement of ten consecutive years in "Way Down East" gained for him the honor of being pronounced one of the best and quaintest "Rube Actors" on the stage. When the popularity of that famous drama began to wane, he turned his attention to the silent drama, where he has remained ever since as one of Lubin's real favorites.

An old fashioned country newspaper office gives the principal setting for "The Man from Manhattan," an original five-reel photoplay by J. Edward Hungerford which Director Jack Halloway has just started to produce as a Mutual Materpicture, De Luxe Edition. The story contains a number of true-to-life types that give good contrasting comedy to the stirring action of the play, which deals with politics and the power of the press. A love theme, introduced logically into the plot, gives a good human interest touch. Rhea Mitchell, William Stowell, Jack Prescott, Warren Ellsworth, Perry Banks, Joe Taylor and Charles Wheelock all have important parts in the plot advancement.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

WITH this issue the Moving Picture World adds to its Educator department a division of expert criticism and suggestions on films for definitely instructional use in educational institutions. As pioneer editor of this developing movement we have secured the service of Professor Hardin Lucas, a man of advanced training and wide school experience—as supervising principal, assistant superintendent of city public schools, and as professor of education and lecturer in Normal Schools. A few years ago he was elected teaching fellow in Teachers' College. Columbia University, New York City. He is chairman of a committee on visual aids to instruction.

PEDAGOGICAL REEL-ISM.

We had been talking over a plan for making educational films available for systematic use in schools, when the big man in the industry smilingly remarked: "Yes, I understand that many of the reels we list as educational you school men don't care to use. You want them to be—" and at this point his smile grew broader, "what is that word you apply to them?"

"Peda—" I began, smiling back in appreciation of his frank recognition of the situation.

"That's it," he cut in with a gesture. "Pedagogical. You want them, scenario and all, arranged that way because then you could use them more conveniently and with better effects. I see the point."

Possibly this distinction between truly instructional films and those that are only vaguely educational is already widely appreciated among moving picture men. True, the several educational departments established by producers and exchanges are doing excellent work; but much remains to be done before the systematic and continuous use of films for specifically pedagogical purposes can be considered as well established. Some schools here and there have made commendable efforts to utilize this new material as a visual aid to instruction, but most of the machines thus far installed in schools have exhibited motion pictures chiefly as a form of educational recreation or diversion.

A number of school superintendents have told me of disappointments experienced as a result of their choosing certain supposedly "educational" reels from a so-labelled list sent out by some film exchange. Such experiences are no longer surprising when you have learned the exchange men's habit of listing as "educational" almost everything that is neither "comedy" nor "drama." Even in the Motion Picture Educator there was published a few weeks ago a very long list of educational films, among which were enumerated many that would hardly receive serious consideration by professional educationists. Probably the very loose classification of many pictures as educational from the standpoint of the exhibitor may be justifiable. A much more careful grouping becomes necessary when we began to discuss the distinctively pedagogical use of motion pictures as a part of the regular scheme of instruction in schools.

In later issues of the Moving Picture World I shall give details of a well-laid plan for supplying to schools in any state regular programs of pedagogical films in weekly installments throughout the school year. Assurances of very earnest and cordial support for this enterprise have already been received from practically all of the producers and syndicates that are capable of rendering the largest service in such a movement. As a result of their liberal terms and a co-operative arrangement offered to schools subscribing before July for the entire 1916-17 school year of the service, charges will be extremely low—easily within the reach of any progressive school of a few hundred pupils.

Mr. Exhibitor, please call the above paragraph to the attention of educationists (including board members) in your vicinity. Ask them, if interested, to write me—or do it yourself.

SILAS MARNER.

"Silas Marner," by George Eliot, 1861. Produced in seven reels by Thanhouser; released by Mutual Feb. 19. Even as Shakespeare rearranged certain details found in Holinshead and Plutarch in order to make them fit his own conceptions of the stage and its audience between 1589 and 1611, so the present day scenario writer must be granted reasonable liberties in adapting literary materials to the fleeting photomime. We who have acquired a reverence for certain classics may very properly feel shocked if a well-beloved story is put upon the screen in a crudely garbed form. But it were folly to be hypocritical, and futile to insist upon downright slavish adherence to the original. The living composer of the scenario is entitled to as much of freedom in his art as was granted to the dead author in hers.

Philip Lonergan has chosen to ignore or change a number of the details George Eliot saw fit to weave into her impressive plot. It must be admitted that some of these deviations are quite without advantage. Marner is made to leave the deacon's sickroom before Dane enters to steal the church money, in the place of which the latter deposits the tell-tale knife—loaned him to cut a sprig of blossoms for Sarah. The decision against the innocent weaver is rendered by a rising vote of the congregation. Marner's absence from his Raveloe cottage at the time of the theft of his own hoard of two bags of gold is accomplished by having him go out into the rainy night to chop firewood; and the younger Cass steals one bag only—but that's all the screen ever shows. These slight departures from the text are typical.

It should not be inferred, however, that the superfine quality of the masterpiece is seriously marred by such lapses from perfect fidelity in the matter of smaller points. For the atmosphere and spirit of the photomime is remarkably in accord with the novel as a whole. I wish that every high school pupil who reads the book might see just such a film version as this. Fellow teachers, do you agree with me?

ROLL CALL OF THE STATES.

Would you be interested in a roll call of the states on the question—"How many of your schools are now equipped with standard motion picture projectors?" From an official source I learn that in a certain western state there are only two educational institutions that possess machines: a State Normal School and a State Insane Asylum. Who's next? Shall we begin with Alabama or Wisconsin; or would Texas or California like to be the first to enter the lists? Los Angeles has a considerable number of her schools so equipped; how many has Portland (either one), Atlanta, Duluth, Springfield, Paris? Send in whatever facts you know.

TITLING.

Incidentally and quite unwittingly we suppose the title writer of "When Kings Were the Law," supplies this specimen of English-as-she-should-not-be-filmed: "He presents the favorite with a necklace, who vows by the stars never to part with it." If such language should appear on any film shown in school doubtless the alert teacher would ask the pupils to correct the error.

LETTERS WELCOME.

The department will welcome letters from educationists who are interested in any of the problems relating to (a) making proper films (of standard gauge) available for systematic use in our schools, or (b) utilizing such films with maximum efficiency along strictly pedagogical lines.

Purchasers or dealers in standard projectors are invited to report current installations in schools and other non-commercial institutions. Give exact title of institution and address, with name of person chiefly interested; also make and model of machine and date of sale.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Better Paper.

EVIDENTLY the recent editorial comment in the style of paper supplied exhibitors has struck a popular note, for scores of letters have been received, not only endorsing the stand taken, but urging that the agitation be continued. One from Chris. G. Behrens, manager of the Family theater, Davenport, Iowa, is typical and it presented as a sample of a majority of the communications. He writes in part:

> We wish to compliment you on your editorial—"Better Display Paper for the Exhibitor."
> Our experience has been the same as the exhibitor of which you make mention and we would heartily agree with State Legislation that would censor some of the display paper that is now furnished on certain features. We have not only refused to put out a large part of one, three and six sheets furnished us, but have actually cancelled bookings on account of the paper that was sent in advance for us to advertise that production.
> We give our regular bookings a great deal of newspaper publicity in our two leading daily papers, equal space, and enclosed you will find copies of some of our recent advertising and our one great difficulty is to get outside display paper that will back up this publicity, and as well as the class features which we are showing.
> This city has three first-class houses, playing the best feature programs. All three houses located on the same side of the street within one block, and although we have plenty of competition, it is fair and simply up to the house management that can get their share of the business and we can safely say that for a city of this size you will not find three more attractive houses and a public that has been better educated to the drawing power or merit of the various photoplays and stars and a large percentage of these people are photoplay shoppers—they spend their admission where they think they are going to see the best for the price.
> Necessarily the program that furnishes the most attractive display, that exhibitor is better fortified to get his full share of the business.
> We play Metro and Triangle Programs. The high quality of display paper and photos which are now furnished by Metro, we know brings us many an admission and if the management of other programs would realize what important a question this is to the exhibitor, that is using his features, nothing would be left undone to be on a par with the best.
> Although at various times we have endeavored to reach the men higher up who should realize the importance of this matter to the exhibitor, where they spend thousands of dollars selling their programs to the exhibitor through the Trade Papers with high class displays; they do not seem to know that this same kind of publicity must be used by the exhibitor who is the actual man that picks up the dimes, and these go to pay for the entire industry.
> We read a great deal about the successful exhibitors in the larger cities and the methods by which he or his specialist is employed to create attendance, and we do agree that this is a great benefit to all exhibitors; but the hundreds of thousands of exhibitors are not located in the larger cities and as they change their program several times each week it is a very important matter that their advertising matter and lobby display appeal to the better class of people, and this should be given every consideration by the managers of the leading programs.

Primarily the success of any business is based on the ultimate consumer, in this instance the theater-going public. If the public supports a brand, the exhibitor desires this brand, which makes good business for the exchange and permits it to pay its film bills. It is not sufficient to please the exchange man or the exhibitor. The man who pays his money into the box office is the man to be appealed to. Nothing short of this will do. It follows that the paper that best performs this service is the paper that will make the most business for all concerned. This does not mean that the loudest paper will make the most business. To the contrary it will do the most hurt. There are not a few exhibitors, themselves, perhaps, who want the loudest and most violent scenes, but these are in the minority and they really do not count against the great mass of the public.

Here is the matter in a nutshell. Let us suppose that in a town of 10,000 persons one-tenth of these, or one thousand, can be appealed to with the more violent form of film entertainment. These are they who want their amusement as vivid as is possible. Suppose that there are perhaps another thousand who like the pictures even if some of them are too violent. In such a town it is safe to say that another 2,500 require inexpensive amusement and would patronize the better pictures if they knew that the pictures are no longer the crude monstrosities of a few years ago. Add these to the foregoing classes and we have a playgoing population of 4,500 from which to draw; more than twice as many as before. Many of this latter class are kept out of the theaters, not by the film (of which they know nothing) but by the posters which they presume to be typical of the films. Why not make these lithographs more truly "true to the films" and less typical of isolated and even imaginary scenes?

Only lately it was stated that a subject was locally censored not because a scene was vicious, but because the advertising had led to the general belief that the scene was immoral. There was nothing to deserve censorship—even according to the peculiar beliefs of the self-styled censors—but the stuff was cut because of the advertising. Old friends of the department will recall a letter from a Texas exhibitor who reported that many persons who came to see Judith of Bethulia turned back when they saw paper tnat represented only the battle scenes.

One trouble—and it is a very real trouble—is that directors will not supply the proper still pictures. They turn in certain photographs that represent what they suppose to be desired situations and no amount of talk will persuade them to do otherwise. But there is always the film to speak for itself and it is possible to enlarge film to permit paper to be made from it.

It is not necessary to appeal only to the lowest and most debased intelligence. It is not necessary to show man with his fingers wound around the windpipe of a lady in evening dress who is lying on her back on a table, head on to the audience, and yet there are dozens of such lithographs for every clean and decent three-sheet. It may be but a momentary pose, and yet it is offered as typical of the play as a whole. Why not something that would be more truly representative? It will pay the maker of the paper because it will pay the exhibitor because the patrons in increased numbers will pay him.

To take but a single instance, we do not find the Pickford paper violent and degenerate, and yet the showing of a Pickford picture will fill the house. True, not all films are Pickfords, but they can make the same appeal to the people who come to see Miss Pickford not alone because of her screen personality, but because they know that she will be seen in a decent play. They feel safe. These people do not come out for vicious subjects, but the people who will want to see anything that is a picture will come to the Pickfords along with those who appreciate decency. That is why the stuff rents at higher prices than the three dollars-a-day-a-reel stuff. It is plain business to make the appeal to all instead of the comparatively few, and yet the manufacturer and the poster maker keep on turning out "striking" instead of "typical" paper because they know little or nothing of the exhibition end of a business based on the exhibition of their product. As an ordinary business policy cleanliness pays best because it makes an appeal to a larger clientele, and yet even the clean pictures are turned out with sensational poster scenes that suggest what is not shown.

And to go Mr. Behrens one better, why not posters that will work all the way through? Lately we spent six weeks in a small town. We had to work nights on some manuscripts and across the way was a theater that changed the program every other day. As soon as the last night house was in the bill poster would come out and paste the paper for the next program. We could watch him work. There was plenty of light in front of the house, and yet of the eighteen changes there were but five titles that could be read from across the street by electric light and only two more, seven in all, that could be read with ease in the day time. The fundamental rule of laying out paper was violated eleven times out of eighteen. About sixty per cent. of the paper was only from twenty-five to fifty per cent. efficient.

It is up to the manufacturer to reform his paper AND it is up to some of the Exhibitors to reform their newspaper and other advertising. Give a dog a bad name and he is worthless. Pictures do not have to be bad. It is sufficient merely to represent that they are sensational and immoral. Nine-tenths of the agitation favoring censorship is based on belief rather than information, but the fanatics are merely letting the exhibitor and film-maker convict themselves on their own lying representations. The decent exhibitors have to suffer with the rest.

Every time you get paper that hurts your business, write the manufacturer. In the course of time he will realize that he is on the wrong track. Nothing else will do the work. Do not write him once, but each time. Spend a dollar in stamps for the good of the business. You'll more than get it back. If only a thousand exhibitors would do this, in no time at all the evil would be abated.

A Ten-in-One.

Right off the Reel is the title of a new weekly put out in Atlanta, Georgia, by a company that expects to make its profit on the outside advertising. The houses, we understand, get their advertising in return for their assistance in distributing the issue. The publishers disarm criticism by admitting they never got out a paper before and that the printers never handled a publication before. The appearance and layout of the sheet bears them witness, but since they know that all is not well, there is a chance for improvement in the typography. The type face is not pleasing and the use of leads to save composition cost does not help things any, and some of the pages look as though they were done on an old Washington press. But it is much easier to improve type than type matter and here the editors are in better form. The stuff is brightly written, and written for the picture fans and not to please the house manager. It is not filled with stuff about the current films, nor does it largely consisted of lifted matter. Most of it is original matter about pictures in general and picture theater going and the house appeal comes from the advertisement. The great trouble with many of these apart from the house organs that have appeared is that they are set up to make money or else to permit the editor to air his personal views. After he is through talking, the scissors come into use. Either that or the space is filled with puffs for the local houses. If this sheet can be kept to its present standard and they will hire some practical make-up man to get their printer in the right track, Right off the Reel should have a future.

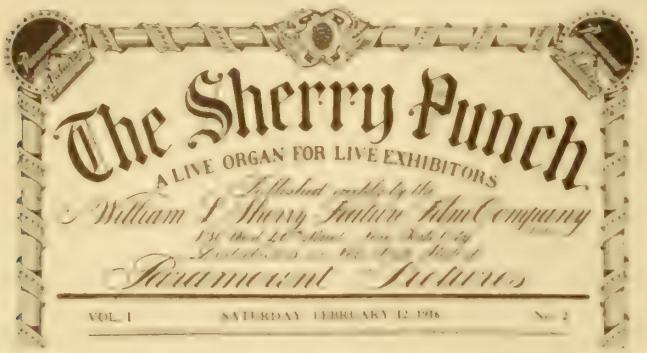
Sherry Punch.

Even in the dry states Sherry Punch is permissible if you use the brand put out by the William L. Sherry Feature Film Co. Way back in the dim past when the Famous Players were not so famous, the Sherry Company got the New York State rights and hired Carey Wilson, who used to wear funny hats out in Rutherford, N. J., to run a house organ. Mr. Wilson is in Australia now and probably still raving over some new blonde beauty, but the Sherry company has brought out a new house organ again and calls it the Sherry Punch, though it has a dash of something much stronger to it. It's a nice, clean looking eight-pager and it says things worth reading. Much, of course, is about Paramount subjects, but there is enough else to pay you for reading their side of it. One pungent paragraph suggests that if the printer gives you fourteen different styles of type face in one advertisement you should make him pay half the cost of displaying his samples of type. It sounds amusing, but there is sense back of it. Even in its heading the sheet is original, as this cut will show:



The border is carried around the page to frame a portrait cut of some Paramount player, but the lower corners show a jewel similar to that in the top center instead of the trade mark. There is no editorial heading and no editor is named, but he deserved to be given credit.

"A" Announcement.

Just to show that commenting on the work of others is not his one long suit, George Editor Carpenter collaborated with H. E. Ellison in the opening announcement of the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City. It is an eight-page folder in French grey surfaced paper printed in black and with a black that really is black. It is not overloaded with black job faces, but, on the other hand, it is not machine set, even the body type being slightly ornamental but entirely readable. Then it does not make promises impossible of performance, but sets forth attractively the house policy and the value of the programs to be offered. Mr. Carpenter proves that he can make good from either end of the alley.

When this hits his eagle eye, will he please note that A. Walker, the Orpheum, Aberdeen, S. D., in a recent letter wants to know who this man Carpenter is. Will the man from Salt Lake please supply him with the information?

Dissolving.

Real Reels quotes a clever stunt of S. Barrett McCormick, who is now in charge of the Princess, Denver. He had the Anna Held film and explains:

> Realizing that the thing that made Anna famous was the song "I can't make my eyes behave," he promptly took that as his text. So he had a slide made, giving the effect of a piece of note paper with Anna Held's crest in the corner (an "H" in a fancy crest) and in French wrote the quotation. Then he had another slide made so that the lines were in the exact position reading:
> I can't make my eyes behave > in > Madame la Presidente
> Anna Held.
> Both were written in a woman's (French style) handwriting. With the dissolver on the stereopticon he had the French words dissolve into English. It made a striking effect that was impressive.

Being a theatrical man, Mr. McCormick should remember that what made Anna Held famous was Florenz Ziegfeld.

Another Bird.

W. H. Bird, who recently submitted film souvenir suggestions, comes in with another, still writing from Fort William, Ont., as he has not yet connected with another house. He says:

> Of course we all know that to get the children into your show is a problem, especially where there is competition, for in my estimation and from my own observations to get the kids is to get the grown-ups; in fact the old adage, "A little child shall lead them," applies pretty well to the M. P. theater. So let us get the kids inside our show, and if we have any kind of a decent house and program they will keep coming and also bring the older folks.
> Now, the man with the Cinematograph camera has no doubt boosted his business with local pictures, but here is a good stunt to get the kids into the show and incidentally recover the cost of the whole affair.
> In a town of say 20,000 with a couple of newspapers, that means from fifty to one hundred carriers and newsboys. Generally these youngsters are moving picture crazy, so advertise in the papers—they will co-operate with you—and invite all the newsboys on the papers to visit your theater on Saturday afternoon, when on showing their collection cards they will be admitted free of charge as your guests. Also have it known that moving pictures will be taken of the kids before they enter the show.
> If I know anything of kids, and I think I can say I do, every newsie will be on deck with his identification, and as they line up in front of the house you take about 50 feet of the gang, then let them in the show.
> Advertise on the screen and in the papers, with your daily ad when the pictures will be shown, and I will guarantee that every kid who was admitted free will be there to see himself on the screen, and incidentally bring along Pop and Momer, who will also have to pay their dime to see little Buster appear in movin' picters.
> Announce after the showing that every boy in the pictures, if he attends the show on a certain date, will receive a portion of the film with himself in it, each to identify himself by his card as before, and you can bet your daily receipts that every kid will be back again to obtain the piece with his picture on.
> Let us then figure up what it has cost us to work this little stunt and the benefits gained by it.
> The film and developing one print, of course, the up-to-the-minute manager does this himself, should not amount to much more than ten cents per foot, say $5 the film. Say we only have fifty kids and charge a nickel apiece, they will all have been twice, which will clear the cost of the film, and we have not counted the other dimes that have come in to see their fond offspring make their debut on the screen, and what is more than all the rest combined, we have no doubt got some one inside our house who has not been in the habit of coming before, and if we have a good house, good program, house run decently I have no doubt that the experiment will have resulted in gaining some additional patrons, and then of course it is up to one to keep this patronage.

Booming War Film.

Steve Talbot has been tearing things loose over in Philadelphia, where a German war film has been showing at the Chestnut Street opera House. As the film is the property of the Philadelphia North American, that paper very naturally gives plenty of space to the film, but that very fact has made it no easy matter to "land" the other papers. Of course a stupid censor helped a lot by ordering out close-ups of the Kaiser and Field Marshall von Hindenberg, and Steve did the rest. As a starter he called up the editor of the leading German language paper and asked his advice. Nothing so crude as a request that the censor be attacked. It almost seemed as though Steve hoped that the editor could help him get permission to run the film. The editor called the censor up for an interview. At last reports he had reached some five generations back in the censor's German ancestry, and was still calling names. Then came the announcement that the eliminated portions would be cut into frames and distributed as souvenirs mounted on cards "in the national colors—red, white and black." The card was white, the printing red and the film black. After that the Liberty Film people came out with the statement that the film was not the elided portion of the original reel, but duplicates by that company, and there were enough letters from Talbot to Freeman Nernstein to give each paper some communication to print.

From another angle, the house did not telephone into the newspaper offices telling of the censor's cut. Most Philadelphia papers have bureaus of information for the public and will tell anything from how to spell cat to the population of Dog Run, Idaho, in the 1890 census. Innocent bystanders called these bureaus up and wanted to know what there was "immoral or obscene" in the picture of the Kaiser. Even then they did not give the story away. They had just heard that the picture had been cut. They didn't know anything else, and presently reporters from other papers than the sponsor sheet were sprinting for the Chestnut Street and even the opposition was glad to get bits of the film and a spread story.

And something new was tried when instead of having a circular printed giving the details of the souvenir Mr. Talbot arranged with one of the papers to give him two thousand galley proofs of the story they were to print. These cost less than a similar number of circulars and were slipped into the house programs.

Directly the house made no capital of the censoring. They let it work indirectly and therefore more potently. They saved it for its news value and the house advertising contained no hint of the matter, no reference to the censored film. It suffered in silence, apparently, but between Steve's "plants" and his friendship with the newspaper men he got front page stories every day, even seeing to it that the photographer who made the film on the firing line got tickets to every public dinner in town during the run of the film, and of course he made a speech telling of his experiences, and he could not decently avoid mentioning the film that was the reason for the trip.

An important point to note is that most of the big stuff was indirectly planted. There was no running around to tell the papers. It was seemingly by accident that they learned (at the earliest possible moment) of the censoring of the picture. They would not have printed a statement that the censored film was being given away. They were interested in the suggestion that the film was faked and that told the people that copies of the film might be had by all. The direct paid advertising was small, but Breitinger surely deserves a check.

And it is about the first time on record that press work for a New York house has been done from Philadelphia, but the stuff run here for the print at Weber's theater is all prepared by Talbot.

Rather Small.

L. C. Barnes, of the Lyric, Kalamazoo, Mich., sends in a newspaper clipping and a folder, both showing a calendar, of which he writes:

> Sometime ago I remember noticing among the paragraphs of your "Advertising for Exhibitors" a monthly program printed upon a calendar. This appealed to me, as my patrons have always asked for the bookings a month in advance in the Elite, which has always been our feature house, and I have had folders printed and distributed the last of each month giving the names of the plays and stars for the following month.
> As I am opening the Lyric next month as a 10 cent feature house, a change from their regular 5 cent policy, I wanted to get out a monthly program different from the one already in use, so the thought occurred to me to use one of your ideas which had impressed me at the time of seeing it in the Moving Picture World.
> As I happen to be a show-card writer I made the design and had the engraving company make a plate, which I then used not only upon the program but also in the daily papers.

The idea is good, but the calendar is rather too small. The cut shown here is 5¾ inches, natural size, and the date is in the upper right hand corner of each box, about one and one-tenth of an inch square in a box three-fourths of an inch square. Mr. Bates will find on page 150 of his Picture Theater Advertising a reproduction of a calendar with the figures overprinted in red, a transparent red being used that the letters may not be obscured. If two printings are not permissible—and this was the case here, the figures should be made larger and set above the lettering. The advantage of the calendar type of advertisement is that it serves a useful purpose and so is retained through the month.

THE HOUSE OF QUALITY FEATURES

Mr. Barnes, it will be seen, letters unusually well, and he ensured the holding of the calendar by making it good for a price reduction the last day. The folder is printed in blue on blue and here, again, Mr. Bates' experience stands him in good stead, for he gets the right ink to work with the tint and he does not fill up his space with too much type. He covers all of the points of importance with a double time table showing the starting times for both five and six-reel features.

Smaller But Better.

Mrs. George Hunt of the Page, Medford, Ore., sends in two copies of their house organ, the Page Photoplay Herald. Both are four-page issues, one 7 by 11 and the other twice that size, but both have the same approximate amount of text, as the smaller issue is set in smaller type. This is an improvement over the earlier and larger issue. Type too large removes the suggestion of a newspaper, which is most desirable and leaves it merely a herald. There is hardly enough type matter. There is about half a page of local notes that will interest and some little chat about the films coming, but no house talk, and this is the department that does a house organ the most good. Never mind clipping the manufacturer's announcement of a film. The stronger appeal is made by a chatty, personal talk about the coming films. Mrs. Moore, down in Akron, just sits down and tells her patron-friends in a part of a page what is coming and why it should be good. There is no attempt at "fine" writing, for this would be out of place. It is just a chat, but it is convincing. Mrs. Hunt can do the same thing and she will find that it will pay a cash return and make friends for the house as well. Days should be dated. Here the formal program is on page three and the date on page one. If the sheet gets torn it loses its value. It always pays to date lines. It is not enough to say "Friday." Tell which Friday is meant.

We wish Mrs. Hunt would drop us a line when she has time and tell just what she means when she says that the means of distribution are newspaper circulation department, grocery delivery system and mailing. It sounds interesting.

She has quite a nice lot of outside advertising and there is no reason why she should not work up to an eight-pager.

Can This Be True?

We find it not easy to believe a newspaper advertisement sent in by a staff correspondent, yet it seems to be real. It advertises the Star Moving Picture Parlor of Hurlock, Md., and advertises "Walbrook" Blinn in The Whirlpool, adding that, "This great picture is having a two weeks' run night and day at the Brodie Picture Parlor, of Baltimore." This is bad enough, but the next bank reads:

> On last Saturday night our three-reel feature was shown backwards, which the public could not help but notice. We are very sorry that such a thing as this occurred, but it was not our fault entirely, as the trailers were torn off the reels, but we promise you that this will not happen again.

Later the management is moved to a vote of thanks and remarks:

> We also wish to thank the public for their patronage. We are endeavoring to get pictures that the public like, but it is a very hard job to get everything we want in this business.

Can you beat it?

More War Films.

The Rose theater, Regina, Sask., has been showing the French war pictures, and as the showing was in conjunction with the local paper they had all the space they desired at their command and pages, halves and thirds were plentiful—and well arranged. One line from the advertising is good enough to be copied. It runs:

> At first to the casual observer it may seem surprising that the French general staff have soldier operators at the front, but modern warfare is a systematized machine. No commander is in a position to realize the whole of a continent. Motion pictures bring the integral parts together, and the great general staff review all that is happening. Hence the skill with which these pictures were taken and the close-up feeling they give the spectator.

Many regard with suspicion the display of war pictures, but this anticipates the natural objection and disarms it. It comes very nicely when the local paper works in with the exhibitor, but after the page stuff is stopped it is a good plan to taper the advertising gradually when a return is made to house stuff. Do not let the drop become too noticeable.

Their Second.

Sharp and Vahl, of the Orpheum, Nampa, Idaho, have been celebrating their second consecutive anniversary. The Farrar Carmen was the attraction and it was advertised in a neat leaflet in brown on brown with a neat salutation to patrons on the back page that lacks only a signature to make it complete. Modesty is all right, but this is the time that the signature should have been used and preferably the two individual signatures rather than the firm style. They still bring out their Reel-ism each week and make it work for them by using house talk.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid. $2.00

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Looking Ahead.

VARIOUS and sundry boobs have sought to "put the boots" to Roy McCardell for his recent letter, and they have done so by means of the usual boob tactics of abuse without argument. It takes something more than that to controvert facts. As a matter of fact Mr. McCardell, like most of those at the top is merely seeking to point the way to those who are possessed of mental vision. The men who are in the game in a really business-like way are not numerous enough to keep the stories up to the standard. More are needed and still more will be needed when "wise" money comes in. Lately there have been reports that business money was coming into the pictures. William Randolph Hearst and Thomas F. Ryan have been mentioned in connection with various deals, and Mr. Hearst is very largely interested already and merely seeks to increase his holdings.

Few who are not in touch with financial affairs realize the diversity of interests represented by the groups of men who are in more or less close affiliation. One very large corporation for instance has such large investments in the amusement business that it maintains a staff of information men or detectives and this is but one of the lines in which the profits of the individual members of the corporation is invested. Few of these large interests came in on the boom. It was too easy, then, for anyone with a little money. There was too much competition. Now that it takes real money and management to run a film company and some of the old timers are getting into deep water, these men are ready to step in and put the business on a business basis. They will not be content to let directors do as they please about scripts. They will demand good stories well made and they generally get what they are after in the long run. They will make a new market and a good one for the man who can make good, and the "fluke" with friends will be out of the running. It is for these times that the real writers have not only been preparing but have sought to prepare others. It is not disinterested charity but a desire to see a supply to meet the demand.

Many short-sighted editors prate about synopses only and all the rest, but the script that will sell in the time to come will be the complete manuscript of action told in coherent expression. In those happy times the script will not be changed to suit the director, but the director, if necessary, will be changed to suit the script. In other words, if he cannot make it, the work will go to someone who can.

The basis of all stories, as Mr. McCardell says, is not alone the story but its manner of telling. He places the matter succinctly in this extract from a recent letter:

> In books, in plays for the speaking stage and for the screen in every form of art and literature the plot the pose or the subject is secondary. Construction is everything. A dozen painters may paint a Madonna, but the Raphael Madonna will be the most appealing. Dickens and a writer for the Chambermaid's Weekly may have the same plot. But Dickens writes a masterpiece and the contributor to the Chambermaid's Weekly writes slush. There are only some seven plots with their variations in the relations of human beings to each other and the actions and reactions of their loves and hatreds, but the writer of imagination and painstaking industry will build a new story, seemingly, by a new variation of one of the old plots.
> On the eight notes of music the master harmonies are based. But how many years of study and practice does it take to make a great musician? With all this—for success in any phase of art or literature—there must also be the inclination, the desire, the aptitude and the industry which, all combined, we designate as "Genius."
> Every noted and capable artist or writer was once a beginner. He worked and studied and tried, in the face of years of bitter disappointment and failure, to obtain recognition. The trouble with the average amateur photoplaywright is that he wishes the reward before he has done the work. He desires the gains but he will not take the pains. If you counsel him, he abuses you.

Keeping Up Sales.

To the plaint of the man who cannot sell at all must now be added the lamentations of the man who used to sell and who cannot longer do so. He is certain that the business has gone to perdition or at least is going fast. The fact is that some of the early writers have not kept pace with things. They made good in the early days with a certain grade of work and they keep on turning out that grade, never realizing that what sufficed four or five years ago will never do now.

There was a time when the cheapest painted background was accepted as being good enough. Now interior sets are carefully and elaborately planned and the set is dressed with a skill that the old property men were never permitted to exercise. For more elaborate plays the settings may even be real rooms lighted with portable arcs. The mechanical side has advanced and the literary side must show the same advancement or there can be no real advance. A cheap book may be set in a cheap binding, but morocco suggests something worth while. In the same way it would be foolish to seek to make a scenic production of a worthless play and so dramas to match the production are sought for and if the old writers can no longer supply this grade of work, new ones must be developed.

If you would march in the procession you must keep step with the band. You must write better stories on bigger themes. You must make better use of effects and handle your scenes more intelligently. You must keep pace with production or else fall to the rear and give place to those who can.

Breaking Multiples.

Alice C. Brown writes of multiples that seem to break before the end and tells of one that came to a dead stop at the end of the third reel. After the climax (and it was the climax of the play) they ran on for two more reels to a weak finish, using stuff that could as well have been run before the end of the third reel.

This is an all too common fault both with amateur and professional writers. They run the story to its natural and indicated end, find they have not enough and add more material to carry on the action instead of trying to build up the material used before the climax. It really means, of course, that the story was indicated for three reels, but if they feel they must have more they should put it in before the climax and not string along and along until the yardstick measures the right length.

This is a comparatively simple matter if it is approached properly. You can add to previous action as easily as you can add subsequent action but this will, of course, necessitate tearing the script apart to insert the added material and too many authors are too lazy to do this.

Synopsis Prices.

"What is the average price paid for synopses only?" is a question that threatens to put "How may I tell what makes a reel?" into second place. The average price for synopsis only is the unknown quantity x. It is obtained by adding three dollars, the minimum price paid for a five-reel idea, to $750 said to be the top price for a five-reel regular synopsis. You divide this by two and add or subtract from this the company's individual factor as represented by their generosity or lack of it.

There is no average price nor anything approaching it. It depends on the company, the script and the apparent degree of stupidity of the author. It cannot be more accurately rated, since synopses differ so materially in value, some being no more than the bare idea and others a reasonably full synopsis of the complete action. With a synopsis so full that it will make a complete play with nothing added, the minimum price should be $25 and from there it may run to double that sum, but it is seldom that the synopsis alone will bring above fifty dollars, and there is some reason for this, since the studio must pay some competent person to build the idea into a complete plot of action, and this is worth money.

Stove Lengths.

When the editor "returns with regret" he may have his fingers crossed.

Two wrongs do not make a right, but two poor scripts may be worked into one good one.

The quickest way to get a check is to study and master your business.

If success could be bought, it would not be worth the money.

If you cannot learn through writing a hundred scripts, write two hundred, or perhaps three.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 132.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

In a projected picture it often occurs that the wheels of a moving wagon will either appear to stand still or revolve backwards. How do you explain this? In some films the figures move at impossible speed, men and women jump to the top of impossibly high walls with slight effort. How is this accomplished? Objects and inanimate figures are often made to seemingly move of themselves. How is this done?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 125.

The Roll of Honor on Question 125 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; Bert Meester, Hobart, Indiana; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Maryland; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Florida; Charles S. Stuckey, Edmonton, Canada; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; Walter Bryner, Springfield, Illinois; Arthur H. Cuff, Gravenhurst, Canada; T. C. Shipley, Lincoln, Nebraska; James H. Pooley, Toledo, Ohio; F. H. Marx, Ashland, Wisconsin; Jamie McAdoo, Hamilton, Missouri, and C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, New York.

I have selected the reply of Brother Crawford as best suited for publication.

Reply to Question No. 125.

By W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Question:

Explain how the rectifier is started, and exactly what happens in the entire process. Suppose you had a G. E. mercury arc rectifier working on 110 volt supply from one side of a three-wire system, and were ordered to connect to the two outside wires, thus jumping the supply voltage to 220, what would you do?

The Answer:

A mercury arc rectifier is started and maintained in operation as follows: With the closing of the switches and the carbons the shaking magnet is excited and pulls a plunger which has the effect of tipping or rocking the tube so that the mercury in the starting anode forms a mercury bridge between this anode and the mercury cathode. As soon as this happens current flows through the various parts of the rectifier back to the generator. This has the effect of weakening the current which excites the shaking magnet to such an extent that the plunger moves backward and the tube returns to a vertical position, thus breaking the current-carrying mercury bridge. When this happens it is the same as the opening of the switch, and the current arcs slightly between the two ends of the mercury, thus producing a spark, which has the effect of creating within the tube a supply of ironized mercury vapor which is a conductor of current, and allows of the current passing from the carbon anode to the main mercury cathode, and thus on through the arc. This is called the "excitation" of the tube, and can be kept up only while the current is flowing toward the cathode. To maintain steady flow during the alternations of the current, the main reactance and regulating reactance is brought into play, as was explained in the reply to Question 123. I think that the foregoing, in conjunction with reply to Question 123, explains the whole matter fully.

To use the rectifier on 220 volts, I would connect lead 32 to stud 13, as per diagram page 177, second edition of the Handbook.

Transformer Construction.

Some few operators who like to experiment have asked for some book giving instructions for the building of transformers.

The Modern Publishing Company, 32 Union Square, New York City, put out a booklet of almost one hundred pages covering this topic. They have submitted one of these booklets for examination, and I believe those interested will find it well worth its price—25 cents. Drawings, measurements, etc., are given, as well as the various necessary tables, together with an explanation of the theory involved.

Stage Hands Getting Interested.

The following is a paragraph from a letter received from a New Orleans operator who works in a large vaudeville house:

> With regard to the official I. A. journal, I would suggest that if you wish to sell a great many more copies of the new Handbook, you place an advertisement in the official journal telling all the benefits to be derived from a study of its pages, as every stage hand, property man, electrician and many fly men are getting interested in becoming motion picture machine operators. Most of them subscribe to the official journal, and since it has entered the field, I hear many of them declare they will take this branch up.

I do not think, New Orleans, it will be necessary to thus advertise the Handbook, nor do I wish to cater to that sort of thing. The Handbook advertises itself AMONG OPERATORS, and that is where I want it advertised. If stage hands are going to butt into the moving picture operating game en masse, why let them serve an apprenticeship, the same as any one else. They cannot learn operating from the Handbook, any more than can any other novice, but the operator can improve himself and his work by a study of the book in question, and improve it very greatly, too.

Waiting At the Church.

A. L. Lemere (I am guessing at the Lemere part. It looks like it might be that, though it also might be Chinese for Roosevelt), Windsor, Connecticut, says:

> I am always waiting for the World to come, and it no sooner arrives than my nose is buried in the department. I have a Handbook and the Hawkins' Guide. Have read both until the letters are almost worn out. I notice that many operators praise the Handbook. Well, I don't in the least blame them, for it is all they say it is, and then some. I want the first new book hot off the press, as the old one has taught me all I know, and when a man knows what is in the Handbook he can get by with a good salary. Nevertheless, I still have much knowledge to acquire and expect to get it from the new work. In the last issue you said you were going to take a trip, and wanted to meet with some of the locals. Well, you are not coming this way; also we have no local. Allee samee we stand together (that is some of us do), and certainly would do our best to give you a good time. With regard to projection in northern Connecticut, why it is very good, practically everywhere, but in Windsor Locks we have some real crank turners, and they are all of that too. Where I work we have an old Standard that is pretty well shot to pieces; still am proud to say I manage to get results.
> There is one house in this neck of the woods where the projection is distinctly rotten, and another in which the operator gets the splendid salary of seventy-five cents a day. Some pay for an operator, but the boss likes him and that is the reason. I don't know how he ever got a license. I have not seen his work myself, but have heard it is pretty punk. Well, what can you expect for seventy-five cents a day? All the other houses, however, pay the money, and have the pictures shown right; also all the men are members of the I. O. of N. C., meaning Independent Operators of Northern Connecticut. I have been trying to form a local, and finally did get them together in an independent organization, and we are getting along very good.

Well, brother, I am glad to know that the men have gotten together, even though it be an independent organization. I would suggest, however, that you would be far better off to join with other operators in the I. A. T. S. E. It would be very much better for all concerned. An independent organization can do something, but nothing like it ought to. Moreover your membership is of no value to you anywhere except in northern Connecticut. Get into the National organization is my advice.

As to your remarks concerning projection and wages, they are passed along without comment, because comment is, I think, unnecessary. A manager who in this day and age will hire an operator for seventy-five cents a day is, I think, a bit of a joke—though a very bad one; this to be qualified by the fact that in very small villages ordinary rules do not apply, but Windsor Locks does not come under that heading for this purpose.

Who Wants a Power's Five?

I know where I can get a Power's Five, said to be in A1 condition, complete with lenses, lamphouse, carrying case and trunk for shipping, for an even fifty dollars. Who wants it?

Wagner Rotary Converter.

The one real purpose of my visit to St. Louis was to look into the merits of the Wagner Rotary Converter, manufactured by the Wagner Electric Manufacturing Company of that city.

The Wagner Company has invited the St. Louis Local, and the East St. Louis local to visit their plant at 10 a. m., Monday, February 21st, to witness a demonstration of the Wagner outfit, examine into its [illegible] consider equipment and to listen to a talk by [illegible]

T. T. [illegible] and H. Weichsel [illegible] entertained [illegible] a full attendance of all the operators, due to the fact that the day shift goes on duty at ten o'clock, but, although the Wagner Plant lies far out in the outskirts, there was an attendance of between eight and ninety. The Wagner Company had provided a very nice lunch for the boys, to which they did ample justice.

I talked for almost an hour and a half, and then listened with much interest to Messrs. Richards and Weichsel. The latter explained the theory upon which the Wagner Rotary Converter is constructed, illustrating his talk with blackboard chalk-drawn diagrams. The men were decidedly interested, and I think that a very large number of them for the first time were brought to a realization of the importance to them of studying the technical details of their profession.

The Wagner Company is a very wide awake concern and fully realizes the value of the possible business to be secured through and by the moving picture industry, and are bending every effort to improve their apparatus so that it will meet the requirements of practical projection in the best possible way.

F, figure 1 is the converter, a detailed view of which is had in Fig. 2. A is the polarity changing switch; B the starting and running switch; C the alternating current supply switch; D the transformer which steps down the pressure from line voltage to the voltage of the arc, and E is a resistance which, in the latter outfits, has mounted on the face of it a dial switch by means of which the operator is enabled not only to warm up the carbons of the second lamp, but to switch over to the second machine merely by the manipulation of a single lever.

Transformer D (Fig. 1) has several contacts, by means of which the voltage value at the alternating current end of converter F may be altered to suit the local condition of line pressure.

In Fig. 2 A is the armature, B is the alternating current slip rings, D is the direct current commutator; F the main frame containing the field; E the one end piece carrying the alternating current brushes; G the other end piece carrying the direct current brushes.

The efficiency of the machine itself runs very close to 70, but this is reduced by the necessary resistance used in series with the arc, until it is brought down to somewhere between 60 and 68, depending upon local conditions.

The Wagner machine is mechanically very well built, the insulation is very efficient. The number of commutator bars is high, which makes for evenness of current value at the arc. The greater number of commutator bars, within reason of course, the less pulsation there will be in the resultant direct current, and conversely, the less number of commutator bars, the greater will be the pulsation of current; but after you pass a certain number the gain beyond that is in practice, very slight, by reason of the fact that the pulsation has already been reduced to a practically negligible quantity.

I talked with Mr. Richards, and with Mr. Weichsel, and the impression gained from those gentlemen is that the Wagner Company is willing at any time to make any change which experience may indicate is necessary to the improvement of their apparatus from the projection point of view, and this is the right and the only position to take.

At the demonstration the Wagner Company made no attempt to have its experts handle the apparatus. They just simply turned the crowd loose on one of the machines. They said: "There's the current, and the machines. Go to it and experiment to your hearts content"—which was a proposition promptly accepted by as many operators as could get around, over, and almost under the apparatus.

The change over from one reel to the other can be accomplished, I believe, with but little evidence of the effect on the screen, but it requires some practice on the part of the operator to become proficient in that particular proposition. The burning in of the carbon may be accomplished while the picture is on the screen.

In fact, summing up the whole situation with regard to the Wagner, it is mechanically a very well constructed piece of apparatus which has an electrical efficiency comparing favorably with other similar machines, and it is an apparatus the operator can handle successfully after he has been duly introduced to it and become intimately acquainted with its peculiarities.

Comment on Answer to Question 115.

John Solar, Watertown, New York, commenting on question 115, says:

> Why the outside shutter gives better results than the inside one: In the smallest point of the light cone in front of the lens, the point at which the shutter should be worked, every point is a complete image of the object being projected, consequently the instant the shutter allows any part of the cone to pass we have a complete image at the screen, and, as the shutter allows more light to pass, more images are projected, thus increasing the brilliancy of the image at the screen until its full value is reached. The same in reverse is true when the shutter begins to cut the ray, therefore, in the case of the outside shutter, we have a complete image gradually increasing or diminishing in brilliancy as the shutter moves in and out of the ray. At a point between the film and the lens where the inside shutter is working we do not have a complete image in every point of the light cone or pyramid, consequently nearly the whole cone must be allowed to pass in order to get a complete image at the screen. We, therefore, in this case, have different parts of the image projected in sequence. To prove this cut the light gradually at working points of the two different shutters, using a piece of sheet metal instead of a shutter, and observe the results on the screen.

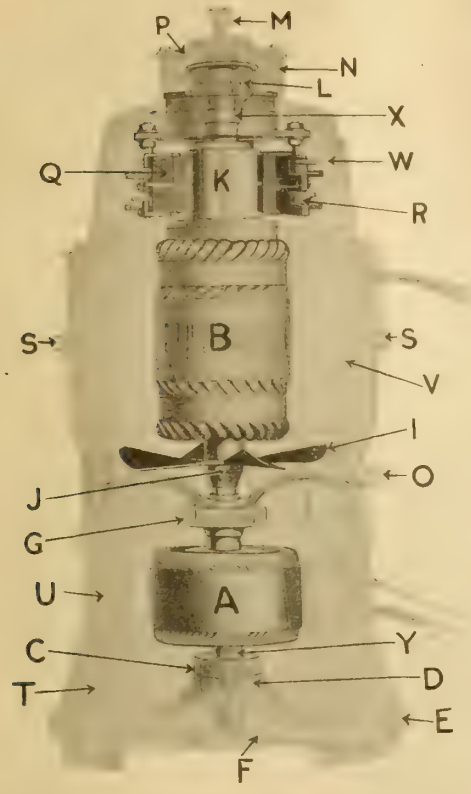
All of which is another interesting experiment, and, moreover, Brother Solar's remarks are, I think, correct. He is therefore entitled to swell up as much as he gol durned pleases.

Descriptive Pamphlet.

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, New York City, has received from the printer a descriptive illustrated eight page pamphlet, describing the Hallberg 20th Century Motor Generator Set. This pamphlet may be had free by interested managers and operators who ask for it, addressing J. H. Hallberg, 36 East 23d street, New York City. It will give you a very good idea of the contribution and general characteristics of the outfit.

The Transverter.

Over in Cleveland, Ohio, the Hertner Electric & Mfg. Company, whose address may be secured from their advertisement on another page, is building a new and in many respects unique motor generator set for the purpose of rectifying alternating current for motion picture projection; the underlying idea of the machine being to deliver constant amperage at variable voltage. This machine is being known as the "Transverter." The machine is small, compact and of the vertical armature type. The base is round and the floor space occupied 18 inches in diameter. The vertical height over all will vary from 33 inches in the 35 ampere machine to 45 inches in the 75 ampere type.



While in Cleveland I examined into the merits of this machine as closely as my limited time and opportunities would permit, and must say that the company placed at my disposal every facility within their power for making a test and detailed examination.

Referring to the illustration, "A" is the alternating rotor or armature; "B" is the direct current armature, and "K," the commutator. At the bottom of the armature shaft is shown a thrust bearing D (ball bearing). This consists of a steel housing containing the ball race, upon which rests a hardened steel flat-topped cone, into which fits the end of the armature shaft. This carries the weight of the rotor, and the end of the shaft is held central on thrust bearing D by radial bearing C. This seems to be a very excellent arrangement, and should give a minimum of wear and trouble. Tube F connects with this bearing and through it grease is forced from cup E, and here lies the only possibility of trouble. You must either purchase your grease directly from the manufacturer, or you must be very sure that you get a high class lubricant which is free from acid, because if you get a cheap, acid grease, what it will do to a delicate ball bearing is a shame to tell. This applies not only to the transverter, but to all other machines having ball bearings, but there will be no trouble if you are careful to secure a non-acid grease. The manufacturer recommends the use of non-medicated vaseline. This you may not think agrees with my former recommendation regarding the lubrication of projection machine intermittent movements with vaseline, but as a matter of fact the proposition is a different one, as ball bearings do not need the extreme efficiency of lubrication that is required in an intermittent movement. Alternating current rotor A is slotted on its surface, and through these slots the copper wires are drawn together in a mass at either end, and acetylene welded into a solid mass which forms, it seems to me, an ideal construction, in that no amount of heat less than that necessary to entirely destroy the apparatus would have any serious effect upon it. Just above rotor A is the radial bearing G, the alternating rotor and the DC armature being carried on separate shafts which are joined together by the keyed steel coupling J, upon which is mounted fan I which sucks the air in around the alternating current rotor A and forces it up through and past the DC windings and armature. Bearing G merely serves to steady the two shafts at their junction, reduce vibration and eliminate the strain on the coupling J. Direct current armature B requires no extended description. It is built up in the usual fashion, and at its upper end is commutator K, the bars of which are made of hard drawn copper, with undercut insulation. The manufacturer claims it to be a practical impossibility for these bars to work loose, but should they do so, provision is made for tightening them up; also when the bars, in course of time require renewal, the process of disassembling and assembling the commutator is comparatively simple. At the upper end we find radial bearing L, which steadies the upper end of the direct current armature shaft, the same being lubricated by grease cup M. Top P is removable by taking out hexagon headed screws in its upper section.

Bearing L is removed simply by taking off cap P and unscrewing cap ring which you will see, the same having two ears on its upper surface. Having removed this cap piece you can pull the bearing out. Under cap P, and surrounding the top of bearing L, is a sort of reservoir. This serves the following purpose: Should too much grease be supplied in bearing L it would be forced up through the top of the cap cover and be thrown off by centrifugal force into this reservoir, so that surplus grease cannot possibly find its way into the commutator and thus cause damage.

The brush holder construction is of the type ordinarily used for electric automobile work, and also for other classes of generators. There are two sets of brushes and tension is supplied thereto by usual finger and coil spring arrangement with two notches giving two different degrees or pressure. The brushes have a copper pig-tail, which eliminates any danger of drawing the temper of the springs by overloading them with current.

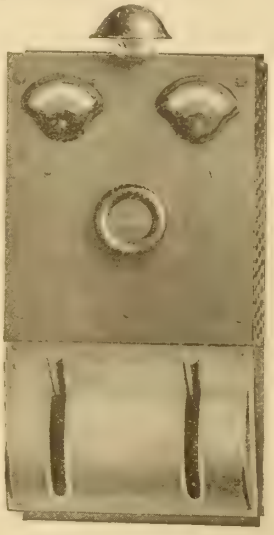
The machine is well ventilated, and those I have seen are well balanced, producing but little vibration. The construction is rigid, and the weight while of course pretty substantial, as it must be in well constructed machines of this kind, is apparently kept at the lowest efficiency maximum. The openings in cap casting W allows the operator free access to the commutator brushes. The machine is readily disassembled for hoisting into the operating room.

In order to obtain the operating characteristics desired on this machine for this class of work, and to secure sparkless commutation, interpoles have been provided and are arranged to be adjustable as to their location with reference to the main poles of the machine. At the time of the factory test these interpoles are so located that commutation is sparkless at normal load, and that the current characteristic of the machine is will be hereinafter described.

This interpole adjustment is only designed to be brought into use at the time of the factory test and adjustment. The operator should never attempt to change this adjustment, unless, of course, he is out gunning for trouble, in which case he will probably get it, and in plenty, too. Let this adjustment alone. There will never be any circumstance which would call for its change.

A generator shunt field regulator provides the operator with a means of adjusting the transverter's amperage delivery at the arc. The range of adjustment for amperes above and below normal capacity rating of the machine amply provide for any ordinary variation in film densities. Neat and compactly designed panels having, in addition to the field regulator, such conveniences for the operator as voltmeter and ammeter and lamp controlling switches may be obtained with the motor generator unit.

While in Cleveland I witnessed a remarkable demonstration of the ability of this machine to maintain constant current at variable arc voltage, out at the Homstead theater, where one had been in operation for some little time. We set the arc working at 50 volts and 50 amperes and then stood and watched it until the arc voltage mounted from 50 to 80, by reason of the burning away of the carbons, and during that time the following is what took place: For perhaps the first minute or two there was a gradual rise in amperage, until it reached approximately 54, and from that time forward there was no appreciable change at all in the amperage until the voltage had mounted to 80, whereupon I opened the arc to, amazing as the statement seems, approximately 1¼ inches in length, without the slightest change taking place in the amperage delivery, and finally, after reaching about 1¼ inches in length, the arc did not break, but the amperage began to jump. I watched the spot during the mounting of the voltage from 50 to 80, and beyond the necessity for occasionally raising the spot as the carbon burned away, there was but little apparent change in light value, though of course the spot was thrown off the focus, and the illumination would undoubtedly have been injured to some extent before the voltage would reach 80. This I regard as a very remarkable demonstration, and more than that, a demonstration having distinct value from several points of view.



I also watched the change-over from one machine to the other. Between the two machines are mounted two single-pole switches, and I'm not going to tell you at this time just what this means, but give you a little chance to exercise your brains on the proposition. The operator opened one of these switches, after first stepping over to the lamp of the dead machine and manipulating one of its controls. He then sprung the arc on the second machine, whereupon the voltage, which had been 50, almost instantly mounted to 100, but although there were two perfect arcs and the illumination was apparently not appreciably affected on the first machine, still the ammeter read 50 amperes, so that we had two arcs, each drawing 50 amperes, with a generator only furnishing a total of 50 and with an arc voltage at either machine at 50.

There, that is simple enough. How many can tell me what happened? I will of course tell you later on, but I want to see how many of you can solve that simple proposition. My first impression was that the thing might be somewhat difficult to handle, with some danger of putting out the first arc, but the operator informs me he had been handling the machine for quite some time, and that it was nothing of the sort, and moreover further consideration shows that this would not be the fact provided of course that ordinary care and intelligence be used in handling the operation.

To sum this whole matter up, after a careful examination into the construction and the electrical operation of the transverter, backed up by efficiency tests made in my presence, I am fully prepared to say that the transverter is well constructed, along good mechanical lines, has electrical efficiency which will compare favorably with that of other similar apparatus, and contains features which have, or ought to have, distinct value in operating room practice. This much I can say at this time. Later on when I have had reports from several operators who have run this machine for a period of months, I may perhaps be prepared to go even further. But as the matter stands at present I can recommend the transverter to the careful consideration of the moving picture theater manager and operator. In addition to the letters named the picture bears the following: Q—DC brushes; W—lower top casting; R—brush tension springs; S—studs to hold inter-poles; V—casting forming DC armature field; O—grease cup for bearing G; V—lower housing casting carrying AC, pole pieces; Y—AC armature shaft and T the lower, or base casting.

In Harrisburg.

At Harrisburg the men decided to make the occasion of my visit the time for the first annual banquet of Local Union No. 318, to which all Harrisburg managers were invited. During the interim between my arrival and the hour of the "doings" I visited two theaters, viz: the Colonial and the Victoria. At the first named, Manager Walter Yost, the first moving picture man I met in Harrisburg, did the honors and bade me welcome to the city. The Colonial has less to justify criticism, from the projection point of view, than any house viewed in the entire trip. The Minusa Gold Fibre screen has a wide border of either black, or a very dark color, and there is no light of any kind near it, except that used for the clock, and it is carefully confined to the exact circle of the clock dial; also it is not at all brilliant, and therefore unobjectionable. I watched the projection for several moments while they were hunting up Brother Yost, and while the light was brilliant, there were constantly recurring shadows on screen—carelessness, pure and simple, on the part of the operator. But let it be noted, in this connection, that the regular operator, Brother H. W. Smith, was not on duty, he being away on the road running "The Battle Cry of Peace" or "The Birth of a Nation," I forget which. The operating room of the Colonial aside from its being located too high up and having a bad entrance, is the first room I have seen on this entire trip which contained practically nothing to criticise. To begin with the lens ports are small, as they should be, but the observation ports are about 14 x 24 inches; and the walls and ceiling are dull black. There was but little light—one small, shaded frosted globe for the ammeter and voltmeter, and one very small frosted globe in the ceiling. Current is supplied by a Wotten Rexolux, the machine being in an adjoining room but the controls and ammeter and voltmeter placed against the front wall between the projectors. There are two rheostats for use in case of emergency, placed near the ceiling. A vent flue with exhaust fan in the ceiling supplies ample ventilation. The projectors are two Powers Six A. The master-rod supporting the fire shutters is brought down in front of the upper magazines and the fire links are held in place just over the machine apertures. If the link were film, instead of metal the arrangement would be ideal. The room is scrupulously clean. In an adjoining room is a large work bench and tools, also the Wotten. My compliments to Manager Yost and his chief operator, Brother Smith, also his assistant operator Brother Charles Mater. If the room was lower down it would be mighty nearly perfect. The Colonial seats 1,600, admission 5 and 10 cents, 20 cents for loge boxes.

Manager Yost took us up to see that monument to official graft, the Pennsylvania State House, and a beautiful structure it is, though it was necessary to cover the stairway at its front entrance and make fully a dozen cut-outs. It might be added however that before the State of Pennsylvania does away entirely of motion picture films it would do exceedingly well to order still more eliminations in the decorations of its official front door. Personally I would suggest the vigorous use of an axe. So long as Pennsylvania stands for what I saw at the main entrance to its capitol building it certainly has no legitimate kick at anything likely to be shown on the screens of its moving picture theaters.

At the Victoria I found the operating room to be small, located at the top of a high gallery and 167 feet from the screen. The observation ports are too narrow and there was a blaze of light in the room which was not pardonable. Though Brother S. R. Fissom, secretary of the local, chief operator at the Victoria, tells me it will be as soon as alterations now under way are completed.

On the stage of the Majestic theater a vaudeville house, I met Mr. Arthur L. Cobb, president of the local. Brother Cobb is stage manager of the Majestic, and a good one too, so its said. Certainly he is a most pleasant gentleman whom one is glad to know.

At the ghastly hour when editors, operators, theater managers and graves begin to yawn I was conducted to Harrisburg's last word in fooderies, and there and then I was introduced to every manager and operator in and of the Capital City, also to a most excellent spread, beginning with bivalves and ending with smokes, after which decks were cleared for action and the editor's oratorial batteries unlimbered. The cannonade of hard-boiled projection facts continued vigorously until 2 a. m., and the consensus of opinion as expressed by both managers and operators afterward, was that they had learned many things entirely new to them, and that what we had said would make for a better understanding between Harrisburg managers and operators and better work in Harrisburg.

President Cobb presided, and covered himself with glory. I've only known Cobb for a few hours, but am prepared to say he is the right sort. I hope to go-devil down to Harrisburg next summer, and have the pleasure of meeting you all again.

Ludwig Hommel & Company.

Over in the Smoky City, by the raging waters of the Allegheny, there is a firm known to local and otherwise fame as Ludwig Hommel & Company, which distinguished corporation deals in everything from a roll of tickets to a complete theater. You can get from them any old thing you want in the way of theater supplies, and get it on short notice, too. Messrs. Ludwig Hommel & Company have been in business in the city of Pittsburgh for these ten years, and I may say that, of my own personal knowledge they have established a reputation which is A No. 1, first class, which same may only be done by honest, straightforward dealing.

The projection machine sales of the company run up to several hundred per year, and while I, of course, do not know what the other business amounts to, yet it certainly will total many thousands of dollars.

The floor space of the quarters the company has been occupying for the past four years is becoming too limited, and preparation is being made to move to a new and more commodious building.

I was much interested in the display, or projection room the company maintains. It is something like 15 x 20 feet in size, without any appearance of crowding, there are five projection machines, four of them connected, through a double-throw switch, to both a choke coil and a Wagner rotary converter, all ready to produce practical demonstration as to their points of excellence. At the other end of the room is a small Minusa screen, and in the center is the seating space composed of samples of seats. Along the front wall under the screen are arranged motor-generator sets. The ceiling is a mass of lighting fixtures of all kinds, wired and all ready to show to prospective purchasers. On the back wall are racks containing goods of various kinds. On the left wall is a frame containing stereopticon slides, with lights behind them. There are poster frames, ticket choppers, ticket selling machines, perfume and ventilating fans, perfume cones, admission signs, framed photographs of stars, etc., and notwithstanding the great amount of goods, the room does not appear crowded.

Back of the display room is a repair shop and shipping department. On the eighth floor of the building are rooms where reserve stock is carried.

Philadelphia.

I had not planned a stop at Philadelphia, but circumstances at the last moment made a three-hour stop seem advisable, so I wrote Brother Walter Murray from Harrisburg, and, to my surprise, found that gentleman, Brother Louis Krause, business agent, City of Brotherly Love, L. U. No. 307, and another brother, whose name I am desolate to admit got lost somewhere in the midst of the proceedings, waiting at the depot.

The boys took me down to union headquarters, just around the corner from where the cop stands guard, and we had a general handshake with all the men on tap at the time including Vice President J. J. Stevens and Financial Secretary-Treasurer John Harris, who pulled a pocketbook the size of a young suitcase; it was full of regular money, too—the kind Uncle Samuel honors at the Treasury.

I am more than glad to say that Local Union 307 reports progress and lots of it, too, within the past year.

The organization has real comfortable, commodious quarters, including a pool table, reading and play room, meeting hall and office, which latter is shared by the stage hands' local.

Brother Krause took us all out to lunch and we spent a very pleasant hour discussing the viands and other things. The other boys then had to report to work, so Krause took me down to the Stanley theater, where Brother Goldstein is chief operator. We also met the manager, an old time operator and member of the I. A.

Projection at the Stanley is distinctly high class. The action is steady as a rock, the speed correct and the light brilliant. The projectors are Simplex. The pitch in projection is extremely steep, which is unfortunate. It is a shame that the screen results in such an otherwise thoroughly excellent house should be thus marred.

(The End.)

Road Show.

Harry Bowman Jr., Greensboro, North Carolina, sends in the accompanying photograph of his black top. Sorry, Brother Bowman, you did not give any details. Come across, old man. A bit of your experience and a description of the outfit would make good reading.

From Schenectady.

In describing my visit to Schenectady I told you that the Schenectady men had organized a society within the union, largely with the idea of keeping the educational and social funds of the union entirely separate. They called it the American Society of Projection Engineers. The following is just received from its secretary, Luther P. Mynderse.

> I take this opportunity to express to you the gratitude of the Schenectady operators for the big boost you gave us on your visit here. Since the night of the smoker things have improved wonderfully, and now practically all the operators in this city are evincing a desire to work with the society in the education of ourselves in our profession. The managers also seem to realize, thanks to you, that the machines in their operating rooms are really something more than a coffee pot. We are now working on the light ray dope, preparing a lecture on that subject, and we find it to be very interesting. I myself will freely admit that I never before realized the value of a proper lens system. Messrs. McClellan, and Russell of the General Electric have kindly consented to give us some inside information on rectifiers, so you see we are getting a fine start.

In closing, I wish in the name of Schenectady operators and managers to thank you sincerely, and express the hope that you will be able to again visit us and give us more information on the real meaning of the term projection.

Mercury Arc Rectifier Trouble.

H. B. Franks, Macomb, Illinois, says:

Just installed a mercury arc rectifier (What kind?—Ed.), and am having trouble with it. The electric light folks did the installing, but are as much in the dark as am I. We have 60 cycle, 115 volt current, and the rectifier has 40 ampere capacity. When it was first hooked up we got an elegant light, but after four days the tube would not light and we could not strike an arc, although there would be some current at the lamp. The electric light people said the tube was gone, so we got another, but could not get anywhere near the light we got with the first tube, and after about four days it quit the same way the first one did, and we can't strike an arc, although when we bring the carbons together we can see there is some juice at the lamp. Would you kindly advise me as to where the trouble lies?

Well you have not told me whether it is a General Electric or a Westinghouse, but presuming it to be a General Electric only for the fact that the second tube lit up at all, I would say the trouble lies in the fuses on the front of the panel—one of them blown. You can blow one of the fuses on the panel of the rectifier and still get a spark at the arc. If you put in new fuses on the front of the panel when you installed the new tube I guess that is where your trouble is, although I cannot see why you did not get as good light as with the first, unless the new tube had a smaller capacity, or an incomplete vacuum, or your relay which governs the resistance which is cut in contact with the tube when the arc is struck, and automatically cut out again by the relay after the arc voltage reaches 50, does not work. But after all it is impossible to answer your question with any degree of certainty without knowing the kind of rectifier, or the type. I am not sure this resistance is on the 40 ampere type, though, on the other hand, you may simply have a 40 ampere tube with the maximum size rectifier. Inquirers should be very careful to send FULL AND COMPLETE information when asking questions of this kind. Too much information won't do any harm, but too little is distinctly bad. If my guess is right as to the kind and type rectifier you have, and what I have said don't fit the trouble, then you will simply have to trace out all the wiring with a magneto, and it will take an electrician to do that. You can tell whether the tube is O. K. or not by rolling the mercury from one end to the other. If the vacuum is good there will be a crackling sound.

Best in Oklahoma.

J. R. George, Okmulgee, Oklahoma, sends in $2.50 for a copy of the new Handbook, and says:

Enclosed find picture of our operating room which is, we believe, the best in Oklahoma. The photograph does not show it all, but you can see enough to know that it is a first class installation. The room is 25 feet long, 11 feet wide and is one of the coolest places I ever stepped into. (You ought to have been here in Little Old New York in early January. I think I could have shown you quite a number of places that were distinctly cooler—though not operating rooms.—Ed.) There is a door at each end, a 30 inch vent pipe at the top, two windows that open into the lobby, and a 24 inch pipe in the end not shown. We have a D. C. generator for each machine (only one shown in the picture). Using 40 to 50 amperes at the arc, projecting a 16 foot picture at 70 feet, with, as you see, Power's Six A motor driven machines. I presume you will speculate as to the use of the string that runs from the first machine up to the ceiling and down to the second. Well it is so arranged that when I start one machine it cuts off the light from the other one, so that the pictures are automatically dissolved into each other.

As to the installation, it certainly is a corking good one. The only possible criticism at any point would be the open switchboard. You ought to have a railing in front of it high enough to prevent any one from coming into accidental contact with the board should any one chance to stumble, or anything of that sort. Yes, there is one other point that I would mildly criticise, and that is the ammeters, voltmeters, and field rheostat control would better be placed on the wall in front of the operator where he can see them practically all the time. Now, old man, don't imagine I don't admire your installation. It is a bully good one, but, even so, I find it might be made a little better by the things suggested. You may say there is no need for the railing. Well, I could give you several reasons other than that quoted why a switchboard should be guarded, at least to that extent. Your ventilation system certainly is ample. I wish I could say as much, or even one-tenth as much, for some operating rooms. Your observation ports also seem to be of generous size, though I do not see any fire shutters, and that is something you ought to have. You probably will never have a fire, but ——. You certainly have spared no expense. Two motor generator sets is "going some." My compliments to you. I would recommend your operating room installation to other managers as a good guide to follow.

The Best Way.

M. C. Lee, Denver, Colorado, says:

What would you consider the best way, money outlay taken into consideration, also time and practicability, to acquire the necessary knowledge to pass the necessary city or state examination for operator?

Get a position as apprentice to an operator in a moving picture theater, procure the Handbook, and Hawkin's Guide, and combine your practical work with the study of them and the projection department. That is the only way to do it if you want to do it right. You might as well make up your mind that you can't learn to be a real operator in a week, or by a correspondence course. If you learn to be a real operator in two years you will have done very well indeed.

Hamfat Crank Twister.

A. D. R. Simmerman, Sioux Rapids, Iowa, says:

Here am I again. Suppose you are tired of having to bother with a Hamfat crank twister—I won't say operator, because I don't know if I am entitled to wear that handle yet or not, as I have never been examined by a competent authority. But when I think I know enough I am going to try for the I. A. I don't want to do that, however, until I can feel that I will be a credit to the union to which I belong. I have only had three years' experience and two years of study, and it seems sometimes as though I did not know anything yet. What I want now is a book, or set of books on light ray dope, as I have a chance to get a little help from a friend. What would you suggest?

Well, brother, I believe I am absolutely and entirely safe in saying that the most up-to-date, thoroughly practical light ray dope as applied to the projector will be found in my new Handbook. There are, however, many, many works on light. Any good work on physics will give you a lot of light ray data. There is the "Cambridge Natural Science Manuals," one of which deals with light, published by the Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, Mass. There is "Students' Manual of Physics," put out by the American Book Company. There is "Sound, Light and Heat," by Wright; "Photographic Lenses," by Conrad Beck and Herbert Andrews, which is all I happen to have on tap just now. They all give a lot of light ray dope. Outside of my own Handbook, however, I would rather recommend "Optic Projection," by Simon Henry and Henry Phelps Gage, price $3.00, published by the Comstock Publishing Company, Ithaca, N. Y. I think, however, the Handbook is the thing you need, and the thing that will do you the most good. Your remarks about joining the I. A. might well be studied by others. I don't believe you are a "crank twister," or a "hamfat" either.

Red Devil Cement.

Charles W. Meighan, Salt Lake City, Utah, says:

Just what right I have to be "browsing" in the projection department when my interest in motion pictures is largely confined to advertising, and I really could not tell a condenser from a shoe shorn, I'll leave you to guess. But I do so browse, and in so doing, encountered your query concerning Red Devil Cement, January 15th issue. The only Red Devil cement I know of is made by the Union Portland Cement Company, Ogden, Utah, at their plant in Devil's Slide, Utah. All this devilishness in names comes from the fact that directly opposite the mountain where the plant is located is a rock slide known as "Devil's Slide." Red Devil cement is Portland cement—at least this kind is. However, at least my letter is not wasted, for it proves that operators are not the only ones to find your department interesting.

Brother Meighan I have often been astonished at the people who have told me they regularly read the department. I am afraid your particular brand of Red Devil cement is not what the inquirer was looking for. As I understand it, he wants to patch films, not sidewalks. However, we are deeply indebted to you for your courteous thoughtfulness in giving the brother the only devilish information in your possession on this particular subject.

Sepia Toning.

Films for re-developing should possess a blue-black tone and should be thoroughly washed (to eliminate Hypo) and be perfectly dried. Films which have been over-exposed and under-developed do not give successful results in Sepia toning. A print to produce a pleasing brown should have just the correct exposure, or perhaps a little less than normal, and be developed completely; that is, one in which the image seems to come to its full density in the normal time and which will not gain further with continued development; except, of course, that if the development is too prolonged there will be a chemical fog slowly produced by the continued action of the developer. Two solutions are required for the production of Sepia-toned films.

Sepia tone is one in which the silver image has been converted to a pleasing tone of brown and in which the high lights are clear transparent films. The solutions are made up as follows:

No. 1. Bleaching Solution.

Potassium Ferri Cyanide	1½ lbs.
Pottasium Bromide	1½ lbs.
Water	10 gallons

No. 2 Re-developing Solution.

Sulphide (not Sulphite) Soda	12 ozs.
Water	10 gallons

MANIPULATION:

(1) Immerse the rack of film in the Bleaching Bath, letting it remain until the entire silver image has turned to a creamy yellow, allowing it to remain until the yellow image has practically the same appearance from the back as well as the front of the film. This operation will take place in from one to two minutes.

(2) Rinse thoroughly in clear cold water in a rinsing tank.

(3) Place in the developing solution until original detail of the picture returns, except that the image is now brown instead of black. This takes about thirty seconds. The films should not be allowed to remain in this solution any longer than is necessary to complete the developing action, as the Sulphide is a strong caustic and had a tendency to soften the emulsion, and in hot weather to produce reticulation.

(4) Wash for half an hour before drying.

In warm weather if troubled with softening of the emulsion or with reticulation, rinse the film quickly as it comes from the re-developer, and then immerse for five minutes in a hardening bath composed of Acid Hardener	8 qts.

Water	10 gallons

Then remove from this bath and wash as usual.

If properly carried out, the density and graduation of the Sepia-toned film will not be affected by re-development, although many studios make a slightly lighter print for Sepia than for a straight print.

The Acid Hardener is the same formula as that used in the preparation of Acid Hypo Fixing Bath given recently in this department.

While intensification and reduction of motion picture films is not as a rule advisable on account of the tendency of granularity in the image, caused by the use of the solution, it is often desirable to give an added snappiness and contrast to a negative film by a slight intensification. One of the best methods of intensifying a negative and one which has practically no tendency to a granular image, is the Sepia re-development.

While the method of intensification by re-development is comparatively new, yet it is a most effective and simple means of intensifying film negatives. It may be used in exactly the same manner as for producing Sepia tones on positive film. Negatives intensified by re-development are built up evenly without undue contrast and without the chance of staining. They are, moreover, more permanent than a straight developed negative, as they will never be subjected to brown staining such as is often seen in old negatives which have been kept in damp vaults for some time. The advantage of being able to use the toning bath for two different purposes is obvious, the results in either case being all that could be desired.

Testing for Thorough Washing.

In the rush of dark room work, films are often insufficiently washed, with the consequence that the residue of Hypo left in the film eventually causes a brown stain or discoloration, which gives a disagreeable mottled appearance on the screen, being accompanied by peeling of the emulsion from the celluloid. Frequent testing for thoroughness of washing is very useful.

After films have been thoroughly washed the water is tested for any trace of hypo by what is known as the permanganate of potash test. The formula is as follows:

Permanganate of Potash	8 grs.
Caustic Soda	7 grs.
Water (Pure Distilled)	8 ozs.

TO USE:

Fill a large graduate with pure water to which you have added 5 or 6 drops of the above potash solution. The solution in the graduate should then be a clear red or dark pink; a rack is then taken from the wash water and allowed to drop into the graduate of dilute potash solution. If hypo is present the clear wine color of the water in the graduate will change to a light greenish or dirty yellowish tint. In such case the films are returned to the wash water and allowed to remain until further tests prove that the hypo has been washed away. It is well to make a blank test with the water which you are using for washing, as this test is very sensitive and any impurity present in the water will also change the color of the permanganate solution, but the color change with impure water is different from that caused by hypo. This test is particularly valuable in the case of films which are to be sepia-toned or re-developed, because any residual hypo left in the films which are to be toned, forms a reducing solution with the ferricyanide in the bleaching bath for sepia toning and dissolves away a portion of the silver image, producing the mottled effect often seen in sepia-toned films.

A Substitute for Metol.

Doctor Charles J. Thatcher, a graduate of the University of Leipsic, but now a chemical expert in New York, has made an extensive study of the composition and properties of various photographic developers, with the result that a patent has been taken out on a new developer called Kathol. This is claimed to have substantially the same composition as metol, and to answer perfectly as a substitute therefor. It is believed that it can be successfully manufactured on a commercial basis, and if this and the claims made for the new developer prove to be true, the product will certainly be made most welcome by the photographers of the country who are now deploring the serious shortage of metol, due to the disturbance abroad.

Doctor Thatcher has taken exception to an article which appeafed in this department which stated that the caustic alkali used in the preparation of Kathol developing solutions was injurious to the emulsion and to the hands of the operator. He says that the people who have been using it find it satisfactory in every respect, and while it is necessary to use stronger alkali in compounding this developer, that the difference is not sufficient to either injure the emulsion or to attack the epidermis of the user.

We are glad to make this correction for the Doctor, and hope that our previous statement has not injured the popularity of his new developing agent. Anything which will end to relieve the acute shortage of a chemical which is so extensively used as Metol is to be heartily welcomed and even though more extensive precautions and alterations of procedure may be necessary in the use of a new substitute, it should not militate against its adoption when it possesses merit.

Scenic Pictures De Luxe.

At the last monthly meeting of the Federal Photographic Society (a society composed of photographers employed in the government service), held in the main auditorium of the New National Museum, there was given an exhibition of "Art Motion Pictures" films of "Our National Parks," which were taken and exhibited by Mr. H. T. Cowling, Official Photographer, Interior Department. Mr. Cowling is also vice-president of the Federal Photographic Society.

Many of these films were shown for the first time in public and the announcement of this exhibition attracted a large crowd owing to the reputation of Mr. Cowling as a scenic artist. The films were highly colored in single and dual tones and were unanimously declared by the members of the society to be the finest art motion pictures which have yet been produced of our national scenery. Many of the subjects pictured by the author were photographed for the first time, and showed striking scenes in Yosemite, Yellowstone, Crater Lake, Glacier National Parks and the Grand Canon of the Colorado in Arizona, as well as scenes on the Navajo and Blackfeet Indian Reservations.

One of the reels taken in Glacier National Park showed the Blackfeet Indians celebrating their "Medicine Elk Ceremony" in the production of which it was necessary for Mr. Cowling to be adopted into the Blackfeet Tribe in order to gain admittance into their Medicine Lodges. These films are being circulated by the Department of the Interior under the supervision of the assistant secretary, Stephen T. Mather, in connection with a "See America First" campaign.

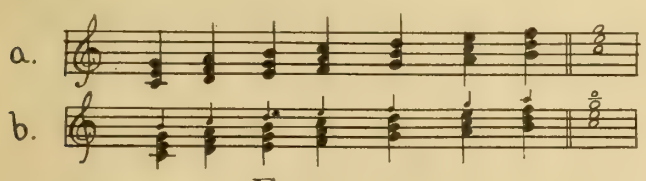
Improvising.

By Clarence E. Sinn.

Article VIII.

To continue the subject of "changing from a major to a minor key and vice versa," the main thing to determine before making such a change is this: "What is the third of the present key?" That is, what note is the third of your key-note? If you are already playing in a major key, then the third note above your key-note is a major third; if you are playing in a minor key, the third above the key-note is a minor third. (See Example 29, issue of March 25.)

In determining which is the key-note and its third, we must keep in mind that (as said before) all chords are built originally in the form of a triad—a group of three notes, always consisting of a foundation note, its third and fifth—reckoning upward from the foundation note. True, there are chords containing more than three notes, but they are made by adding other notes to the original triad. Example 31 shows a triad written upon each of the seven notes of a diatonic scale in the key of C. (See Example 31, upper line "a.")



Ex. 31.

The lower line ("b") in Example 31 shows another note written above each triad. As this note is a 7th above the key-note of each chord, it is called a "seventh."

I have said that all chords are built originally in the form of a triad. (See letter "a" Example 31.) The same chord may appear in other forms called "inversions." Example 32 gives an illustration of this. The chord of "C" is shown first in its original form. (In the first measure.) Then the same chord is shown in six different positions. These are called "inversions." Now you will notice that the same identical notes (C, E and G) are used to make the chord, no matter in what position it may appear. And no matter what the position may be, you should be able to reduce it to its original form—that is, you should be able to recognize it as a chord of C, and think of it in its original position. (As shown in the first measure, Exercise 32.) And this shows you the third—either major or minor, as the case may be. Of course, when you are playing from music, the signature shows you the key, which is the same as the key-note. And this note is the foundation on which the key is laid. For example, if you are playing in the key of "G," you know "G" is the key-note and also the foundation note of the chord of G. Its third (counting upward) must be the note "B"—a major third. To change to a minor (G minor) we know we must begin by lowering this third a half tone—making it B flat. We cannot spare the space to give you all the minor scales—your piano studies must include all these, but an example is offered illustrating a well-known air in G major and the same transposed to G minor. (See Example 33.)

Ex. 32.

The first line ("A") shows the melody "Way Down Upon the Suanee River" written in the key of G major. Beneath this are three examples showing the chord of G major (arrow indicates the major 3d), the chord of G minor (arrow indicates minor 3d), and the scale in the key of G minor. The last example (letter B) shows the same melody ("Way Down Upon the Suanee River") written in the key of G minor. You will notice that the signature of this key (two flats) is the same as the signature of B flat.

While on this subject it may not be out of place to show why the flats or sharps in the signature must occupy the places they do upon the staff, and why they indicate the key.

To begin with, we must remember that a diatonic scale—no matter what the key—must have an interval of only half a tone between the third and fourth notes, and between the seventh and eighth notes. All the other intervals are a whole tone. Write the scale of C and number each note as in Example 34.

Ex. 33.

Observe:

From 1 to 2 (C to D) is a whole tone.
From 2 to 3 (D to E) is a whole tone.
From 3 to 4 (E to F) is a half tone.
From 4 to 5 (F to G) is a whole tone.
From 5 to 6 (G to A) is a whole tone.
From 6 to 7 (A to B) is a whole tone.
From 7 to 8 (B to C) is a half tone.

It is only necessary to remember that the half-tone intervals occur between 3 and 4, and between 7 and 8. These intervals must hold good no matter what the key may be. Now let us write a diatonic scale beginning on the note "G," and number each note as in the last example. We now get a result like this: (See Example 35.)

Ex. 35.

Let us test it and see how the intervals in the scale balance up with those in the numerals. Like this:

From 1 to 2 (G to A) is a whole tone; correct.
From 2 to 3 (A to B) is a whole tone; correct.
From 3 to 4 (B to C) is a half tone; correct.
From 4 to 5 (C to D) is a whole tone; correct.
From 5 to 6 (D to E) is a whole tone; correct.
From 6 to 7 (E to F) is a half tone; wrong. From 6 to 7 should be a whole tone.
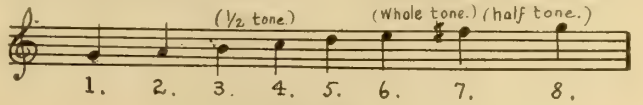
From 7 to 8 (F to G) is a whole tone; wrong. From 7 to 8 should be but a half tone.

To correct this discrepancy between the intervals of the scale and those of the numerals, we will raise the seventh note (F) a half tone, making it read F sharp instead of F natural. (See Example 36.)



Ex. 36.

Now the scale of notes and the scale of numerals balance as they should. We find an interval of a whole tone between 6 and 7, and only a half-tone between 7 and 8. So you see F must be sharp in the key of G, but instead of writing a sharp before F whenever it occurs we simply place a sharp on the "F" line at the beginning of the piece, and say that it holds good throughout. That is why one sharp is the signature of the key of G.

Write a scale beginning on F natural, and number each note as before. We find that between 3 and 4 (A and B natural) there is a whole tone when there should be but a half; and between 4 and 5 (B and C) there is but a half tone when there should be a whole tone between 4 and 5. We can correct this by placing a flat before B natural (4), which will now make these intervals read:

From 3 to 4 (B flat to C) is a a half tone; correct.

From 4 to 5 (B flat to C) is a whole tone; correct.

The other intervals in this scale will balance up correctly between the notes and numerals, showing that the only change necessary to make them match is to lower "4" (B natural) a half tone, making it read "B flat." As B must always be played flat in the key of F, this flat is placed on the middle line "B," and is understood to hold good all through the piece (or until otherwise indicated by a change of signature). And that is why one flat in the signature indicates the key of "F."

Try a few exercises for yourself, beginning your scale on any note, and place the numbers below as in the examples given above. You will find that a scale beginning on "D" will require a sharp before F and another before C in order to bring the half-tone intervals where they belong—that is, between 3 and 4, and between 7 and 8. And for this reason the key of D is indicated by two sharps in the signature—one placed before F and the other before C.

A scale beginning on "A" requires a sharp placed before F, C and G. A scale beginning on B flat must of course have a flat before B; that is the note you start with. But in addition to this, you will find it necessary to place a flat before "4" (E natural) to bring that interval between 3 and 4 down to a half-tone interval as it should be.

If you will read this carefully and practice it faithfully and intelligently you need never be bothered with "wondering what the key is." You will know. And you will not have to be told how to "change from a major to a minor"; you'll know that, too.

But you must practice. There is no way of feeding these things to one so he can imbibe them without work. If a fellow really wants to know, a fellow must work and practice.

And what has all this got to do with improvising, you may ask. I must answer: "Very little." But questions which seemed to be sincere were asked which showed a total ignorance of scale building and chord building, and which I have tried to answer as briefly and clearly as I can. These essentials must be understood before we can read intelligently about improvising.

Musical Setting for "The Cycle of Fate."

Released April 3, by the V-L-S-E, Inc.

Suggestions Prepared by S. M. Berg.

By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of V-L-S-E films the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "The Cycle of Fate" were prepared by Mr. Berg, who is associated with the Photoplay Department of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-titles (marked T) or by a described action (marked D).

The story opens in a seaside village where Maybelle, whose husband has just been drowned, dies of grief after giving birth to twins, a boy and a girl, who both have a peculiar birthmark on the hand. Twenty years later Joe, having run away from his grandfather, is now the leader of a city gang. His sister is enticed away from home by another gangster, but Joe, recognizing the scar on her hand, saves her. Joe's sweetheart, a consumptive, begs him to leave his life of crime, and the story closes when the two leave the city behind for a healthier climate.

Note particularly: Few bars wedding march 4, Water effects from opening to 15, Scene of dancing in restaurant from 18 to 29, Agitatos and misteriosos as suggested in the cue sheet.

The THEME selected is "My Beloved Queen"—Rose.

Time schedule: five reels (about 4,750 feet), 71½ minutes.

Time.		Sub-titles or Descriptive Cues.	Music.
0	D	Opening.	My Beloved Queen—Rose. (Andante cantabile.) (Theme.)
3	T	"Got a chew?"	Debutante Waltzes—Herbert.
4	T	—and then.	Few bars wedding march.
4½	T	Three months later.	Continue: Debutante Waltzes.

70	T	Knowing of Red's plans.	Repeat: By Beloved Queen. (Theme.)
71	T	"Beat it, Red."
71½	T	The End.

NOTE—For the convenience of readers of the Moving Picture World a price list of the numbers suggested in the above cue-sheet is to be found in G. Schirmer's advertisement on page 536.

We have arranged with Mr. W. C. Simon to print a page of original composition in this reduced style at certain intervals. The following score is an original composition—the fifth of a series of ten or twelve numbers which will be suitable for certain styles of dramatic subjects under the general classification of society dramas. The complete sets will be available in loose leaf form and will be a welcome addition to the music libraries of orchestra leaders.

Mr. Simon is prepared to undertake original musical compositions or adaptations for any production or special occasion and may be addressed in care of the Moving Picture World. If any readers of this department desire any special set or series for moving picture work, we will arrange with Mr. Simon for publication as above.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

OFFER EXHIBITORS INTEREST IN TRADE SHOW.

Board of Trade Directors Make Proposition of a Quarter of the Profits of Exposition.

THE Directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America met Thursday, March 21, to consider matters of importance in connection with the First National Motion Picture Exposition at Madison Square Garden May 6, 1916. Present were: J. Stuart Blackton, Robert H. Cochrane, Nicholas Power, J. E. Brulatour, Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, S. L. Rothapfel, Wm. A. Johnson and J. W. Binder, Harry Cochrane general manager of Madison Square Garden, reported through the executive secretary that there was no doubt of the great success of the exposition with the public. "The exposition will have the greatest drawing power of any ever held here," Mr. Cochrane said. "It will be a real exposition of the motion picture industry and art at the same time will have the greatest entertainment value possible for the American people."

A special committee made up of Messrs. Irwin, Johnson, Rothapfel and Power reported on a proposition from the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in reference to the exposition. This proposition was that the net profits of the exposition should be divided as follows: 25 per cent. to the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, 25 per cent. to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and 50 per cent. placed in a fund to be administered by a committee of six—three from the Board of Trade and three from the Exhibitors' League.

The proposition as submitted was voted down. Thereupon J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Board, introduced a resolution renewing the boards' original offer to set aside 25 per cent. of the net profits of the trade show for the benefit of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The resolution was adopted.

The resolution provided for the appointment by the Exhibitors' League of a committee of three to co-operate with the Board of Trade is making the exposition a success. It provided also for the appointment of a committee by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America which shall confer with the Board of Trade to secure unity of action of the two bodies in combating censorship and other Legislative evils. The resolution reads:

Whereas, the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League have cordially co-operated with the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., in fighting censorship and in solving other problems, incident to the industry at large, and,

Whereas, the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., desires to make due and proper recognition to this splendid co-operation, therefore be it

Resolved, that the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., hereby renews, its offer to the National Organization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to share with the latter organization the net profits that may accrue to the Board of Trade from the trade show to be held at Madison Square Garden, New York City, from May 6 to May 13, inclusive, on the following basis: Twenty-five per cent. of the net profits as above described to be paid to the treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America within sixty days after the close of the trade show without condition, other than that the money be used in extending the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and in co-operating with the Board of Trade in its fight abainst censorship, whether Federal, State or Municipal.

Resolved, further, that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America be invited to appoint a committee of three to represent the National Organization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in its relations with the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., prior to, during the trade show and until the money above described shall have been paid to the treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America as hereinafter provided for. The name of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League shall be printed on all advertising matter relating to the trade show to be issued hereafter in as prominent a place and as large type as are the names of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America and Madison Square Garden.

Resolved, further, that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America be invited to appoint an additional committee to confer with the executive committee of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., and secure unity of action of the two bodies in combating censorship and other legislative evils.

It was announced yesterday that Samuel L. Rothapfel, vice president and general manager of the new Rialto Theater Company will direct the artistic feature of the exposition. He will be in charge of the "grandaddy of all motion picture shows" in the Garden and will introduce features of music, decoration and entertainment never before attempted in so large a hall.

EXHIBITORS ANNOUNCE TRADE SHOW.

New York Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, announces that final arrangements have been completed for its third annual exposition, which will be held in Grand Central Palace May 1 to 6 next. Many striking innovations are promised. Lee A. Ochs, president of the exhibitors organization, said that behind the show would be the same executive capacity that carried to success its predecessors.

"The number of unsolicited contracts already in hand proves conclusively that the industry at large, including manufacturers, exchanges and supply and accessory men, are indorsing the show," added Mr. Ochs.

SAN FRANCISCO LEAGUE REORGANIZED.

Impending Questions Compel Exhibitors to Get Together—Local Censorship Threatened.

An enthusiastic meeting of exhibitors of San Francisco and suburban cities was held in the assembly hall of the Pacific Building on March 23, about eighty being present, and a reorganization of the local league, which has been dormant for a long time, was decided upon. Former State President H. L. Beach, of the Lorin and Strand theaters, Berkeley, presided at the meeting, and a large amount of business of an urgent character was transacted. A committee was named to draw up suitable by-laws, another to act upon the censorship question and a third to confer with exchanges in regard to the payment-in-advance rule for service, shortly to be placed into effect. It was decided to admit as members all exhibitors securing service from local exchanges, thus taking in considerably more than one-half the state. Mr. McCullough, of the Polk theater, was elected temporary chairman, and S. C. Martenstein, temporary secretary.

A number of very urgent matters have led to the reorganization of the local league, included in these being the pay-in-advance plan for service, labor troubles and local censorship agitation. Opinion is divided on the new payment plan of the local exchanges, but as a rule those who attended the meeting were not in favor of the scheme as proposed to them, expressing the belief that there were other means of minimizing the losses complained of by exchangemen.

It developed at the meeting that the operators were preparing to ask for a new wage scale of $6 for an eight-hour day and $5 for a six-hour day. The Janitors' Union has also come forward with a demand that union janitors be employed in all houses where there is a union operator employed. The announcement was made that the San Francisco Labor Council had acted favorably on a resolution for impressing upon the Board of Supervisors the need for more drastic regulations regarding standing room in theaters. As there have been no accidents in theaters, and the present ordinances cover the matter thoroughly, exhibitors are at a loss to ascribe a cause for this action.

The local censorship problem was discussed at some length and it was agreed that immediate action was necessary to prevent the passage of legislation that would be a decided menace to the business. A few months ago there was a strong agitation against censorship, with the press taking an active part in the campaign, and it was believed that the present system would be abolished. While exhibitors and exchangemen have been resting on their oars, members of a number of women's clubs and other organizations have been at work and a measure which will be considered shortly by the Board of Supervisors has been drawn up. This proposed ordinance provides for a Board of Censorship of nine members, four of which shall be women, and has so many prohibitive clauses attached to it that but few pictures of the kind now being produced could be shown here. Learning of this proposed measure, D. W. Griffith, of Los Angeles, sent a personal representative in W. E. Keefe, who was here several months ago with "The Clansman," and Mr. Keefe was one of the speakers at the meeting of exhibitors. He will remain here until the Board of Supervisors take action on the censorship ordinance.

NEW BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS' ORGANIZATION.

After Three Meetings Thirty-seven Representative Theaters Are Enrolled—Members Enthusiastic.

THE ease with which bills imposing censorship on New York State can be pushed out of committee is one of the reasons for the organization of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn. After three meetings, on consecutive Monday evenings following business hours, the heads of thirty-seven representative theaters have enrolled their houses. The association aims to advance the interests of the exhibitors of Brooklyn generally, to combat laws and bills hostile to the industry, and to co-operate with other agencies.

The temporary officers are William Brandt, New Albany Theater, president; Louis Levine, Regent, first vice-president; William Hollander, Old Post Office, second vice-president; David Lesselbaum, Miller, secretary; Julian Loeb, Sumner, treasurer; Michael Glynn, Century, sergeant-at-arms. At present the organization is unaffiliated with the state league, although the question of joining the divisional body undoubtedly will be taken up later. The meetings thus far held have been marked by enthusiasm and the indications are the new association will become a strong local; Mr. Brandt believes it will develop into the strongest in the country.

The following theaters have been enrolled: New Albany, Marcy, Century, Alhambra, Nostrand, Cleveland, Paramount, Old Post Office, Throop, Classic, Kingston, Mt. Morris, Park, Miller, Vermont, New Singer, Broadway Lyceum, Globe, Marathon, Duffield, Oxford, Norwood, Levine's Miller, Montauk, Foster's Globe, Sumner, Fulton Auditorium, Sheridan, T. N. F., Flatbush; Concord, Colonade, Regent, Kermans, Garden, Powell, Whitney and Parkway.

PRIZES FOR BLUEBIRD MANAGERS.

General Manager M. H. Hoffman, of Bluebird Photoplays, begins with the current week a contest among branch managers for substantial prizes to be allotted on the basis of the greatest amount of profit, greatest amount of business increase and best showing in collections for every four weeks as compared with the preceding four weeks.

Good watches will be the prizes, but when a manager has captured a "yellow super" he will not be needlessly loaded down with timepieces. He will be presented with $100 in cash, and if one manager goes on repeatedly corralling the first prize for as many as five times his annual salary wil be increased $1,000.

LESTER CUNEO RETURNS TO SCREEN.

Lester Cuneo, who formerly played the heavy leads in Metro features with Francis X. Bushman and who gave up motion pictures recently to take up a banking career in Chicago, has again returned to pictures and will be seen with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in "The Come Back," a forthcoming Quality Metro five-part production. Mr. Cuneo has been working before the camera for more than eight years, but during that entire time an uncle in Chicago has been trying to prevail upon him to take up a business career with him in a banking institution where he is first vice-president.

PATCH GIVES "NE'ER-DO-WELL" SPECTACULAR INTRODUCTION.

"The Ne'er-Do-Well," the big V-L-S-E ten-reel production filmed from Rex Beach's famous novel, had its initial showing at the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh, Pa., on March 27 and proved a drawing magnet of tremendous power.

The admission prices ranged from twenty-five cents to a dollar, and the entire house sold out in advance, with the result that one of the largest and most enthusiastic audiences which ever filled the theater was on hand. William Moore Patch, managing director of the Pitt, may be said to have established a new record for himself in the elaborate framing he provided for this picture.

National Board Changes its Name

In Response to Public Opinion, It Eliminates the Word "Censorship" from Title.

THE National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures will hereafter be known as the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. The new name is a more accurate indication of the nature of the Board's work because the word "censorship" implies a type of official control and supervision that is deeply repugnant to the American ideal of free speech. The National Board believes in the free expression of ideas in the press, the theater and the motion picture. It has come to the point where it would rather go out of existence than seem to stand for the kind of bureaucratic blue pencil that works in secret and enforces its decisions on the public without ever giving the public a chance to decide for itself.

The power of the board lies in the fact that it represents public opinion. Its 240 members, serving voluntarily and without pay, come from all walks of life. Their standards of review are drawn not only from their own wide experience, but from constant correspondence with motion picture exhibitors and the motion picture public all over the country. It has over 700 persons on its regular list of correspondents and works with a National Advisory Committee of nearly one hundred made up of prominent men and women in every state of the Union. This crystalization of public opinion has incalculable weight with picture producers because the producers have to give the public what it wants or go out of business. They know that any Board that can look at their pictures, uninfluenced by their own close interest and enthusiasm, and serve as a test of the public's reaction on films, is the greatest help to them. That is why they voluntarily submit their films to the National Board and agree to abide by its decisions.

The board exercises its greatest power through its weekly official bulletin to picture exhibitors and city officials throughout the country. Innumerable towns and cities have given up their local censoring committees and accepted the official advices of the National Board, because they have found that the board represents in its decisions the average desire for a clean treatment of moral and social questions without the prejudices that are so apt to govern the views of a small local group. Among the scores of cities that have adopted the findings of The National Board as a guide to the pictures suitable to be shown in their theaters are New York, Boston, Los Angeles, Duluth, Minneapolis, Spokane and Providence. All the leading cities of the country are maintaining active co-operative relations with the National Board, depending upon its official advices as the best expression of public opinion.

The work of the board will continue to be what it has been—to formulate and express public opinion on motion pictures, review pictures for manufacturers with recommendation for changes and eliminations, and keep the country through local officials and exhibitors in touch on the motion pictures generally. It does not pretent that its decisions will satisfy every individual, because these decisions are founded on principle and carefully formulated standards that cannot take into account personal and local prejudice.

The word "censorship" was incorporated in the title of the Board at its organization in 1909 against the wishes of some of its founders, but in deference to the wishes of prominent exhibitors and citizens. One of the executive officers of the board in speaking of the change in the title of the organization, added:

"An interesting difference is shown between the attitude of some of the executive officers in the film industry and the leading motion picture directors. The former frequently look upon the National Board as an evil to be endured if necessary. The latter regard the board as an active cooperative agent assisting them in interpreting public opinion. They realize that if the industry is to continue to prosper in the future as in the past it must keep attuned to public opinion. If a motion picture meets with disapproval throughout the country it is the director responsible for the picture whose reputation suffers. It is the hope of the board to some day maintain a representative in the motion picture studios in and around Los Angeles who will receive constant reports from the head office and discuss questions of importance with the producing directors. That the directors appreciate the work of the National Board is indicated by the correspondence received in our office asking for advice as to the probable reaction of the public on this or that situation regarding which they may be doubtful."

Universal Backs Auto Race

Drivers at Sheepshead Bay Will Compete for Costly Cup and $10,000 in Cash Prizes.

THE Universal Company has scored a publicity "beat" of the first importance in becoming the dominant power behind what promises to be the greatest automobile sporting event in the east during the coming season, a Twenty-four Hour Stock Chassis contest on the Sheepshead Bay Speedway, June 16 and 17. The race will be controlled by the Trade Racing Association, Inc., according to the rules and with the sanction of the A. A. A. Contest Board, the trophy being presented by the Universal Company under the following deed of gift:

The Universal Trophy.

"I, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, do hereby donate to the Trade Racing Association, Inc., a trophy for Twenty-four Hour Stock Chassis Automobile Contests, to be contested for with the following provisions:

"The trophy shall be known as the 'Universal Film Trophy'; it shall be competed for by motor cars as defined in the rules of the American Automobile Association as 'stock chassis' and shall be contested for through a period of five years in twenty-four hour contests only.

"The cup shall be loaned after each contest to the entrant whose car finished first in the competition; said entrant to retain possession of same until the next succeeding event is held, or until such time preceding the event as in the judgment of the A. A. A., it should be called for to insure its delivery to the next winning competitor.

"Permanent possession of the said trophy, after the time limit here above-named, shall vest in the entrant having the highest total points, in accordance with the following scale:

First position each contest				.....	20 points
Second	"	"	"	.....	15 "
Third	"	"	"	.....	12 "
Fourth	"	"	"	.....	10 "
Fifth	"	"	"	.....	8 "
Sixth	"	"	"	.....	7 "
Seventh	"	"	"	.....	6 "
Eighth	"	"	"	.....	5 "
Ninth	"	"	"	.....	4 "
Tenth	"	"	"	.....	3 "

"Qualification of cars to compete for this trophy to be determined by the Trade Racing Association, Inc."

The cup, manufactured by Black, Starr & Frost, from a design furnished by H. H. Van Loan, of the Universal Company, is of solid silver, standing thirty-six inches high on an onyx base. It is said to be by far the most expensive trophy ever offered for an automobile contest. As may be noted in the accompanying illustration, Mr. Van Loan's design is a clever adaptation of the Universal trade mark, with the ring of Saturn made to resemble a track for speeding cars. Supplementing the trophy as an inducement, are cash prizes totaling $10,000, assuring the interest of the foremost automobile manufacturers and drivers in the country.

The Universal Company will provide facilities for the taking of motion pictures of all the entries, which will be displayed in the theaters supplied by this concern. President Laemmle has promised the full co-operation of his publicity and scenario departments, also considerable space in the Animated Weekly. According to present plans a five-reel drama will be constructed around the race.

Mr. Van Loan, who has handled the negotiations with the Trade Racing Association, believes that the contest will result in an unprecedented amount of general publicity for Universal and for exhibitors using the pictures.

BUILDS ESCALATOR FOR KLEINE'S "MUSTY SUFFER."

The Kleine studios had another evidence of the "increased cost of living" for film manufacturers last week when an entire escalator was constructed in the big Bronx studio. Property men visited elevator and escalator factories for three weeks prior to the building of the set in the hope of finding a good "used" one warranted not to break down at critical moments. There was no such thing in stock, and no one in the business could guarantee to build a practical escalator guaranteed to work within the limitations of a moving picture stage. Accordingly the Kleine property men purchased chains, shafting, pulleys, hangers, lifts and belting in addition to much lumber, steel cross bars and angle irons.

Scene Showing Escalator.

When ready for business the escalator consisted of more than seven thousand separate parts including chain links, bolts, lifts, sprocket wheels, etc. Each part required separate hand attention such as bolting each lift to each link of chain. It is propelled by a 5 horse power electric motor and the little room beneath it makes a complete power house with rheostats, switches, wires, brakes, shafting and counter shafting.

The escalator is part of a gigantic set representing a complete penny arcade. The lighting of an interior of this size was a considerable problem in itself, requiring sixty banks of Cooper Hewitt lamps, eight lamps to a bank, making four hundred eighty tubes or lamps in all. It has been stated that the lighting system required an investment of many thousands of dollars.

KLEINE BOOKING OFFICES MOVE.

Last week held a moving day for George Kleine's Forty-second street rental offices when the entire organization, formerly located at 226 West Forty-second street, removed to its home in the new film building at Forty-ninth street and Seventh avenue. This change of address was made necessary by the increasing demand for a more centrally-located exchange and anticipations of great activity with the Billie Burke Serial. The new offices cover approximately thirty thousand square feet of space in this latest and most modern of structures. The quarters have been so laid out that the utmost in speed and accessibility is obtained. Film and poster departments are now maintained on the same floor with the booking offices so that the exhibitor is put to a minimum of inconvenience in completing his whole errand.

The new Godfrey Building was especially constructed for the film interests of Manhattan, and is so designed as to afford every possible requirement even to the installation of special high speed elevators for poster and film boys.

DE CORDOVA TO ASSIST WITH METRO.

Leander de Cordova, one of the best known young men in the theatrical profession, both as an actor and manager, and who recently turned his talents to motion pictures, has been made an assistant director at the Rolfe-Metro studio, and will be associated with Charles Horan. Mr. de Cordova's long experience as a director of stage productions qualifies him for the place he has taken: He has directed and managed stock companies in a dozen cities, and is thoroughly conversant with the technique of the stage. He knows also how to get results from players.

Routing Film Service

A Railroad Man Points Out a Possible Remedy for an Evil from Which Many Exhibitors Suffer.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

WRITING from a western city, a former railroad man touches upon a matter from which practically every exhibitor has suffered at one time or another and points out a possible remedy. This writer, H. E. Gardner, has been in the express service in every capacity from pushing a truck to auditing accounts, including six years as messenger in Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado and New Mexico. He knows what can be done, because he has done it, and his comment is authoritative. His work now takes him over the roads frequently and, being a picture fan, he has come to know many exhibitors and their employees. He says:

Having a speaking acquaintance with nearly all the managers and many of the employees in the local theaters, one of the former being a very warm personal friend, I have had ample opportunity to observe the wasteful results of the errors in shipping, mailing, booking, routing, etc., which are of frequent occurrence and are almost invariably chargeable to the exchange. Errors that are costly to both exhibitor and exchange, out of all proportion to the cost of the service.

Going into details, he gives an actual case and offers a suggestion. In part he writes:

An exhibitor, for instance, desires a certain film for a special occasion. He receives notice that it is booked, followed four days later by advice that film cannot reach him till 3 p. m. of the date booked. This means loss of two hours of a matinee that promises to be a big one.

The film arrives as per schedule, accompanied by the posters; no paper up till show is started. After learning where film was shipped from or, rather, where last shown and the route used, the exhibitor finds he could just as well have had the film at 5 a. m. instead of 3 p. m., if another route and express company had been used.

Net result: Somebody loses money through the exchange man's ignorance of available transportation facilities.

I have seen many other instances within the past few months. In one, the film did not arrive at all; in another, it arrived at 8 p. m., seven hours late for the opening show, although the shipping point was only 75 miles away, and eight earlier trains available.

In very few cases, it seems, are the express companies liable.

Now, it is not enough to locate the liability. It makes no difference whether it is the fault of the exchange, the exhibitor or the express company. The point is this: Every time a show waits on films, or another film than the one advertised is shown, or advertising matter is delayed, it means more or less loss of patronage.

Money diverted from the industry in this way is forever lost.

Furthermore, the loss of revenue is not the only item to be considered. The telegraph and telephone tolls wasted every day because of lack of knowledge and proper training and attention in the shipping department must reach an enormous sum. Probably, that is the largest steady "leak" in the entire business.

And the worst of it is the exchange managers don't seem to grasp the importance of prompt service. They turn over to callow youths at $12 or $15 per week, business which they have paid traveling men several times that amount to get.

What percentage of film salesmen do you suppose call upon the express agents who deliver their goods, and inquire into the service and facilities? How many bookers and shippers in the exchanges personally keep posted on train connections know how many hours distant is each customer, and whether the early train or the later one makes the best time and connection on certain traffic?

And, most important of all, how many shippers furnish the exhibitors detailed instruction for returning or forwarding films, designating the express company, route, number and time of train, transfer point, etc? This may sound cumbersome and unnecessary, but I believe films should be handled as a dispatcher handles trains; that is, the exchange should be posted on where every film is every hour that it is away from the office. And it is not so difficult with proper organization. It would mean a higher first cost of labor and equipment, but the saving in claims, damages, lost revenue, telegraph and telephone tolls, etc., would offset the increased cost many times over. Also, it helps hold the business.

Such handling would increase the earning capacity of "first run" and other valuable films by permitting closer booking and eliminating many idle dates now wasted in transportation, for want of familiarity with transportation facilities. A man with the knowledge and proper training in railroad and express work, and a cultivated acquaintance among the workers in both lines could readily arrange to be promptly notified of serious accidents or delays such as washouts, blockades, wrecks, etc., and thus avoid many claims for loss of revenue to the exhibitor. With the work properly organized and recorded in his own office, the film dispatcher would know in a moment just what films were likely to be delayed by any such accident, and steps to supply the emergency could be taken immediately.

Of course there are some exchange managers, like Tom North, for instance, who go to extreme measures, when necessary, to deliver their product, but this letter represents conditions as they are in a majority of exchanges. Probably no system is more completely developed than that of the United States Post Office Department. A letter mailed at a certain station in New York City, at eleven o'clock, will be sent to the New York Central for transmission. A letter dropped ten minutes later may be sent over the Pennsylvania. Railway mail clerks are required to keep time tables in their heads and distribute train mail to make the most advantageous connections. They must know that while a train over one road leaves ten minutes ahead of a train on a rival road that the latter will reach a distant point twenty minutes ahead of the former. No excuses are accepted. They must remember and failure to do so is held against them.

It is much the same in the express service, but in most exchanges an inexperienced shipping clerk will be content to deliver the films to some express company reaching the point of destination without inquiry as to the first train out. As Mr. Gardner points out, a cheap clerk is permitted to nullify the efforts of several high priced salesmen. He points out the remedy. It may not always be feasible to employ a high salaried shipping clerk, but at least the office can keep in touch with schedules and route film by the most direct trains and, where the first exhibitor is to ship to another, provide him with explicit directions that the film is to be shipped on a train over a certain road leaving at a stated hour; perhaps such a form as this might be employed:

Mr..... Date line.

Address.

The subject.

booked with you for April 21-22 should arrive April 21 on the 10:15 A. M. train from the Kozy theater, Hammond, Ia., via Wells-Fargo. Please ship to the Empress theater, Johnstown, Ia., on the 9:23 A. M. via Wells-Fargo Express, April 23. Service First Exchange..

The matter in italics is the only part to be filled in. By making out a set of slips to cover the journey of the reels until they again return to the exchange, the clerical work would be slight and the advantage enormous if the work is done intelligently.

Many commercial companies now maintain an expert railroad man in their shipping department even where delay is far less important than is the case with material intended for public exhibition.

Edith Reeves

A LINEAL descendant of the great William Penn and a real Daughter of the American Revolution made her debut in Triangle picture plays March 19. Although Frank Mills is starred in "The Moral Fabric," the Ince feature in which Miss Edith Reeves appears, advance views of the picture indicate that the film novice is not far from big type for herself. She drifted into the pictures like a lot of others, through her striking beauty.

Edith Reeves.

When Thomas H. Ince saw her, he remarked her striking appearance but expressed doubt as to her ability to get her blonde beauty over with the camera. But Miss Reeves did it in "The Moral Fabric" and also showed that blondes may have considerable dramatic ability. In the new Ince feature Miss Reeves plays to the life the woman who leaves her husband for the leader of a literary cult, later regrets her action and eagerly listens when her former husband fills her ears with the same kind of twaddle that lost her to him. She throws herself at his head but he spurns her, his revenge complete in the knowledge that he has ruined her life as she ruined his. As may be judged from the telling, the role is full of opportunities. Miss Reeves is said to take full advantage of them.

In her brief stage career the coming star, beginning with a musical organization and playing occasional engagements in vaudeville, has supported Henrietta Crosman, William Collier and other prominent stars and has had principal roles in George Ade's "Just Out of College" and "The Man of the Hour."

P. A. POWERS RETURNS TO NEW YORK.

P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has returned to New York after several weeks' stay at Universal City, expressing regret that he was unable to remain longer in the land of sunshine and flowers. Powers declared his gratification over the work being done at the big film plant of his company, and while in California suggested a number of enlargements of the present plant to General Manager Davis.

Paramount Program

Offers a Mary Pickford Feature With a Burton Holmes Travel Picture and Some Bray Cartoons With Other Novelties.

HEADING the notable program released through the Paramount Pictures Corporation for the week of April 17 are "The Eternal Grind," another Mary Pickford triumph in five reels, and "The Innocent Lie," also a five-reel picture, in which Valentine Grant will be featured. Both are productions of the Famous Players Film Company. Paramount audiences will have an opportunity on Monday to see the highest-salaried actress in the world playing the role of the overworked little slave of the factories. It is considered one of her finest impersonations. Miss Pickford will have the support of an excellent cast. "The Innocent Lie" is a Thursday release.

The three single-reel releases on the same program for the week of April 17 will be the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture, "Up and Down the Pasig River; the Filipino Thames," a new and remarkable series of films in the Paramount Pictograph, and the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, "Farmer Al Falfa's Scientific Dairy Farm."

Those who travel with Burton Holmes in the eleventh release of his Travel-Pictures go boating up and down the Pasig River, which is to Manila what the Thames is to London. They are shown the shipping in the heart of Manila, the lovely suburban residences and native "shacks," and the lovely tropical shores of this stream in the Orient. Dozens of water buffalo—which do the work of the oxen or horses in the rice fields of the Philippines—bathe along the Pasig shores with only their heads visible above the water. Cavalry from Fort McKinley go riding past. Mr. Holmes wends his way under the bridges of Manila, both old and new, and points out the Cascos, upon which generations of natives are born and raised, conveying the cargoes of freight-bearing ships to the canals which penetrate into the city. Novelties abound everywhere along the Pasig from Laguna de Bay to the old lighthouse, as Burton Holmes shows it.

Films showing the comparative ease with which a hostile power might capture New York are contributel by the twelfth release of the Paramount Pictograph for this week to the cause of "Preparedness." An animated map made under the direction of Frederick Palmer, noted war expert, shows the point at which an enemy might land near Boston the capture of the Springfield Arsenal, the over-running of New England by hostile troops and the startegic moves leading to the capture of New York. Other Pictograph material includes more "Better Babies" propaganda; "The Hazards of Happifat," (Trickids Serial); another psychological test by Professor Hugo Munsterberg, and "The Old and New—No. 1 Candles to Electric Lights."

The new Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, released on Thursday of this week, has the usual number of laughs to a foot of film. The title is "Farmer Al Falfa's Scientific Dairy Farm." In this satire on scientific farming the old farmer is first seen in a jovial mood, smoking and drinking cocktails. By touching a button the picture is flashed to the other end of the wire by Al Falfa. A pastoral scene appears on the screen with placid cows and merry milk maids in the foreground. Al Falfa kisses each milk maid as she completes her task. A long pipe line is shown, also the method of pumping milk from a large reservoir to a creamery. Al Falfa has succumbed to the efficiency experts so that every inch of the pipe line is utilized. One part shaped like a "U" is converted into a swing for the children, another is tapped so that the infants in baby carriages may be supplied with milk, and a third serves for a roost in a chicken coop. In conclusion there is a touch of low comedy.

JAPANESE PLAYERS IN HORSLEY RELEASE.

Three players new to David Horsley productions have been included in the cast supporting Crane Wilbur in his next picture, "The Conscience of John David," which is to be released April 24 as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition. They are Japanese actors named Kuran Kotani, Sumi Yamamoto and Hana Tanaka.

Though the "Conscience of John David" is a play of America, the Japanese characters have important places in it, particularly the part for which Kuran Kotani is cast, and the engagement of such accomplished people as the Horsley newcomers have proved themselves to be is considered a stroke of good fortune.

Sydney Ainsworth

SYDNEY AINSWORTH is Dave Pollock, the villain in "The Strange Case of Mary Page," Essanay's fifteen-episode series. It was Pollock who started all the trouble and it was with his mysterious death the series began. Mary Page (Edna Mayo) is accused and Philip Langdon (Henry B. Walthall), her sweetheart, is the attorney who defends her. For fifteen weeks thereafter Ainsworth was compelled to arise from the dead daily and reenact the testimony of the witnesses in the famous trial.

Sydney Ainsworth.

Sydney Ainsworth was born in Manchester, England, coming to America with his parents when three years of age. They located at Madison, Wis., and he was educated in the public schools. Before old enough to enter the university he was enlisted to tour the state with the Haresfoot club at the State school, so successful was he in amateur theatricals. The Spanish war broke out and being a member of the National Guard he went South. On his return he made his professional stage debut in "The Little Minister" with Maude Adams, playing again with her in "Romeo and Juliet." He starred for three years on Broadway in "Arizona," and later joined Robert Edeson in "Soldiers of Fortune." "Strongheart," "Classmates," "The Call of the Wild," and "The Arab," were other of his Broadway productions. After appearing in stock in Cleveland and Milwaukee he joined Essanay in 1914, his greatest work being seen in "Graustark," "The White Sister," "In the Palace of the King," "The Misleading Lady," and "The Strange Case of Mary Page." He is a member of the Lambs Club.

OIL WELL SCENE IN LUBIN PICTURE.

The actual shooting of a real oil well will be one of the big scenes in "The Toilers," the new multiple-reel feature photoplay by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, in which Nance O'Neil is starred.

The theme of "The Toilers" is described as love, oil and money in equal parts. Edgar Lewis, who is directing the making of the photoplay for the Lubin Company, is an extremist in the matter of realism, and to put the aroma of petroleum into the picture, he took Miss O'Neil and her supporting principals to the Galloway oil fields near Franklin, Pennsylvania, where fifteen busy days were employed in unfolding the story of the camera amid shacks, derricks and tanks.

Several hundred extra people were required by Director Lewis and these places were enthusiastically filled by drillers, tool dressers, pumpers and other oil field types. The climax of realism, however, was achieved by the spectacular shooting of a well in the Two-Mile Run district.

LE GUERE STILL WITH METRO.

Contrary to published reports stating that George Le Guere had concluded his contract with the Metro company, and was open for other engagements, he will begin work on a new production shortly for the Metro program, which will be produced by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. Mr. Le Guere's contract calls for at least two more five part productions for Metro.

ALAN DALE'S DAUGHTER IN METRO PICTURE.

Margery Dale, the youngest daughter of Alan Dale, one of the foremost dramatic critics of the country, made her debut in motion pictures at the Popular Plays and Players studio in "The Scarlet Woman," with Mme. Petrova in the stellar role, and which will be an early release on the Metro program.

Horsley Roasts Promoters

Favors Measures to Drive Them from Field of Motion Pictures.

THE activities of unscrupulous wild cat motion picture promoters, whose vivid tales of the vast fortunes to be made in the film industry have been the means of mulcting a gullible public of considerable money, is a matter David Horsley believes warrants the immediate attention of serious-minded producers.

"There are a great many would-be promoters throughout the United States who combine a talking knowledge of the business with fairy stories of the immense fortunes that have been made in the business, and prey upon the outside public for the purpose of making money out of the investor instead of making it out of the business," says Mr. Horsley, "and not only the outside public suffers in consequence but the whole industry as well.

"Promoters of this type—men of no standing in the film business—have been known to approach outsiders with propositions to produce pictures at costs as high as a half million dollars and to promise in return profits up to a half million dollars. On the face of this it is apparent that the feat is impossible. Yet the public is cajoled into putting up its money, only to find later on the folly of the action.

"I have been asked before for advice in such cases and I have told my inquirers to avoid motion picture investments except in the stock of established companies who are active producers and who have marketing facilities and who can demonstrate the likelihood of their being money-makers by their past performances in that respect.

"The history of the business shows that the successful motion picture manufacturers have acted in the same manner as a farmer with good land. They have worked it themselves with their own capital and for their own benefit.

"The practices of wild cat promoters are injurious to producers doing business legitimately and to prevent the practices of such promoters I am in favor of a concerted effort on the part of the picture interests to eliminate him from the field."

Thomas Commerford

SHOWING surprising vitality for his years Thomas Commerford, Essanay character actor, is a subject for wonder at those studios. Although 61 years of age and more than 40 years an actor, he is still a boy at heart and is as active as the youngest member of the stock company. As the grandfather in "The Little Samaritan," featuring Joyce Fair, Essanay's 11 year-old star, he proves his prolonged youth by romping with the child as her pet dog.

Thomas Commerford.

Mr. Commerford attributes his good physical condition to the fact that he takes a walk of not less than three miles every morning before appearing at the studio. The shore of Lake Michigan, in warm weather or cold, is his favorite path.

He was born in New York, Aug. 1, 1855 and began his theatrical career in the "Old Drury" theater. Later he became stage manager on the road for Edwin Arden and Dore Davidson. A full quarter of a century he spent with Lincoln J. Carter's productions. As Steven Thorne in "Dora Thorne" he made a decided success. He also appeared in "The Lion and the Mouse," "The House of a Thousand Candles," "Nobody's Claim," and "The Flaming Arrow."

Mr. Commerford joined Essanay in 1913. "Graustark," "In the Palace of the King" and "The White Sister" were some of the plays in which he carried big parts. His more recent work was as the judge in "The Strange Case of Mary Page."

World-Equitable Program in April

Great Number of Dual Star Pictures Booked for April Releases.

FIFTEEN stars of the first rank, all more than popular and all established screen players, either developed through long association with film plays or weaned from the spoken stage, characterize the releasing units of the World-Equitable program during the forthcoming month.

April 3, Alice Brady and a Frohman cast, headed by Jack Sherrill, will be seen in "Then I'll Come Back to You," while John Mason and Clara Whipple will appear at the same time in "The Reapers."

Robert Warwick and Frances Nelson, each noted stars, will appear jointly in "Human Driftwood," as the regular April 10 release, while Equitable will offer Varlye Blackwell in "The Shadow of Doubt," in which the stage has afforded an excellent leading woman in the person of Jean Shelby.

April 17 brings Kitty Gordon and her famous wardrobe, her illustrious personality and widely advertised back in her second World Film production, "Her Maternal Right," and Equitable, on the same date, will release its first three-star picture, "By Whose Hand," in which Edna Wallace Hopper will make her camera debut and in which are co-starring Charles J. Ross and Muriel Ostriche.

April 24, Equitable will offer Bruce McRae, the distiguished Broadway star, and Gerda Holmes in Richard Le Gallienne's "The Chain Invisible." During the same week the World Film Corporation will offer Edwin August as star and director of and in "The Social Highwayman," in which Ormi Hawley, the noted screen player, will handle the principal feminine role opposite him.

Jane Grey in "The Surrender" will characterize the program of the Equitable concern on May 1 with "The Feast of Life" as the World Film contribution on the same date. "The Feast of Life" was produced by Paragon With Clara Kimball Young, Doris Kenyon and a typical Paragon cast of stars.

The proper diversifying and distribution has been attended to in the case of this series, which contains every type of player known to the screen. The types and style of plays are admirably different in theme, plots and scenic environment.

Louise Owen, Vogue "Heavy"

LOUISE ALVA OWEN, vampire (on the screen), is the pretty brunnette girl who plays "heavies" in Vogue comedies under the direction of Jack Dillon.

Miss Owen is the athletic type who would much rather take long walks in the foothills than sit at home doing embroidery or playing with the cat.

Louise Alva Owen.

Prior to her signing up with Vogue, Louise acted important roles in both comedy and drama companies on the Pacific coast, and is graduated from Broadway, having played in several Winter Garden productions.

Miss Owen is a pantomine artist of marked ability, and carries the roles, in which she is cast, with a deft precision resulting from a thorough understanding of screen values.

One of this charming girl's weaknesses is strawberry ice cream. In this she indulges a fond appetite—entertaining the while, a hearty contempt of anything that smacks of temperament—she admires a good old fashioned "corn-beef-and-cabbage" genuineness and despises the "pink tea" temperamental variety of up-stage insincerity.

BRITISH NOTES

THE following is a translation of a paragraph in "Le Journal" (Paris) one day last week, which, I venture to think, will be of particular interest to readers of the World who followed the reports of "cold-light" at the time of its invention, three years ago: "The inadequacy of the searchlights upon the occasion of the Zeppelin raids has now been sufficiently demonstrated. The War Minister is thinking of having recourse to the "cold-light" of Dussaud. The inventor succeeded in making use of almost the whole of the electric current for the purpose of illuminating, instead of losing something like eighty or ninety per cent. of the current in the form of heat, as is the case with ordinary lamps. The inventor was the victim of officialdom nearly four years ago and had to abandon all hope of getting a hearing. The Germans bought his patent and the aviators who pursued the Zeppelin on the occasion of the last raid were blinded by the rays of light which flashed in their faces like the sun's rays. These were nothing less than Dussaud's cold-light which could pierce mists in which our searchlights were lost. Now that the merits of this discovery have been recognized, all will be for the best. But we must act quickly." When Dussaud demonstrated the kinematographic application of his invention in London, it was questioned in effect and ridiculed in principle. It remained on the market for a few months but was never commercially exploited.

By the time these notes appear in print, George H. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company, will be in the States on a short business tour. Peggy Hyland, who was starred along with Sir John Hare in the English production, "Caste," has accepted an offer from the Famous Players Company and will also shortly be seen in New York. W. C. Scott, of the Flying A Company, returned to London from America last Saturday.

Joseph Darling, of the Fox Film Corporation, was away in Paris last week with the ultimate object of fixing up the representation of the Fox companies on the Continent.

The tribunals appointed under Lord Derby's recruiting scheme to consider and grant exemption from service to men who come within its administration are not dealing leniently with the moving picture industry. Already a large number of exhibitors have been called up at notice far too short to permit of proper arrangements being made for the maintenance of their shows. One well-known circuit of picture theaters has taken time by the forelock and already appointed a manageress.

Irish newspapers of recent dates have contained a few interesting contributions upon American films. A Munster man in "The Irish Times" opens a long appeal for film production in Ireland by asking, "Is it not a matter for regret that, at a time when the film producing industry is firmly established in every country of note in the world, Ireland is the usual melancholy exception?" "But," says another, the "Irish Independent," "the condemnations which certain British papers are administering to the cowboy comedy and the railway drama are senseless. For variety of subjects American films are unrivaled."

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

CLAY GREENE'S PLAY PRODUCED.

Clay M. Greene's Passion Play, "Nazareth," after several tri-ennial productions at Santa Clara, California, and one in Buffalo two years ago, has found a foothold further east. Two Jesuit Colleges in Boston are playing it as a Lenten Festival, and the students of St. Joseph's College, Philadelphia, are to produce it on a more ambitious scale at the Metropolitan opera house that city on April 11.

HARDING LEAVES UNITED PHOTOPLAYS.

W. H. Harding, who has been sales manager for the United Photoplays Company, of Chicago, for the past year, has severed his connections with that company. Mr. Harding has several offers under consideration, and an announcement of his new connection will shortly be made.

Eleanor Woodruff

SOME five years ago a slip of a girl, her hair piled up on her head for the first time, applied to the manager of the Orpheum Theater Stock Company for a position. He needed a girl for a small part and engaged the youngster, —and in this manner Eleanor Woodruff made her start in theatrical work. She admits that she was far from good in the part, but realizing the necessity for hard work if she would advance she devoted all her spare time to study and was soon rewarded by receiving a better part. At the end of the season the leading woman left the cast and Miss Woodruff was selected for the lead. Meanwhile she had several offers, but, following David Belasco's advice that every actor should devote at least two years to stock training, she stuck to the company and played the lead in nearly thirty plays. The next season came her chance to appear on Broadway in the "Five Frankforters." While with this company Louis J. Gasnier offered her an engagement with the Pathe company, which she accepted. The work so appealed to her that she signed a year's contract.

Eleanor Woodruff.

The Vitagraph Company next claimed her and she spent a year starring in feature pictures, some of which are being released now—the most important one "The Hero of Submarine D2," in which she played opposite Charles Richman, being a recent release. Miss Woodruff is now playing opposite Holbrook Blinn in a picture for Equitable. On its completion she will take a rest before resuming work with another company.

Edward Arnold

EDWARD ARNOLD, of Essanay, before entering pictures, won the reputation of being the youngest leading man in stock in America. He is now only twenty-six years of age and promises to be one of the most popular leading men on the screen.

His first work in pictures was in "The Misleading Lady" with Henry Walthall and Edna Mayo, one of the most successful pictures ever produced by Essanay. After appearing in "Vultures of Society" he took the lead in "The Primitive Strain," and handled the part so capably that the fight scene is one of the most famous in pictures.

A cousin whom he had not seen since childhood and whose address was unknown to him, saw the last named picture in a house near his home in the Bronx, and a meeting was effected.

Edward Arnold.

Mr. Arnold was born in New York City in 1890. He was educated in the public schools of that city and at Columbia University. Leaving school he gained his first stage experience with the Ben Greet players in Shakespearian production. He has played in support of such stars as Robert B. Mantell, Ethel Barrymore, John Drew, Maxine Elliott and James K. Hackett. Still later he played in stock in Yonkers, St. Paul, Syracuse, Utica, Savannah, Philadelphia and Richmond. It was while playing at Richmond that he was asked to join Essanay.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

THE last few weeks have been eventful in the Australian motion picture industry.

On February 19 the Theater Royal, the oldest and best-known playhouse in Sydney, opened a new career as a picture theater. This change by the J. C. Williamson management has been entered upon with deliberated preparation, and a notable success was achieved both in the quality of the central film, "Carmen," by the Fox Film Corporation, and in the elaborate character of the supporting program. A small but capable orchestra under the leadership of Mons. Slappofski, a leading musician, whose arrangement of the "Carmen" music embraced nearly the whole opera. Both afternoon and evening the house was densely crowded, and the heat was intense.

Quite a number of miscellaneous subjects were treated on the opening program, and another Fox feature is announced for next week—William Farnum in "The Plunderer."

The same day saw the opening of the big Australian Picture theater, which I have mentioned before in these columns. The Metro feature, "The Heart of a Painted Woman," was the initial attraction, and is at present playing to crowded houses each night. The theater has accommodation for over a thousand persons, and cost £25,000.

The Cines spectacular production, "Julius Caesar," was shown in Sydney this week, after a very successful run in both Adelaide and Melbourne. These subjects are very popular with Australian audiences, and "Julius Caesar" has not been an exception.

The Bosworth film, "Hypocrites," which has caused such a sensation wherever shown, is at present enjoying a long run in Melbourne, being in its fourth week there. The picture had a run of six weeks in this city, at prices from a dollar down to 25 cents.

At the present time, the picturegoing public in Sydney is being inflicted with a series of so-called Kinemapoems, said to have been produced by Donald Cornwallis. This gentleman, blushing with modesty, bills himself as "England's premier elocutionist and pictureplay producer." He also conducts a school of picture acting in this city, and has a good many pupils. Although he has been going to produce pictures for some time past, none have made appearance so far.

George Willoughby, for many years head of a big theatrical concern with branches in all the Australian capitals, is now producing high-class photoplays. A company of prominent stage artists has been secured, and stories written by prominent people will be screened. The first releases include "Emilien Moreau," from the play at present meeting with great success in England. This will be followed by adaptations of the stage plays, "The Woman in the Case" and "A Fool There Was"; "A Pearl of Great Price," by John Oxenham, and "The Love That Saved," by Randolph Bedford, a well-known local author.

Wonderland City, once a favorite resort, having such amusements as switchback railways, etc., and situated five miles from Sydney, has been secured by the new concern as a studio. Washed on the eastern side by the Pacific Ocean, it is an ideal spot, as there is splendid scenery nearby. The company is to be complimented on having secured this ground, which covers an area of something like twenty acres.

The above news is of great interest to the trade in Australia, as no company has produced pictures regularly for several years. The Willoughby photoplays will be released regularly, one each month.

The scenery in and around Sydney is unsurpassed for the filming of pictures. While in the United States many companies send their actors many hundreds of miles to secure the proper locations, a film company situated in this city need only work on a fifty-mile radius and would secure more different kinds of scenery than any American director has ever made. The climatic conditions are, if anything, better than those of California. The rainy season rarely, if ever, extends over more than a period of six weeks in the whole year. In short, everything is favorable for successful picture production.

A most interesting film has just been released by the Co-operative Film Exchange. The subject, which is entitled "Across Australia," is nearly four thousand feet in length, and is of an educational scenic nature. It was taken by Francis Birtles, known as the "Overlander," who makes periodical trips across the continent through unexplored regions. The picture is very valuable from an educational standpoint, as it gives a great insight into the mode of living, etc., of the Australian black tribes. Many scenic wonders are included, one being a particularly fine dust storm. So much variety is given that the interest never lags once throughout the whole four reels.

"Sealed Lips" (Equitable) is a really good adaptation of "The Silence of Dean Maitland." Two versions of this novel have been screened before, one being by an English company, a very poor production. The other, made locally by Fraser Films, Ltd., was well up to the standard of imported films. It is now having a very successful run in England.

"The Juggernaut" drew large crowds, but is rather disappointing, apart from the magnificent train wreck.

"Kilmeny" (Morosco)—Lenore Ulrich won a name for herself by her work in "The Better Woman," and "Kilmeny" added to her reputation.

"The Face in the Moonlight" has not been so successful as other World features with Robert Warwick, as costume plays are not at all popular in this country.

Paramount's Handsomest Man

NOT all the handsome men that work for motion picture corporations appear in pictures. Some have their beauty hid behind closed doors. Such is the case of Arthur L. Eschert, of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, who has been voted the handsomest man of the corporation.

Modest, big, strong of body and mind, but lacking even a single ounce of conceit, Mr. Eschert, by reason of the honors conferred upon him by the members of the organization, was forced to enter the Motion Picture Mail-Universal Handsomest Man Contest, and it is said without fear of contradiction that he will most likely be one of the men from whom Violet Mersereau will have to chose for her husband; it being her idea to pick the handsomest man for her leap-year husband.

Arthur L. Eschert

"Sure, I'd marry the lady. She's as lovely and sweet as any one could wish for," Mr. Eschert said, "but my only regret is that she is not a Paramount star, for I have always been strong for Paramount girls. And moreover, if I am the lucky person, I too, would go into pictures and leave the business end of the industry just to be with my wife."

Mr. Eschert, who is a particularly busy man, has given over his future fortunes, both the affairs of his prospective wife and his future in the motion pictures, to William J. Mitchell, who is acting as his personal manager.

Oh, you Arthur!

Peggy Hyland Joins Famous Players

FOLLOWING closely upon the announcement that Valentine Grant was soon to appear in a Famous Players-Paramount picture there comes the news of another addition to the ranks of the Famous Players in the person of Peggy Hyland, an English beauty who will soon make her film debut. Miss Hyland's first vehicle has not yet been decided upon.

Though new to American audiences, Peggy Hyland is one of the most popular of British actresses, having won successes both on the stage and screen in her native country. On the stage, Miss Hyland first appeared with Cyril Maude at the London Playhouse, subsequently playing the leading role in "The Little Cafe." Later she appeared at the Duke of York's in "The Yellow Jacket."

Peggy Hyland.

Miss Hyland's first screen role was in "The Love of an Actress," which was followed by "John Halifax, Gentleman," and "Lochinvar." Just before she sailed for America, Miss Hyland appeared in a great film presentation of Tom Robertson's great play, "Caste," in which she played the role of Esther Eccles—Eccles being played by Sir John Hare.

Miss Hyland is a slip of a girl, charming, winsome, unaffected. Extremely clear-cut features and light brown hair make her an ideal subject for the camera.

UNITED FILM SERVICE CORPORATION.

Chicago is now the headquarters instead of New York for the main office of the United Film Service Corporation controling ten exchanges west of this city. These exchanges are all handled by live wire managers. In fact, the officers of this corporation are very well known to the trade, namely, D. J. Chatkin, vice president, and M. Feldstein, secretary and treasurer. The president, M. A. Levy, is a well-known Chicago man, being president of the Motor Necessity Company and a prominent contractor and builder.

The United Film Service Corporation will handle any film proposition, no matter how large or small, providing it has merit, and it is in a position to give manufacturers an outlet covering the entire northwest. The main office in Chicago, large and well equipped, is located at 17 North Wabash avenue.

BIG KERRIGAN FEATURE COMING.

Director Otis Turner made some unusual scenes in the five-reel feature, "A Son of the Immortals," in which J. Warren Kerrigan is playing the featured lead. In fact, it is said no more striking scenes have been enacted at Universal City.

Turner used five hundred persons, a full troop of cavalry and a large number of automobiles in the various scenes of the photoplay. Special buildings were constructed and regular streets laid out with brick sidewalks and curbings and no detail was overlooked to get the best possible photography.

Karvo Poloskova, the celebrated Russian Danseuse, was especially engaged for the big ballroom scene in "Love's Toll," a multiple reel photoplay feature written by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman for the Lubin Company. In this scene the members of three musical comedy companies served as extras. It was taken on the largest stage in the country, that of the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia. "Love's Toll" is to be released as a V-L-S-E classic.

PITTSBURGHERS HELP ACTORS' FUND.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer for the motion picture campaign for the Actors' Fund, has received a check for $100 from Al. W. Cross, chairman of the Pittsburgh local committee for the motion picture campaign, as the result of the first gun fired in aid of the million dollar permanent endowment for the Actors' Home.

COLOR AND REALISM, TOO, IN THIS SCENE.

In one scene of the eighteenth episode of "Graft," which is being filmed by Director Richard Stanton, the latter, who is playing the leading part, was required to arise from a grave. In the foreground of the picture, a colored man and woman were sitting on a bench making love, when an owl in a tree above them hooted. They had no knowledge at all of a man being "planted" in the grave. The owl had startled them both when the earth began to move in the mound to be followed by the arm of a man. The colored performers made a wild dash for safety. The camera got the very finest expression of fear to be imagined as the couple had never been rehearsed in the scene.

HARRY MEYERS AND MISS THEBY WITH VIM.

Vim Film Corporation announces that Harry Meyers and Rosemary Theby have joined its forces and will be seen in single-reel refined comedies. These will be released on the General Film program, one each week. The two well-known players left for the Vim studio in Jacksonville, Fla., on Tuesday, April 4. Accompanying them was Harry Kepers, expert cameraman.

LUBIN SELECTS BEACH STORIES.

Scenarios are in preparation for the transformation of the Rex Beach novels into photoplay features by the Lubin Company. "The Barrier," "The Silver Horde" and "The Iron Trail" are underlined for production. The Lubin Company is determined to make each play mark an epoch in screen achievement. The companies will be established in the localities described by Mr. Beach in the novels.

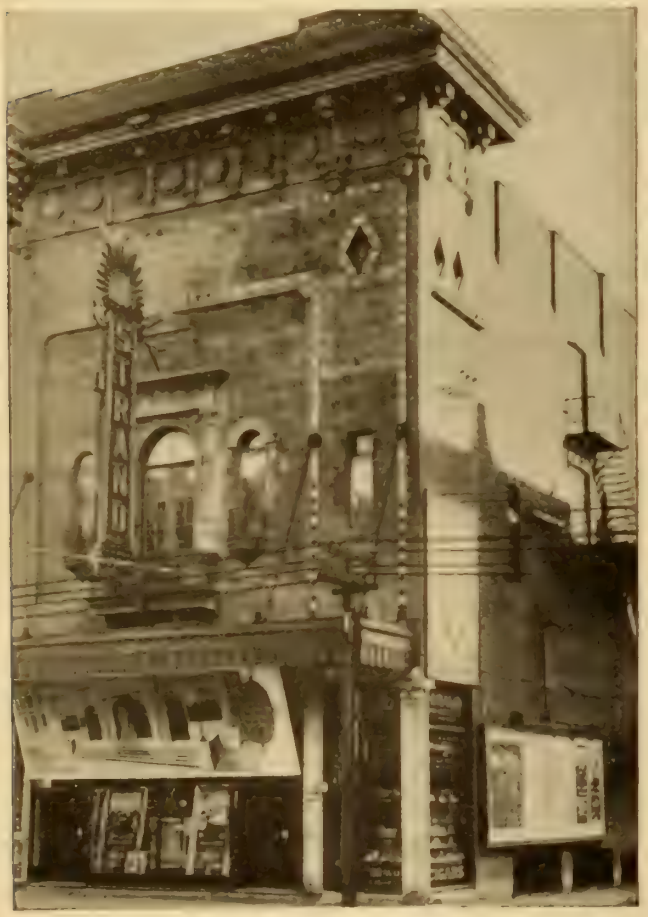
STRAND, MONTREAL, QUEBEC.

One of the Most Popular Photoplay Houses in the Metropolis—Represents an Investment of $80,000.

THE cut accompanying this article is that of one of Montreal's most popular moving picture houses, the Strand. The Strand was opened more than two years ago, and was one of the newer kind of moving picture theaters in the Canadian metropolis. It is a handsome house, at the same time not being too elaborate, but built with the practical always in view. The theater is built on a lot 43 feet wide and 90 feet long. The exterior presents a lofty aspect, and is built of concrete, the decorations being of a character best described by saying that they are green mosaic. The management believes in advertising and consequently an attractive display of paper and announcements is always indulged in. The lobby gives one the idea of stability as it is built solidly, and the ceiling is lofty. The decorations in the lobby as well as the rest of the theater, are green. The floor is of marble, and decorations in old ivory are in pleasing contrast to the green color scheme.

G. Ganatakos.

The auditorium, as has been said before, has green decorations and old ivory finishings and designs. There are seats for 850 persons. A piano is the principal musical accompaniment to the photoplay, and this is presided over by William Eckstein, who is generally conceded a clever pianist. The operating booth is equipped with two Simplex machines. Good projection is the general rule. The theater is owned by the Independent Amusement Company, Ltd., a concern capitalized at a quarter of a million dollars. The Strand itself is an investment of $80,000. This particular theater is considered one of the successful Montreal houses from a financial point of view, as it has always paid lucrative dividends. The managing director of the company is G. Ganatakos, whose photograph is reproduced on this page. Mr. Ganatakos is a successful exhibitor.



Strand Theater, Montreal, Quebec, Canada.

The Independent Amusement Company, Ltd., besides operating the Strand, also own and conduct the Moulin Rouge on the same street, but several miles away. The Moulin Rouge caters mostly to a French clientele. The Regent theater, which is under course of construction in Montreal, is likewise an investment of this company. The Regent will be one of the most luxurious houses in Canada, and represents an investment of $100,000. It is located in the north end of the city.

PARAMOUNT-EMPRESS THEATER, SALT LAKE CITY.

On February 12 last—Lincoln's Birthday—the Paramount-Empress theater was opened in Salt Lake City, Utah. It is an attractive house, both inside and out, and has been playing to good business since its dedication. The theater is handsomely decorated in old rose, gray and gold, and is practically fireproof. It is probably the best-constructed photoplay house in the state.

H. E. Ellison, formerly manager of the Princess theater, Denver, Colo., is the man "behind the wheel" at the Paramount-Empress. He is an experienced picture man, and it is safe to predict that the theater will have a long and prosperous career in his hands. The opening bill was Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina" and the Paramount Pictographs.

Paramount-Empress Theater, Salt Lake City, Utah.

This new photoplay house has all the up-to-date innovations and improvements. There can be found in convenient locations beautiful rest rooms for women, well-appointed smoking reservations for men, a well-equipped nursery for children with maids in attendance, telephone booths, sanitary drinking fountains and numerous other necessities. A Gold Fibre screen is used, and a nine-piece orchestra, which is under the direction of Willard E. Weihe. The box office is fitted with automatic ticket selling machines.

Director William Bowman has completed the filming of "The King of Broadway," in which Carter De Haven, the well-known comedian, plays the featured lead, and he is now getting ready to begin work on a new film play, the title of which has not been determined.

"The Wall Between"

Army Caste is Theme of Latest Quality-Metro Production Starring Francis X. Bushman.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE Metro Corporation is to be commended on its choice of subjects reflecting American life. Just at this time, with the great furore over preparedness and a larger army, audiences can hardly remain unmoved by a story of the service, especially if it suggests the desirability of a democratic reform. "The Wall Between," produced in five reels by John W. Noble of the Quality Pictures Corporation, from a book by Ralph D. Paine, is such a story. It is a plea for the enlisted soldier, the first class fighting man, and a thrust at the snobbery that seems to be such an inevitable and unfortunate part of a military caste, here or elsewhere.

An explanatory title at the opening of the picture, supplemented by a few lines on the screen, denoting a wall with officers on one side and men condemned to remain on the other, indicates the intention of the production. For purposes of drama, the author was entirely within his rights in selecting exceptional, rather than typical cases; hence in Sergeant Kendall, played by Francis X. Bushman and Lieutenant Burkett, presented by John Davidson, we find an extraordinarily able soldier and an astonishingly caddish officer. The conflict is between these two men and other characters in the play, accurately drawn as they are, must rest in a subordinate position.

Kendall is a college graduate, who, through force of circumstances is led to enlist in the army, and having enlisted he performs every duty with scrupulous exactness. Burkett owes his place in the service to political influence, and being an incompetent as well as a cad, is cordially disliked by officers and men alike. Trouble starts over the sergeant's unintentional failure to salute his superior, continues when Kendall, in civilian's clothes, is introduced at a country club, and terminates with the lieutenant's resignation from the army, after he has displayed hopeless cowardice in action.

Before becoming a director, Mr. Noble was an army officer and in producing a picture of this type his experience was of the greatest value. Care was taken to observe the details of army etiquette; scenes were such as might reasonably occur at a post and the campaign in Nicaragua, the spectacular feature of the production, was handled with military expertness. For the better part of a reel we see Mr. Bushman in the thick of the fight, leading his men over trenches and saving the regiment endangered by the failure of Burkett. There is no need to comment on the ability of Mr. Bushman to portray a character of this description, or on the likable qualities of Beverly Bayne, his leading woman. A defect in the production, which might be remedied, is an over-abundance of speaking titles that retard the action.

"The King of Broadway," the five-reel feature photoplay in which Carter De Haven is being starred, has been completed by Director William J. Bowman, and is being prepared for shipment. Fast time was made in the filming of this photoplay which was written by Bowman.

Produced for World Film

"The Reapers" Urges the Power of Faith—"Then I'll Come Back to You," a Play of Sentiment.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"The Reapers."

MIRACULOUS recoveries, by no means a rarity in photoplays, generally are attributed to surgical expertness. In "The Reapers," produced by Burton King of the Triumph-Equitable Company, from a scenario by Eve Unsell, it is different. Christian Science replaces surgery, and a man paralyzed from the waist down is inspired by an all-powerful faith which cures him of his affliction. Being less extraordinary than the "testimonials" of many Christian Scientists, there is no good reason why this sudden return to health should not be utilized in a photodrama. To deny the possibility of such a happening would be to deny the efficacy of Christian Science and the right of an author to use it as a recognized fact. On this score, "The Reapers" is not open to serious objection.

Another turn in the plot is more likely to stir adverse comment. Albert Jordan is introduced as a man of means, the head of a large publishing house. Occuping such a position he most certainly would not be completely dropped because of physical incapacity; yet Jordan soon is reduced to such financial straits that he is forced to sell papers at a corner newsstand. Also, the main reason advanced for the elopement of his wife with a temporarily prosperous gambler, is the inability of the husband to provide the luxuries so dear to some feminine souls. All this seems a trifle improbable in the life of a man definitely established in the business world.

The picture in its entirety, however, makes a strong bid for sympathetic appreciation. Overlooking the improbability of finding Jordan in such a predicament, there is no gainsaying the appeal of the man as portrayed by John Mason, and that of the delightful little girl playing the daughter in childhood. Perhaps Mr. Mason never had an equally good opportunity to reveal his ability as a screen actor. In a role that might easily be over-played, he gives due heed to the demand for pathos and spiritual exaltation, without sacrificing the manliness of the character. The foolish wife, whose fine feathers become sadly soiled as her gambler-lover descends the social scale, is presented with sincerity by Clara Whipple. Warner Oland as the gambler, Rene Dentling as Edna Jordan and Piere LeMay as her fiance, complete the cast. The picture was adequately mounted.

"Then I'll Come Back to You."

The photoplay version of Larry Evans' story, directed by George Irving of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, is pleasingly naive. It is life still in the glamour of love's young dream, when the fates kindly conspire to assist the deserving and frustrate evil-doers. "Then I'll Come Back to You" should strike a responsive chord in the very young, in the very old and in those of all ages who enjoy the fresh charm of Alice Brady. It may be wholesome sentiment, or it may be unconvincing sentimentality, all according to the point of view.

Early in the action we are introduced to a party of children, among them Steve O'Mara, a ragged little boy, and Barbara Allison, a smart little girl. Even in youth Steve champions the fair Barbara and when they part, it is with the understanding that he will return to claim her. Much happens during a ten years' interval, at the close of which Steve is in charge of the construction of a mountain railroad, whereas the villain of the story, Barbara's fiance, has sound business reasons for wishing to prevent the completion of the road at the appointed time. Here are the two opportunities for conflict—the railroad and the girl—and in both Steve wins the decision. Also, at the end of a perfect day, he is advised of a will making him heir to a valuable lumber tract.

The story permits the use of a wide variety of attractive locations and towards the close introduces about a reel of spirited action, including a fight to a finish between Jack Sherrill as Steve and George Kline as a pugilistic laborer. As stated in a sub-title, "all at once everything seems to happen." Miss Brady does not slight any of the possibilities in the role of Barbara and Mr Sherrill makes a manly, hard-hitting hero.

"THE VOICE IN THE NIGHT."

A Cleverly Constructed Three-Reel Lubin Photodrama, Directed by Clay M. Greene.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Voice in the Night" has the prime requisite of a photoplay—it is always entertaining. It owes this condition principally to the fact that it is cleverly constructed. The story in itself is not remarkable for originality, deep insight into familiar phases of life or the strength of its moral lesson. It is unfolded so skilfully, however, that the interest is never permitted to drop.

Starting with the well-tried situation of an enterprising young reporter on the lookout for "live" copy, a mysterious murder is shown, to which the young fellow is a witness, and subsequent events are devoted to the tracking of the guilty man. The shooting was really done in self-defense, but this fact is not brought out until the man who fired the shot reveals all the details of the affair to the reporter. This man is a minister, and the reporter gets the clue to his identity by the sound of his voice when he hears him preach. The minister's young sister has been betrayed. Later she marries the Governor of the State, and the man who deceived her, attempts blackmail. The woman goes to her brother for counsel and is advised to keep a clandestine appointment insisted upon by Joseph Leach, the betrayer. The minister is first on the scene and wears a mask. When Leach arrives he is warned by the minister that he must stop his attempt at blackmail. Leach draws a pistol, but is himself shot during the struggle for the weapon. The reporter, hiding in the shadow, hears the sound of the minister's voice. Having resolved that he will track the man unaided and so secure a "scoop" for his paper, the reporter puts his plan into execution. When all the facts are in his possession, he realizes that only the innocent will suffer if he makes copy of the affair. His paper loses a big "scoop."

While watching the development of such a plot it is essential that the interest of the spectator be held with a firm grasp, as the plausibility of the story will not stand deliberate analysis. The author and the producer of "The Voice in the Night" have never lost sight of this important point.

The picture is satisfactorily acted by Arthur Matthews, Francis Joyner, Leslie Austin, James Cassady, Hollins Anthrim and Helen Greene.

"The Cycle of Fate"

A Photodrama of the Sea and the Underworld, by Selig, with Bessie Eyton and Wheeler Oakman in the Well-Assigned Cast—Written and Directed by Marshal Neilan.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE Cycle of Fate," a V-L-S-E subject by Selig, released Monday, April 3, can be commended for its gripping story and strong dramatic incidents, the latter having to do with life in the underworld of a great city.

The opening scenes are picturesque and beautiful, showing a rockbound coast and the jutting headland, on which a lighthouse commands a fataway sweep of the sea. Old Sandy Hodge, a sturdy mariner of Scotch descent, and his only child Maybelle live there all alone until Aaron Strong, the strapping captain of the schooner Seal, comes along and makes Maybelle his bride. Then Aaron leaves for a cruise and is lost. The news brings death to Maybelle, who succumbs to hopeless grief, after giving birth to twins, named Maybelle and Joe Strong. The children bear on their left hands a birthmark exactly like the scar on the corresponding hand of their mother, caused by an exploding lamp, on the night that she heard of her husband's death.

Old Sandy Hodge treats his little grandson Joe so harshly that he runs away from home while still a boy, and after years have passed we find him a daring member of a dangerous band of outlaws in the great city. Maybelle, in the meantime, has grown up to be a beautiful girl, and teaches school near the old home. Her exacting grandfather demands every penny of her earnings, and the girl, in turn, becomes tired of the home nest. She becomes infatuated with a young man from the city, who has been befriended by her grandfather and herself, and accompanies him to the metropolis to become his bride. But this man, Sid Aldrich, seeks only her ruin. He is a member of the gang to which her long lost brother Joe belongs, and fate wills it that Joe should save her from his clutches. The birthmark reveals her identity to Joe, and without making himself known he puts up a brave and reckless fight in her defense that results in her salvation.

Miss Bessie Eyton appears as Maybelle, the granddaughter of Sandy Hodge, and the sweet girlishness and confiding nature of her prototype are delightfully shown. The spectator will be pleased to see that Maybelle comes into her birthright as the wife of a Dr. Burton, who attended her during the sickness that resulted from the drug administered by the villain Aldrich and his companion, Boss Kipper.

Wheeler Oakman's Joe Strong is a finely drawn type of the young man whose honest ancestry struggles for the mastery over evil environment. Joe's doughty courage in wrongdoing to save poor little Mame O'Malley, whom he loves, from the ravages of consumption, almost takes on an air of virtue in one's eyes. And that fight against big odds to save his sister from the spoilers, in which ready wit and lightning action are brought into play, makes the heart thump and the brain thrum.

The Boss Kipper of Al. W. Filson is another strong characterization, of an entirely different type. Here we have the brute revealed without any redeeming compensation, so vividly, indeed, that we are forced to loathing. Frank Clark's Sandy Hodge is drawn to the life. Some of us have known men just like this honest, God-fearing, austere old Scot, who makes life a hardship in order that heaven may be all the sweeter, and who—next to his faith—esteems money the greatest possession.

The Sid Aldrich of Lewis Cody is another well-drawn character, of the repulsive type. Deserving of mention before this is Miss Edith Johnson's Maybelle, mother of the Maybelle and Joe, who figure so prominently in the story. One will long remember the look of anguish and utter hopelessness on Maybelle's face as she stands on the cliff, after looking down on the sea that has robbed her of a husband and her children of a father, as shown by Miss Johnson.

In addition to able direction of "The Cycle of Fate," Mr. Neilan has found time to give us a Dr. Burton that appeals strongly to our better instincts.

Biograph Reissues for May

More Griffith Subjects With Casts That Mean Much to Followers of the Screen.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE neatness and clarity of Griffith's construction were emphasized at a private showing of the five Biograph reissues selected for May. In one of the pictures, "The House with the Closed Shutters," titles had not been inserted, yet without any printed explanations there never was a question about the meaning of the scenes, and this, despite a quite unusual plot for a Civil War drama. Of course the story will be strengthened by appropriate inserts before release; but it speaks well for the native power of a picture when the action is so unmistakably self-explanatory. Henry Walthall plays a cowardly soldier, who for long years is hidden in a room with closed shutters, lest the disgrace become known. Dorothy West appears as the sister who is shot in performing the mission which the brother flunked.

"Swords and Hearts" is another Civil War story, swift in movement, keenly dramatic and exceedingly well acted by Dorothy West, Claire McDowell, Wilfred Lucas, Francis Grandon and Vernon Clodges. Here, as on numerous other occasions, Griffith displayed an ability to duplicate Civil War settings and types seldom approached by other directors. In "The Mistake" we find an interesting and somewhat unexpected treatment of a dramatic triangle, with scenes photographed in the beautiful California valley that supplied locations for many of the early Biograph productions. Charles Mailes is a rugged miner, Blanche Sweet his pretty wife, and Henry Walthall the man suspected of stealing her love. But it is all a mistake, as the jealous husband learns after he has shot his supposed rival.

"The Perfidy of Mary" opens with a poetic prologue, marked by the finest kind of artistic settings and lighting, and passes naturally into a modern story of character comedy and sentiment, in which a young Lothario courts first one girl, then another and ends by losing both. Dorothy Gish and Mae Marsh share the honors in this production with Walter Miller and Lionel Barrymore. "During the Round-Up" is a picture of ranch life acted with considerable intensity by Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish and Fred Burns. There is a quantity of hard riding, culminating in a thrilling chase and the rescue of Miss Gish.

"A Wife's Sacrifice."

Latest Fox Offering Well Acted and Ably Directed, But Has Weak, Unconvincing Story.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WITH a woeful lack of human probability, the latest Fox picture, "A Wife's Sacrifice," has every other quality of a good offering, except its subtitling. One of its subtitles, the one that sets forth on the screen the feelings of the hero's daughter when he has told her that her mother is in disgrace, is an illustrious example of inept screen writing. The story reminds one of the early school of five years ago when brands long forgotten were doing marvelous things with human nature. But we have used up all our criticism. The picture, directed and played as it is, is far from being worthless as entertainment. It shows plenty of admirable work on the part of producer and cast. It has many beautiful scenes.

Robert B. Mantell carries the prominent role with a calm assurance of mastery that fulfills the classic motto, "in nothing too much," and leaves an impression of real humanity. Winsome even in her villainness part, Genevieve Hamper helps. Stewart Holmes, always an able actor, has the heavy role, as her brother. Claire Whitney and Walter Miller are the juveniles and both are pleasing. Jane Lee, Louise Rial and Genevieve Blinn have good roles and do acceptable work.

The picture was put on by J. Gordon Edwards who has made it run with a smooth and easy naturalness though no directing in the world could make it convincing. The story certainly was not director proof nor actor proof. The sets and trimmings are what they ought to be and the camera work seems to be excellent.

Helen Marie Osborn, a Pathe "Starette."

To Balboa has come the unique distinction of being the birthplace of a starette. She is Helen Marie Osborn, the featured player in "Little Mary Sunshine," released by Pathe on its Gold Rooster program. Baby Marie was just three years old when she did the picture for Balboa, under Henry King's direction. Now, she is the talk of filmdom. The youngest leading woman before the public she has been hailed as "the brightest baby star of the films." It is generally agreed that Balboa has a real find in this little actress.

"The Vital Question"

Love and Business Are Important Factors in Vitagraph Drama Produced by S. Rankin Drew.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

HAVING followed the five reels of this Vitagraph drama, passing under the name of "The Vital Question," one may ask, where is the question and what is the answer? The significance of the title is too vague; for even in these days of free nomenclature and the choice of words with a view to their advertising strength, it is well that they should have a pertinent bearing on the subject behind them. The production in point might have been christened more appropriately.

Joseph L. Norris wrote a story of high and crooked finance—so frequently synonomous—which found a competent producer in S. Rankin Drew. Barring some photography that appeared out of focus in the print shown for review, the workmanship in this picture is excellent and the acting is better yet. We have Virginia Pearson, conveying perfect sincerity in her portrayal of an unselfish woman; George Cooper, described as her weak, but affectionate brother; Leo Delaney, as a militant district attorney; Anders Randolf, as the head of a nefarious trust and Charles Kent, as an influential business man who has over-stepped the legal mark. The picture is so well acted and staged that one may overlook the absence of a story justifying the use of the word, "vital."

Probably first interest will center in Miss Pearson's characterization of Beatrice King, certainly an unusual woman in her regard for her father, who commits suicide, rather than face the exposure of commercial irregularities, and in her devotion to a weakling brother. These two, brother and sister, are the real force behind the plot, advanced with considerable adroitness to show the sacrifices a truly unselfish woman may make. In love with an irreproachable young lawyer, later district attorney, Beatrice becomes the wife of a trust magnate, merely to save her brother from the penalty of forgery. Need it be added that the district attorney is indefatigable in his efforts to expose the trust, that he is successful and that the head of the combine is eventually killed, making possible the union of Beatrice and her faithful champion.

A few slips in the production, such as the scene in which a bank refuses Mrs. Worden's check at the request of her husband, though her account is good—something that could not happen—do not seriously mar the dramatic force of the story. The main characters ring true and the plot, in its entirety, is not illogical.

Triangle Program

"Sold for Marriage" and "Hoodoo Ann," Both Five-Reel Fine-Arts Films.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"SOLD For Marriage" is a carefully made and fairly interesting picture of Russian life at home and in the Russian colony at Los Angeles. Its greatest force is dependent on realism, for, if the scenes and incidents are "true to life," as the critic says in his first efforts, they afford an interesting glimpse of the low status of Russian civilization. They are probably as true as any we can get at this distance, and the extreme care shown in the matter of small details indicates that they are. At least, they make the action plausible and stimulate thought. The beastliness of marketing women in marriage is strongly enforced, both in the Russian environment and in the customs Russians have imported. Granted that all is as represented on the screen, there is a power in the production beyond its story interest.

Lillian Gish carries her role with her accustomed intelligence, holding attention by sheer weight of intense personality. She has improved in divesting herself of the habit of crooking her elbows in at the body and gesticulating with her hands alone, in favor of a free-arm movement much more effective, but she still manifests a high nervous organization in her movements. She is such a capable actress in other respects, that it is to be hoped she will acquire greater control of little nervous workings of which she is unconscious, which give a sameness of characterization to the roles she assumes. A. D. Sears as her uncle in the play gives an admirable performance, and the cast generally is good.

"Hoodoo Ann."

"Hoodoo Ann" has some amusement and Mae Marsh in it, but it is so obviously a manufactured story, the kind we write at the studio, that the initial characterization, very promising in its way, is lost sight of in the badly-arranged structure and an apparent abandonment of original purpose. It starts as a Cinderella story, poor Ann despised by her sisters, in this case her schoolmates and leads up to the child's adoption by a tender-hearted old couple in easy circumstances. At this point, when some amusing consequences of a sudden change of environment were to be expected, the story jumps a couple of years for no visible purpose, a thing not to be done under any circumstances if it can be avoided. Another story is started about the quarrels of neighbors and an accidental shot which nearly involves an innocent party, all brought about by an interminable moving picture exhibition something entirely foreign to the main story interest. A mere glimpse of the motion-picture story within the main story would have served the purposes of suggestion, but the whole thing is a studio melange like one of those salads men think they know how to make. Mae Marsh and an occasional bright subtitle may lift the picture over, but it could not get far without their aid.

"The Traffic Cop"

Five-Reel Thanhouser in the Mutual Masterpicture Series.

"THE Traffic Cop" is unique in some respects, and it will probably be popular, but its main assets are the impersonations of Gladys Hulette and Howard M. Mitchell, the flash of some bright subtitles and an occasional glimpse of inside police methods. There is ingenuity shown where the heroine diverts attention from a falsely-accused man who is escaping from the police—she compels an unsuspecting book agent to be caught in her company when she realizes that the police will be obliged to identify him as the man they are after by the place they find him and the company he is in—enabling the innocent man to get away pending detection of the one who is really guilty. Miss Hulette is fully equal to the opportunities afforded her in this and other situations, and she helps materially to carry the play on to success by the grace with which she portrays a woman of tact, one who knows how to do the right thing at the right time.

Howard M. Mitchell is an athletic hero, a fighting cop, who wins the heroine through a spirited chase of a runaway horse on which she is mounted, and he does well wherever he is called on for mental revelation, but the story is not particularly strong on psychology, and, at this stage of motion-picture development, that means a story not particularly strong. Nearly every pronounced feature success contains a certain amount of fascinating psychology from beginning to end. There is observable the Thanhouser intelligence of production which avoids offence to intelligence in the audience, and that is always a big step toward high artistry of production.

"The Iron Claw"

Chapters 4 and 5 Bear Out the Promise Contained in the First Episodes of the Serial.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Pathe serials have come to be household words in the home of the picture fan. They bring with them a world of thrilling anticipation; there are to be hair-breath escapes; there are plenty of good people and plenty of bad people to make things interesting; and in fact the artistic pass to which the Pathe Exchange, Inc. has brought the making of a film serial has won the confidence of the picture public.

"The Iron Claw" with Pearl White, Sheldon Lewis, Creighton Hale, the "Laughing Mask" trailed always by a question mark, and other fine types in the cast, is holding the interest aroused in the first memorable episode when it became necessary for Legar to replace his mutilated right hand with the iron claw from which the serial takes its name. Chapters four and five are named respectively "The Name and the Game" and "The Intervention of Tito." In the first mentioned the mysterious masked personage that has repeatedly befriended Margery gets, as it were, the laugh on Legar and his men when he disguises as one of Legar's confederates and takes possession of the cash boxes containing Golden's wealth that have been stolen from the bank by Legar. The money is returned to Golden, and passing on to the next episode we find Legar desirous of obtaining a portion of a valuable paper that is hidden in the Golden safe, and which contains an incriminating confession forced from him at a previous date. Margery coming from the safe, paper in hand, is pounced upon by Legar who has succeeded in entering the Golden home, and is forced back into the safe and imprisoned therein until her rescuers are enlightened as to the combination by the Poll parrot who has learned to repeat it. The Laughing Mask gains possession of the paper before Legar gets very far from the house, and at the close of the episode a thrilling escape on the part of Manly from the den of Legar, where he has been retained after a capture, again brings the parrot into play. Polly this time upsets the lamp and sets fire to a keg of dynamite causing a terrific explosion.

There is no mistake about "The Iron Claw" being one of the best serials on the market.

"The Great Problem"

A Bluebird Photoplay That Depends Largely Upon the Attractiveness of Violet Mersereau.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WITHOUT Violet Mersereau, or someone equally fetching to head the cast, "The Great Problem," written and produced by Rex Ingram, probably would not last long as a five reel feature. Either the film editor would use his shears until a few thousand feet had been eliminated, or the picture would be passed by in favor of something more vital. With Miss Mersereau exerting her potent girlish charms so freely, it is different. There is at least one sound reason for believing that the production will satisfy the quite prevalent fondness for a glorification of innocent maidenhood, in appealing poverty, in amusing gaucheries consequent upon the girl's entrance into a social life with which she is unfamiliar, and in an eventual triumph over circumstances.

Most emphatically this is Miss Mersereau's picture, and in playing two roles, first the miserable wife of a thief; then the daughter, Peggy, trained in the delicate art of picking pockets, she has opportunities for almost every variety of acting, from intense emotionalism to the lightest sort of pert coquetry. It is not surprising to find that Miss Mersereau is most winning when the character of Peggy comes nearest to approximating her own engaging and youthful self.

But as the title suggests, the story aims at something deeper than the display of a graceful young woman, and it is here that the author-director fails to make his case entirely convincing. Prison reform is the theme, a reform based on a popular belief among contemporaneous sociologists that an unhealthy environment makes criminals and that in wholesome surroundings they may be restored. Peggy is used as a test, the subsequent method of the prison authorities in dealing with their charges to be guided by the district attorney's success or failure in remoulding the nature of the wayward girl. Rather too obviously, the value of a change affecting so many hundreds of men would not be judged on the results obtained in the instance of one immature character. We are forced to dismiss the augument of the picture as negligible.

Scenes of underworld life in the first reel are well staged, and in so far as settings and acting are concerned there is little fault to be found with later passages in the production. There is danger, however, of Director Ingram using close-ups too freely when scenes do not warrant emphasis. Incidental bits of comedy are welcome. The cast includes Dan Hanlon, Lionel Adams and William J. Dyer.

"The Parasite"

Third Episode of the Kalem Serial, "The Social Pirates," Written by George Bronson Howard, and Featuring Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE promise of the Kalem Company that each episode of "The Social Pirates" would be complete in itself has been kept in the first three instalments of the George Bronson Howard serial. "The Little Monte Carlo" and "The Corsican Sisters" revealed the pleasant fact that capable casts, generous and intelligent production and skilfully devised scenarios had been provided for the first two numbers. "The Parasite" belongs in the same good company. The underlying thread of comedy is not quite so pronounced in this picture, but makes itself felt at opportune moments and is used with marked effect at the finish. Dramatically, there is always something to hold the interest.

Mona and Mary, who, from their mission in life, may be classed as a pair of trim and speedy submarines that delight in shooting about in the social sea and sinking the piratical gentlemen who wage warfare against the happiness and moral condition of the weaker sex, get in the wake of a buccaneering heart-breaker and do not give up the pursuit until he is (figuratively) torpedoed and sent to the bottom. The piratical person's name is Reynolds. A fond but foolish female writes him a bunch of compromising letters. These he refuses to return, little thinking that the periscopes of Mary and Mona have sighted him and that he will soon be engaged in a battle of wits with a skilful and determined enemy. The means by which he is forced, against his will, to return the letters and hand over valuable booty belonging to himself, is continuously engrossing if not always plausible, the activity of the two avengers being a source of gratification and entertainment for all onlookers.

Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby have a fresh supply of becoming frocks, and display keen enjoyment in their work—an enjoyment which will be shared in by every spectator. Frank Jonasson is effective as the social freebooter, and Paul C.

Hurst is amusing as a humorously inclined safe-cracker. Producer James W. Horne was master of every situation that make up the two reels.

"Thrown to the Lions"

Mary Fuller Featured in Five-Reel Red Feather Production Which Deals Authoritatively with Modern City Life.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT IS always thumbs down for simple virtue, today as in the days of Nero. That is the analogy carefully worked out in this five reel subject. The short prologue and epilogue, in fact, date back to the time of the cruelest of emperors, picturing a Christian girl at the mercy of the beasts, while the Roman populace looks on.

But there were heroes then, as there are heroes now, to come to the rescue of outraged maidenhood, and the hopeful note is uppermost in this strong offering.

The scenario was adapted by Robert Lusk from a story by Wallace Irwin, whose vigorous fiction is well known to magazine readers. Mary Fuller does some of her best work in the part of Linnie Carter. She is personally appealing and plays with restraint and intelligence. She is assisted by a pleasing cast, which includes Joseph W. Girard, Finita De Sopia, Clifford Gray and Augustus Phillips. Joseph Girard also does some excellent work as the political boss.

The production, barring the opening and closing scenes, is intensely modern in tone. It pictures the experiences of a girl, who with a friend, sets out to win her way by singing for a living in a cafe. She is made the victim of a fake marriage by the political boss, and saved by her comedian friend, Billy Weed. Then the district attorney falls in love with her, but breaks the engagement on the eve of their wedding. Again the comedian proves himself her true friend, and in the end she gives her love to him.

There are some highly dramatic episodes in the latter part of the production: the mock marriage, shooting of Sullivan by the gunmen, and the latter's false accusation on his death bed are all well handled. Not so much from the standpoint of novelty, for almost everything in this number has been done many times before, but because it is a consistent and well-rounded picture of metropolitan life of today, is this to be called a strong subject. The settings and photography are in keeping with the care shown in other details.

"The City of Illusion"

A Six-Reel Photodrama, Written and Directed by Ivan Abramson, and Produced by the Ivan Film Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE title of Ivan Abramson's latest photoplay, "The City of Illusion," suggests a big theme. The author has chosen to make a comedy-drama after the model in vogue on the stage of the popular price theater twenty years ago. All the elements to be found in a big money-maker by Theodore Kramer or the author of "Across the Pacific" are component parts of Mr. Abramson's screendrama. There are the three pairs of lovers that suspend hostilities, sign peace protocols and indulge in a long and lingering kiss just before the finish; the comic relief is brought in at regular intervals, and the happy ending is there, in which everything and everybody comes out just right—including the punishment meted out to the villain. Similar rules of construction, as applied to the art of the photoplay, result in a class of pictures that find favor with many patrons of the screen. "The City of Illusion" will appeal strongly to this grade of theatergoers.

The plot of the drama has for its central theme the wooing of Claire Burton, an unusually unsophisticated country maiden, by Paul Stanford, an elderly southern landowner. For a short time Claire is happy in her new home. Then the serpent enters her Eden, a New York lawyer, who tells her of the wonders of the big town. Claire is infatuated with the man and also with the desire to experience the joy of life as it is lived on Broadway. She calmly asks her husband to divorce her and when he explains the impossibility of granting her request, unless she has been unfaithful, she promptly announces that she has played the wanton with the New York gentleman. Her wish is realized, she hurries north, finds that the lawyer has just married an heiress and does not want another wife, discovers she has made a fool of herself, meets her ex-husband, admits she lied about her lapse from virtue and, as they say in the South, is "mighty glad" to become Mrs. Paul Stanford once more. The other two love affairs are implicated with this motive, also considerable political atmosphere that is fairly interesting.

The production is creditable. Mignon Anderson as Claire Burton followed the lines laid down by the creator of the character with fidelity and pleasing effect. Carleton Macy was equally faithful in his acting of Stanford, and excellent impersonations were contributed by Bradley Barker, Joseph Burke, Paula Shay, Blanche Craig, Mathilda Brundage, Maxine Brown, Willard Case, Guido Colucci and D. H. Gould.

"The Folly of Sin"

Great Northern Drama Gives Another Illustration of Some Familiar Moral Principles.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THAT fame and fortune are not picked up on the path of pleasure will once more be brought to public attention through this Nordisk Film drama, giving due prominence to the pleasing presence of Joan Peterson and to Charles Wieth, a capable actor. In common with other Nordisk Films, "The Folly of Sin" was sharply photographed to bring out the full value of distinctive backgrounds. Interiors always suffice, even approaching elaborateness at times, and the exteriors, selected with a sure appreciation of effective composition, are a yet more certain pictorial asset. The investiture of the latest Great Northern contribution merits the word, artistic.

The story told in these five reels suggests little by way of comment, for it is cut after a standard pattern included in the style book of European scenario writers. Two ambitious doctors, one a social favorite, the other a recluse, experiment with serums for the cure of cancer. Dr. Felix is in a fair way to achieve fame when he succumbs to a hankering after the joys of life. Dr. Hatton, jealous of his rival's impending success, undertakes to lead him on the merry path of pleasure, knowing full well that once started, the cancer cure will be slighted. With Mephistophelian cunning, Dr. Hatton transforms the serious scientist into a man of the world, meanwhile perfecting his own medicinal compound. Success is his reward, whereas the misguided Felix, having made a bad botch of everything, drinks poison.

First among the pitfalls placed in the doctor's path is a pretty woman, and the expected happens. It is interesting to follow the development, or rather degeneration of the character, as presented by Mr. Wieth—his immediate response to feminine charms, his phenomenal good fortune at roulette, his selfish dismissal of the woman he ruins; in fact the complete spoiling of a good doctor to make a harmful cad. For almost two reels the plot advances in leisurely fashion, but after that it improves and the action offers dramatic clashes in ample number. "The Folly of Sin" averages well in the treatment of the story, in the acting and in settings and photography.

"The Folly of Revenge"

Five-Part Offering of New York Film Company Is Exceedingly Melodramatic in Story and Acting.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

DIVIDING current photoplays into classes A, B, and C, "The Folly of Revenge," bearing the trademark of Nola Films and handled by the New York Film Company, falls naturally into the second division. Judged by standards applied to productions designed for American theaters of the first grade, it would not do at all; but there remains a large public still responsive to elementary sensationalism, such as the European studios offered in large quantities several years ago. Whether "The Folly of Revenge" was made last month or last year, is of no consequence, for its model might be found among the products of a much earlier date. In remarking, then, that these five reels are good of their kind and likely to thrill, it is with the understanding that between class A and class B there is a wide gap.

The tone of the story may be gathered from the briefest of plot summaries. A sculptor, having found a model, beautiful in body and soul, completes his masterpiece, marries the woman who inspired him and suffers keenly when she is stolen by Baker, one of his profligate acquaintances. The wife kills herself and Antonio lives in anticipation of a day of reckoning, which comes years later when his daughter has reached maturity. Gypsies engaged to steal Baker's wife, take the sculptor's daughter instead. The girl is saved, but the experience forces Antonio to conclude that it is safer to abandon his long-cherished dream of revenge, so nearly the cause of another tragedy.

In point of studio work, some of the best scenes in the picture come in the opening reel, showing the sculptor and his model during the making of the statue. The woman's suicide by floating over a waterfall, after being tossed about in the rapids of a river, is a notable bit of melodrama, and there is plenty of activity and physical conflict in the gypsy band, of which the sculptor becomes a member. Several of the minor characters are accurately drawn without the exaggerations that mark the playing of Warren E. Lyle in the role of Antonio. But after all, Mr. Lyle may have chosen the best method of interpretation for a picture in which author and director used the full license accorded makers of melodrama. Restraint has no place in "The Folly of Revenge." Locations are attractive and for the most part clearly photographed, scenes move swiftly, the plot is readily followed and the players are adequate.

Preparedness

Juvenile Film Company Deals in Humorous War with Topic of the Day.

THE Juvenile Film Company, which has Paul H. Cromelin for its guiding spirit, has put out some very entertaining films which have found their way into many territories. Though but an infant concern, this company is gaining fame rapidly. Mr. Cromelin, a keen student of conditions in the industry, has started the Juvenile Film Co. because of a belief that good juvenile films were a need in the market. His forecast was entirely correct as is shown by the flattering success which has so far attended his efforts.

The latest production of the Juvenile Film Co. deals in a humorous way with a very timely subject, "Preparedness." All the warring nations are represented in miniature entrenched behind snow forts and fighting valiantly with the exception of Greece, which excites laughter by its indecision and poor Belgium and Servia which excite pity and sympathy. In the midst of all these fights and apparently quite untouched by the mimic strife going on around him is Uncle Sam with the Dove of Peace as his only visible asset. Mexico annoys him a little with an occasional snow ball, but he is evidently pursuing the once celebrated policy of watchful waiting. Japan looms up more dangerously and Uncle Sam begins to show more interest in the struggle that is raging around him. Presently he has a visitation. It is the spirit of '76. Uncle Sam now appreciates the fact that this is the time for preparedness, he lets the Dove of Peace out of the cage and surrounded by the embodiments of the Spirit of '76 he stands in a resolute attitude—not a bit truculent, but no longer dreaming of the millennium.

It is a splendid picture which will please both young and old, but especially the young.

General Film Company.

FREDDY VERSUS HAMLET (Vitagraph), March 24.—Ralph Ince is the scenarioist of this one-reel farce in which the belle of the village falls in love with a fly-by-night Thespian. The plot is mildly amusing, but William Dangman and a remarkably active old cab-horse put unexpected vim into the picture. Tod Talford, William Lytell, Jr., and Daisy De Vere were also of service in helping on the good work.

OTTO THE SOLDIER (Lubin), March 27.—It is to be hoped that when the call to arms is heard again in this country, none of the volunteers will exhibit the same spirit, or lack of it, as Otto, the "hero" of this one-reel comedy. Burk Symon, the author, has taken D. L. Don's measure and fitted him with an excellent comedy role. The situations are amusing, and Florence Williams, Alice Mann and Emily Lowry are useful members of the cast.

SELIG-TRIBUNE No. 25, 1916 (Selig), March 27.—St. Patrick's Day Celebration, Chicago; U. of C. students at Berkley, Cal., in preparedness drill; cutting ice, Waltham, Mass.; jitney railroad, Fresno, Cal.; sinking of the Steamship Herman Winter, Portland, Maine; winter golf on roof of Boston hotel; arrival of troops at Columbus, N. M.; Mexican troops, Chihuahua, Mexico; White Sox at Mineral Wells, Texas; war supplies for Allies, Seres, Greece; army mules for Italy, Yarmouth, Mass.; Allied warships, Saloniki, Greece.

THREE JOHNS (Vitagraph), March 27.—The fun in this one-reel farce is based upon mistaken identity. Edwin Ray Coffin, the author has shaped his material cleverly, and the humorous interest steadily increases until the finish is reached. George Kunkel, George Holt, George Stanley, Otto Beninger, Jack Mower and Anne Schaefer obtain full value for the acting possibilities of the picture.

HAM AND THE HERMIT'S DAUGHTER (Kalem), March 28.—The susceeptible soul of Ham is always getting him into trouble. The unworldly daughter of a hermit finds him a model of manly beauty and he is equally charmed with her. Ham in love is always an object of much mirth. Bud Duncan, Porter Strong, Norma Nicholls and Julie Cruze are members of the cast.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF PARIS (Essanay), March 29.—The skill displayed by Vernon Howe Bailey in his drawings of the great cities of the world makes this series of pictures a welcome addition to any program. The artist's impressions of Paris give a vivid reproduction of many famous buildings and views in the French capital.

THE TRAILING TAILOR (Kalem), March 29.—Howard Irving Young is the author of this one-reel comedy, and William Beaudine made the production. It has a neatly devised plot involving a socially ambitious tailor, and the reel is spiritedly played by Ethel Teare, Jack MacDermot, Gus Leonard and Victor Rottman.

SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 26, 1916 (Selig), March 30.—Fifth Cavalry leaving Fort Meyer, Va.; horse racing at Oriental Park, Havana, Cuba; wounded soldiers at Charing Cross Hospital, London; logging, Bingham, Me.; U. S. sailors on shore leave, Guantanamo, Cuba; big fire, Nashville, Tenn.; Irish Guards win foot race, Warley, Eng.; 23d Infantry arrive at El Paso; on the march into Mexico; Phila. Nationals and Chicago Cubs play game at St. Petersburg, Fla.; "Paseo de Carnival," Havana, Cuba; steamship Governor Cobb entering Havana harbor; cadets at Morro Castle, Havana; milk supply, Havana.

THEIR VACATION (Vim), March 30.—Plump and Runt carry the weight of the fun in this one-reel farce, Plump appearing as a susceptible young gentleman with considerable ready money, and Runt as his valet. There are a number of lively mix-ups during the action of the reel, and strenuosity is the watchword of the entire cast.

ALMOST A HEROINE (Kalem), March 31.—In this Sis Hopkins number the cause of the trouble is another case of "mixing the babies up." The action is rapid and the fun of excellent quality. A review of the picture was published in the issue of April 8, page 282

ANVILS AND ACTORS (Vim), March 31.—A "Pokes and Jabs" comedy that will be found moderately amusing. The comedians in love with the blacksmith's daughter are bitter rivals. Jabbs becomes an actor and Pokes in search of the girl who has suddenly disappeared from her home comes upon Jabbs and his troops in a theater in a neighboring town. Pokes makes a great deal of disturbance, and in fact, breaks up the show by jumping on the stage at the climax of a tragic scene. A good number.

THE TRAPPING OF PEELER WHITE (No 73 of "The Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), April 1.—A new writer for the series is the author of this one-reel Hazard. His name is Herman A. Y. Blackman and he has devised a drama that will stand comparison with the preceding numbers. Helen is still at her old post as operator, and a gang of crooks keep her busy protecting the property of the railroad. True Boardman, Percy Pembroke, Harry Schum and Roy Watson aid Miss Gibson in the acting of the reel.

BILLIE'S DOUBLE (Lubin), April 1.—"The fellow who looks like me" has long been a favorite comic character of the drama. In the present photoplay, written by Clay M. Greene, the counterfeit presentment of Mr. William Reeves is introduced and the author has supplied both gentlemen with wives, one of them with a joyous jag, and housed both families in the same hotel. The ensuing mix-up is good for numerous laughs. Francis Joyner, Margaret Moore, Mrs. Dunmire, Colton White and Charles Griffiths complete the cast.

THE BATTLE OF TRUTH (Biograph), March 22.—An unusual three-part picture based on a story by William Hamilton Osborne, called "The Murder of the Cafe Epicure." The plot is founded on the difficulty of obtaining evidence against criminals protected by political influence. Charles Perley, Jack Drumeir, Charles Mailes, Vera Sisson and Ivan Christie are in the cast.

I WILL REPAY (Essanay), March 25.—The plot of this three-reel drama is not always pleasant, its theme hereditary insanity. The author has worked out the subject in an impressive manner, however, and it has been adequately treated by the cast and the director. Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold and John Junior have the leading roles.

HUSKS (Vitagraph), March 25.—James Oliver Curwood is the author of this three-reel Broadway Star Feature. In working out his theme he shows a fine scorn of the happy ending. There is a suggestion of "The Governor's Lady" and "The Man Without a Country" in the story, but Mr. Curwood has handled the material after his own fashion and turned out a strong, human drama. The different characters are ably played by William Humphrey, Harry Northrup, Carolyn Birch, Rose Tapley and Nellie Anderson.

A SOCIAL DECEPTION (Selig), March 26.—This three-reel photoplay is difficult to classify. At times, it suggests a serious drama; more often, it becomes a "smart" comedy. And it is always entertaining. Things happen in the real story book way, but the author has not taken the theme too seriously and is amusing where a less skillful writer would have dealt in heroics. Much of the success of the picture is due to the clever cast, which includes Harry Mestayer, Wheeler Oakman, James Bradbury, Al W. Filson, Vivian Reed, Grace Darmond and Eugenie Besserer. T. N. Heffron directed the picture.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, No. 10, "The Clew" (Essanay), March 27.—There is no lack of action in the visualized testimony of the witness examined during this session of the trial of Mary Page. A plot to entrap Langdon when he runs against Pollock for congress is shown, and Mary is implicated in the affair. The new clew is given to Langdon by a detective, who informs him that Pollock had a quarrel with several men over a card game the night before the murder.

THE LITTLE MONTE CARLO (No. 1 of the "Social Pirates"), (Kalem), March 27.—The opening installment of the new Kalem Serial by George Bronson Howard, has many merits. Plot, production and cast are all excellent. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of March 25, page 2026.

THE DIXIE WINNER (Essanay), March 28.—Joyce Fair is the center of interest in this two-reel southern drama, in which the fate of the heroine is decided by the result of a horse race. Joyce is the jockey who rides the winner and thus saves her mother from a distasteful marriage. The story is an appealing one and the young actress is perfectly suited to the leading character. Ernest Maupin, Patrick Calhoun and Marian Murray have the other important roles.

THE VOICE IN THE NIGHT (Lubin), March 30.—A review of this picture is printed on another page of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE WALL BETWEEN (Quality) March 20.—Adapted from a book by Ralph D. Paine, this five-part drama of army life goes to show the injustice of the well-nigh insurmountable wall between officers and men in the United States service. The cast is a strong one, headed by Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. A review may be found on another page.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, No. 65 (Metro), March 30.—Excellent scenes on the Mexican border, showing the departure of troops and funeral services of the American dead at Columbus, lead this number in interest. It also contains a wide variety of other subjects. There is a tendency at times to cut certain scenes too short.

THE LION HEARTED CHIEF (Vogue) March 30.—This is a very attractive farce comedy with Priscilla Dean, the pretty heroine of Vogue comedies, Jack Dillon, Frank Coleman, Paddy McGuire, Arthur Moon and Louise Owen in the cast. The story treats of how the Lion Hearted Chief in pursuit of two evil doers is tricked by a young man who loves his daughter into consenting to the marriage of the loving pair. A good deal of slapstick work is encompassed in the business of the play, but it is all amusing and unobjectionable.

ON A STILL HUNT (Vogue), April 2.—A rough and tumble comedy number, by Thos. Delmar. The action is lively and concerns a burlesque detective rounding up some moonshiners. The humor is only fairly strong; the number as a whole is fair.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 2 (Gaumont), April 2.—Daytona, Fla., and vicinity is the subject of this beautiful scenic offering. The trip along the Oklawaha river with its fringe of tropical foliage, and the reflections thereof mirrored in the water is wonderfully attractive in the film and also the under water photography made possible by a glass bottomed boat. The Pelican Islands which are kept by the government as a bird reserve are also interesting. This is finished by a comic cartoon from the pen of Harry Palmer entitled "Nosey Ned."

NOSEY NED (Gaumont), April 2.—On the same reel with the above this truly comic cartoon gives a glimpse of some doings at Columbus, N. M., from where the search for Villa is being directed. "Nosey Ned" barred out by the authorities who taboo war correspondents transforms himself into a bean, takes his place in a bag of beans and distinguishes himself by lassooing William Bryan on a Mexican desert.

RUINING RANDAL'S REPUTATION (Falstaff), April 3.—Riley Chamberlain appears in this as a guardian uncle who refused to let his niece wed. His enemies run him for congress and proceed to put up all manner of political tricks on him. He is glad to step out and withdraws his opposition to the love affair. This has a number of quite amusing situations in it.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN'S MUDDLE (Beauty), April 5.—A comedy number, featuring John Steppling, John Sheehan, Carol Halloway and Dick Rosson. The angry young wife selects Billy as a co-respondent in her proposed divorce case. The humor is of the farcical sort. There is a lively chase by a motorcycle and two automobiles. The number is strong on action.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 30 (Gaumont), April 5.—Del Monte, Cal., is the subject of this number of Gaumont travel series, including the celebrated seventeen mile drive. Charming surf scenes and viws of old missions and other interesting bits of architecture belonging to a past century are shown. On the same reel is a comic cartoon by Harry Palmer "The Greatest Show on Earth."

THE GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH (Gaumont), April 5.—"The Greatest Show on Earth" turns the limelight on the Bull Moose party in a very amusing manner. The front feet of the Moosephant are anxious to travel, while its hind feet are exceedingly pranksome.

THE PROFESSOR'S PECULIAR PRECAUTIONS (Falstaff), April 8. An amusing comedy in which two rival professors of mineralogy figure. The poverty stricken professor is obliged to sell a valuable diamond to his rival who demonstrates to him at the same time the burglar-proof devices with which his wonderful samples are protected. Too frequent use of these devices without reason provoke the police, fire departments, etc., to the extent that when a real alarm call is sent in from this source no notice is taken of it. This fact, of course occasions some queer situations.

ART AND ARTHUR (Beauty), April 9.—With a few eliminations which would undoubtedly be made, this comedy will be found amusing. Orrall Humphrey plays the role of a young artist whose papa is opposed to his artistic ideas and his mamma fosters the idea that her child was born a genius. Arthur, however, becomes the butt of his associates' jokes and upon being found in his studio with a half undressed model, his mamma takes him home "no more to roam."

REVELATIONS (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), March 30.—A powerful five-reel subject, by J. Edward Hungerford, picturing the heart story of a young German girl who has gone to Paris to study music. She has incurred her father's anger by the step, and when poverty comes she begs on the streets rather than sell her honor. A former friend, student in the Latin Quarter, discovers her and takes her home. Separation comes, her child is born, and she wins success as a singer. Then she goes home and a series of intensely interesting episodes occur. Constance Crawley does strong work as Martha, and Arthur Maude and Wm. Carroll also do well as the husband and father. The number tells a highly emotional story and is presented very effectively throughout.

SNOW STUFF (Mustang), March 31.—A three-reel number, featuring Art Accord as Buck Parvin, Dixie Stratton as the leading lady, and others. The Titan Motion Picture Company is seen in the midst of a fine winter landscape at Truckee, Cal. The setting is very pleasing. The plot could well have been handled in two reels instead of three. It pictures the arrival of the new manager from the East. He tries to make love to the leading lady, who sends him reeling into the icy river. There is considerable amusement in the main situation, and the later developments in New York. A little thin in plot, but quite entertaining.

THE NET (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), April 1.—A moderately interesting five-part romance of the sea coast, written by Lloyd Longergan. Ethel Jewett, a beautiful and talented young actress plays the feminine lead with pretty Marian Swayne playing second. Bert Delaney plays the role of the young fisherman who at different times rescues both girls from death, the one from the sea and the other from the quicksands on the shore. Others of the cast are Inda Palmer, Arthur Bauer and Morgan Jones. There are many pretty touches to this production which will be found pleasing to most audiences, but some of the situations of the play are arrived at too easily to prove convincing.

THE TRAFFIC COP (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe—Thanhouser No. 90), April 8.—This will be found to be an intensely interesting and original five-reel number, the story of which was written by Lloyd Lonergan for the Thanhouser Film Corp. The traffic policemen of New York City figure to a considerable extent in the film. The story shows how the younger brother of a police officer gets into trouble and is helped to escape arrest under a false accusation of embezzlement, through the quick wit of his brother's sweetheart. Howard Mitchell and Gladys Hulette are the stars of the play.

THE WAYFARER (American), April 15.—An attractive melodrama in which Vivian Rich plays the feminine lead. The story treats of how a young man wrongly accused of murder in trying to escape the authorities rushes into the room of a young girl who has been wronged by the murdered man, and who is about to poison herself. The two escape and go south where they marry and live happily until the arrival on the scene of the clerk from the office of the murdered man. He tries to ruin the lives of both, and on his way to give them up to the authorities meets with an accident and is killed. The story has been consistently developed and will be found interesting to most audiences.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE SOWERS (Lasky), March 30.—Presenting an all-star cast including Theodore Roberts, Blanche Sweet, Thomas Meighan and others. The film is interesting throughout and the Russian atmosphere is adequately injected. For an extended review of this subject see page 281 of the issue dated April 8.

THE HEART OF PAULA (Pallas), April 3.—A story of romance and adventure with scenes laid in a Mexican town. Lenore Ulrich gives an impressive performance as a Spanish girl, who loves a young American engineer. The artistic quality of the picture is enhanced by fine lighting and photography.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 23, 1916 (Pathe), March 19.—Interesting items of this issue are, the result of a gasoline explosion in Detroit, Mich., the overflow of the Missouri river in South Dakota, the erection of a field wireless at Columbus, N. M., for communication with the troops across the border, Pack Mules at Etna Mills, Cal., carrying mail over the salmon Range mountain tops, and Pathe spring fashions.

PATHE NEWS NO. 24, 1916 (Pathe), March 22.—Some of the interesting items of this number show recruits falling in line in Montreal, Can., the celebration of St. Patrick's day by the Mutual Welfare League at Sing Sing, all kinds of ships put into use to further the needs of commerce on the west coast, and several scenes showing different varieties of gas masks in use in France, including an apparatus for spraying the air with alkaline liquid to remove the chloride fumes.

LONESOME LUKE, CIRCUS KING (Phunphilms), March 29.—A Lonesome Luke in which Luke runs "the best ten-cent show that was ever seen for a quarter." Some very funny incidents occur about the circus tent where we are taken into the confuence of the manager and are allowed to view the various characters making up. An entertaining number for those who like slapstick comedy.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE IRON CLAW NO. 4 (Pathe), March 20.—"The Name and the Game" is the title of this number of the serial. In it Legar robs the bank in which Golden has money. The Laughing Mask, however, hears of the affair and in disguise appoints himself receiver of the money at the docks where it is being put aboard a vessel. A note sent to Golden states that the money will be returned providing a certain amount of it be used for the good of the poor. A very interesting number.

THE IRON CLAW NO. 5 (Pathe), March 27.—"The Intervention of Tito" is the title of this number wherein a parrot which formerly belonged to Legar, and therefore a pet of Margery's is bought by Golden. Polly has learned to be most efficient in the use of the English language, and when Margery is confined in a safe by Legar who gets away, with a paper of which he has been covetous, she repeats the combination which she has overheard Margery repeating to herself, thereby saving the life of her mistress. And to cap the climax, Polly upsets a lamp in a shack where Golden's secretary is imprisoned, causing a quick exit in which the secretary escapes.

Signal Film Corporation.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME, NO. 15 (April 3.).—"Driving the Last Spike" marks the close of an excellent series. In this the last of Helen's daring adventures Seagrue is shot by his own associates in place of Storm whom he has planned to have killed. The signal for the shot goes amiss, or rather the lifting of a towel is mistaken for the dropping of a handkerchief. An exceptional thrill is exhibited in this closing episode when a fast train hits an automobile, completely demolishing it.

Triangle Film Corp.

BY STORK DELIVERY (Keystone), March 26.—A farce with a story in it. Very amusing after it is well under way.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

HUNGRY HAPPY'S DREAM (Big U), April 6.—An eccentric comedy number in which Paul Bourgeois appears as a hobo. He dreams he is a trainer of wild animals. The animals will prove an interesting feature to children. A fair number.

BILL'S WIFE (Laemmle), April 9.—A comedy number, featuring Fred Church and Myrtle Gonzales. After an ideal honeymoon, the young husband pines to get out with the boys. He leaves his wife in tears and finds that after all cabarets no longer appeal to him. He returns to home and happiness. Well-photographed and unusually attractive in presentation. A good subject of the light sort.

PUTTING HER FOOT IN IT (Nestor), April 10.—A comedy number enacted by a capable cast, but one which introduces a great deal of unnecessary vulgarity. This is much below the average production of this company in its general tone.

HELD FOR DAMAGES (Imp), April 11.—Not a very plausible little comedy, but well photographed and entertaining. The girl milliner holds up the wealthy father for $500 apiece for his son and bulldog, both of which played havoc in her shop. H. Dittmar, Edna Pendleton and Harry Benham appear. Also the aforementioned dog.

THE BRINK (Laemmle), April 12.—A pleasing story of a young wife who plays with the fire because her husband is busy with his work. There is no strong drama in this, but it is well handled by a pleasing cast and proves very entertaining. Val Paul, Myrtle Gonzales and Fred Church appear.

SOME HONEYMOON (Nestor), April 14.—A bright comedy number, featuring Billie Rhodes, Lee Moran and others. The bride and groom make a bet they can disappear so successfully their friends cannot find them. They become employed as bellboy and maid in a hotel and have some funny experiences. This is novel and enjoyable.

HUEBY PUTS ONE OVER (Joker), April 15.—An amusing low comedy number, by Allen Curtis, featuring Gale Henry, William Franey, Lillian Peacock and Charles Conklin. This is laughable in numerous places, though it contains some rather harmless vulgarity. The mirror trick makes a good feature.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE RIVAL PILOTS (Bison), April 15.—A two-reel number, by Wright Roberts, featuring Lee Hill, L. C. Shumway and Margaret Mayburn. This is a brisk railroad story, very good of its type and containing some sensational scenes. It is a question whether the average observer really enjoys seeing a small child exposed to such danger as the one in this picture is. It seemed a tremendous risk and gave more of a shock than a pleasurable thrill. The story as a whole is entertaining and keeps a firm hold on the interest.

THE POET'S PROGRESS (Imp), April 7.—A two-reel comedy, by Sam Greiner, featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail. He is an unsuccessful poet and she a slavey. She reconstructs one of his poems into an advertisement and it wins a thousand-dollar prize. The scenes are taken in a dilapidated old house on Washington square, New York, and have an atmosphere in keeping with the story, which is told in slightly burlesque style. This is not in any way remarkable, but has an amusing idea in it and proves quite entertaining.

MIGNONETTE (Imp), April 9.—A two-reel number, by Harry Ditmarr, featuring Harry Benham as a young composer in New York. He falls in love with the wife of a brutal young landlord, and dedicates his opera to her. The landlord, discovering their love, separates them and throws the score of the opera into the fire. The wife saves the manuscript, which turns up in an odd way later. This has some minor faults of construction, but makes on the whole a very pretty love story, and the cast is pleasing. Some good scenes of Washington square, New York, are shown.

THE BRIGADIER GERARD (Red Feather Photoplay), April 10.—A splendid five-reel number, featuring Lewis Waller in one of the famous exploits of A. Conan Doyle's dashing hero, whose bravery and boasting have furnished so much entertainment for fiction readers. The screen production is wonderfully interesting throughout, carrying the high spirit of the stories themselves, and furnishing the eye with a very satisfying treat in the way of costumings, settings and general atmosphere. The characters of Gerard, Napoleon, Talleyrand and the Countess are all very acceptable. A. E. George, Fernand Mailly and Madge Titheradge play the last-mentioned roles. A fine romantic offering.

THE HIDDEN CITY OF CRIME (Universal Special Feature), April 10.—No. 18 of the "Graft" series. In this frankly sensational instalment, Mayor Harding has a clash with the opium smugglers. The scenes in the Chinatown dives are the best of the kind staged in a long while. The little Chinese girl, who assists Harding in his escape, does very pleasing work in her characterization. Some of the episodes are not very convincing, but all are entertaining.

LATHERED TRUTH (Victor), April 12.—A two-reel number, featuring Rosemary Theby as a manicure girl with social aspirations and Harry C. Myers as a moving picture director. The plot is not much, but some of the satirical humor is good and the sub-titles are clever. The egg-throwing scenes in the burlesque on Uncle Tom's Cabin are funny, but constitute a rough form of humor. This number is entertaining and quite novel in spite of certain drawbacks.

THE DOCTOR OF AFTERNOON ARM (Imp), April 14.—A two-reel number, by Robert F. Hill, featuring Sydell Dowling, Sidney Bracey, Edith Roberts, Sam Drane and others. This is a Western subject, built on familiar lines but with enough originality in certain scenes to hold the interest closely. The young girl brings about the reformation of a young doctor who has become a derelict. The shooting in the darkened wine room makes a good scene; also the probing of his own wound by the doctor. Later, when the girl's honor is threatened, the doctor and her brother raid the wine room single-handed and free her, after a second tragic shooting affair.

World-Equitable.

THE SUPREME SACRIFICE (Premo), March 20.—A conventionally melodramatic story of a man's unselfish sacrifice that he may save the reputation of a close friend. The picture presents little new, but probably will satisfy an audience that is not over critical. Robert Warwick is the star. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

THEN I'LL COME BACK TO YOU (Frohman), April 2.—Alice Brady is the star in this pleasing, if somewhat naive story, reviewed elsewhere in this issue. Much of the action transpires in a picturesque, mountainous country where exteriors were well photographed. Jack Sherrill, playing in Miss Brady's support, makes a manly hero.

THE REAPERS (Triumph), April 2.—Christian Science is credited with the remarkable recovery of the chief character in this picture after he is partially paralyzed. The story is made quite appealing, as acted by John Mason and Clara Whipple. A review appears on another page of this issue.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 25, 1916 (Vitagraph), March 28.—Hindu subjects at Calcutta pray for the Allies; reopening of Fair at San Diego, Cal.; Franklin K. Lane at the Fair; Hotel Imperial fire, Knoxville, Tenn.; Serbian refugees at Salonika; railroad wreck, Jamestown, N. C.; unique banner made at Lynn, Mass.; fashions; reserves arrive in El Paso; "Somewhere in Mexico"; Krazy Kat Invalid," cartoon.

THE VITAL QUESTION (Vitagraph), April 3.—A review of this well-produced five-part drama appears elsewhere in this issue. The picture is more notable for the acting of Virginia Pearson and George Cooper, than for the story based on crooked business dealings and a young district attorney's method of exposing the head of a trust.

ESSANAY PHOTOGRAPHERS RETURN FROM TRIP.

A corps of Essanay photographers have returned from another expedition in search of rare and interesting subjects for scenic movies, which it is releasing in split reels of five hundred feet, in conjunction with Wallace A. Carlson's animated cartoons on current events of the day, and Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch book on the various cities of the United States and foreign countries.

Six thousand feet of film were taken in Arizona at various points of historic interest. Scenes were taken at Castle Hot Springs, Arizona, which is an oasis in the western desert, showing palm and orange trees in full bloom, whereas for miles around there is nothing but sand and deadly waste.

The minature Grand Canyon of Arizona also was visited, and the scenes will show the winter snows on the top of the mountain seven thousand feet above the sea level and the arid summer in the valleys, just two hours' ride down the slopes. At Clarkdale all the workings of the great copper smelter, the largest smelter in the world, were photographed, from the digging of the ore to the finished product.

In these scenes also will be shown the cliff dwellings of the Aztecs, including Montezuma's castle high up in the cliffs. Scenes also were taken in the Salt River valley, in and around Phoenix. These show the Roosevelt dam and the vast acreage snatched from the desert and now blossoming with all kinds of green growth, through the wonderful drainage system made possible by the dam. These scenes are both of intense interest and highly educational.

SLIDE FIGHT PICTURES.

The Novelty Slide Company, which is controlling the exclusive slide rights on the Willard-Moran Championship Contest, held Saturday night, March 25, at Madison Square Garden, New York City, reports that the territory on this unusually big event is going big.

In spite of the smoke and other bad photographic conditions that prevailed in the Garden the night of the fight, the slides can be seen as distinctly as by those who attended the fight itself, and the Novelty people succeeded in obtaining twenty of the best views, and each slide has a simple and short explanation.

Fourteen states were sold the first day the slides were released, and judging from the flow of inquiries that are rushing into the office of the Novelty Company, the remaining territory will soon be closed out to the highest bidders.

The Novelty Slide Company wishes to warn all interested in these Willard-Moran slides, to beware of other offers, as the Novelty Company controls the exclusive rights on the original photos.

"UNWRITTEN LAW" PASSED BY PENNSYLVANIA CENSORS.

The Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, sitting in judgment on the California Motion Picture Corporation's "Unwritten Law" a few days ago, passed the big Beatriz Michelena feature practically as it was submitted to them. The only change suggested was the elimination of a couple of subtitles.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"WIVES OF THE RICH"—(Selig).

"Wives of the Rich" is a Selig multiple reel drama, produced by T. N. Heffron from the story written by Allen Curtis Mason, and released through General Film Service on Monday, April 10. "Wives of the Rich" will be pronounced by critics as one of Mr. Heffron's best productions, featuring as it does, Mr.

Scene from "Wives of the Rich" (Selig).

Harry Mestayer, supported by Lillian Hayward and a strong company of artists.

It is the story of high society, in which the wife of John Grant is given every privilege and comfort by her husband. She, however, squanders her financial allowance at bridge. Desperate because of lack of funds with which to pay her social obligations, she is tempted, and borrows money from Robert Baker. After getting the woman into his power, Baker demands that she visit him for settlement. She does so, and is followed to Baker's bachelor apartments by her husband. In the struggle that follows Baker meets death. Mrs. Grant flees to her home, while her husband, in order to protect her good name, makes Baker's death appear as a case of premeditated suicide.

Returning home, Grant confronts his wife. With a look into her husband's face, Mrs. Grant realizes that he knows all. She then explains how Baker really shot himself trying to wrest the revolver from her which she had carried to defend her honor. Forgiven, the wife promises to avoid all the sins of society in the future. There are many tense moments in this play and the stage settings are elaborate.

TRAVERS DOING "THE LIGHTBEARER."

Richard C. Travers, Essanay leading man, has returned from a flyer in vaudeville to play the lead in "The Lightbearer," a new three-reel photoplay. His act was well received and hundreds shook hands with him at his reception following each performance. He gives a monologue of anecdotes of picture stars after being introduced by several hundred feet of Wallace A. Carlson's film cartoons, illustrating the artist's impressions of Travers in vaudeville. After completing "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," an Essanay five-reel feature now in the course of production, he will go on the stage again, returning at regular intervals for studio work.

In the cartoons exhibited by Mr. Travers, Essanay introduced an innovation which shortly will be used in the Canimated Nooz Pictorial, Wallace A. Carlson's burlesque on current-topics, now being released in split reels. This is the use of photographic or half-tone heads with pen and ink bodies. The plan was tested in the Travers cartoons with excellent results.

FARM ANIMALS AT FAMOUS PLAYERS STUDIO.

Next in importance to Marguerite Clark herself in the Famous Players' adaptation of Eleanor Hallowell Abbott's celebrated story, "Molly Make-Believe" the the many animals which Director J. Searle Dawley has assembled in her supporting cast. Inasmuch as little Molly is a country girl, it was of course imperative that the various barnyard inhabitants be introduced upon the screen.

As a result, a stable was erected in the Famous Players studio where the old family horse, a pet pig and some chickens were assembled for the production. Miss Clark, who is a great lover of animals, was delighted when she learned that Mike, a well-trained bull-dog, was also scheduled to appear in her support. There are many delightful scenes in which Miss Clark figures with her dumb associates, among the most humorous of which is that in which she and her small brother feed the pig from a baby's bottle. The scene was not accomplished until the porker had registered his protest against the indignity in no uncertain terms.

Though "Molly Make-Believe" is essentially a comedy-romance, there is one scene which can scarcely be surpassed for pure pathos—that in which Molly dances gaily before the bed of her dying friend, the little cripple, in order to lighten the child's last moments, when Molly's own heart is breaking with sorrow. It is just one of the delicate touches that reaches the heart. The spirit of the book has been carefully preserved.

"THE LIGHTBEARER"—(Essanay).

This is the story of a red-blooded young minister, who when all other methods fail, cleans up a slum district and makes the denizens God-fearing men and women—by his fists. It is a striking picturization of a slum district of a great city, but is lifted out of the sordid by the beautiful love of the young pastor for a girl of the tenements, who has risen pure as a lily from the muck and slime amid the dens of vice. The play is of striking interest with intense action and dramatic situations. The plot is original and leads logically from its inception to a striking denouement. It was written by Charles J. McGuirk. Richard C. Travers as the young minister, possesses all the physical attributes to make the part of the fighting pastor entirely realistic. The pastor of a wealthy city church comes in contact, through a mission, with the people of the tenement district. He finally decides that his duty lies with them, so he resigns his pastorate in the wealthy church. He finds that he is hampered on every hand by his former parishioners. Some of them have large holdings in the vice district which he is trying to clean up. He is also balked by a saloonkeeper, who is the political power and the agent for the wealthy property owners. He attempts to lure the one pure girl in the entire district, but is foiled by the minister. The saloon-keeper then attacks the minister, but is given a terrific beating by the fighting parson. The minister then exposes the machinations of the rich, who while church members and pretending to be law abiding citizens, derive their revenue from the spoils of the unfortunate. The newspapers champion his cause and he wins a great victory in the district, cleaning out the vice and bringing the people into his mode of life. His work still goes on, however, with his bride of the slums.

TENTH EPISODE OF "MUSTY SUFFER" (Kleine).

The 10th and concluding reel of George Kleine's epoch-making serial comedy featuring Harry Watson, Jr., entitled "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," makes its bow next week.

This episode, like its predecessors, bears a somewhat ambiguous but curiosity-exciting title. It is called "Coming Down," which in the opinion of those who have witnessed the previous installments, refers almost as much to the roof of the theater as the action of the story, for wherever shown,

Scene from "Coming Down" (Kleine).

"The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" have made the rafters ring with laughter.

In "Coming Down" the irrepressible Musty Suffer manages to hold the job as all around man in an amusement arcade which he secured so mysteriously in the 9th episode entitled "Out of Order." In this concluding chapter Musty has a terrible time with the Wild Man and the zoo lion, both of which he lets loose from their cages much to his own discomfiture and the riotous mirth of the spectators. In fact, the entire reel is crammed with the hearty chuckles which Harry Watson has so successfully put into each episode of this record breaking series.

Seldom has the moving picture business produced so great a comedian as Harry Watson in so short a space of time. He has made almost unbelievable strides in public favor through his extraordinary work in these comedies. His fame as a stage comedian in the Ziegfeld Follies "Me, Him and I," and other similar stage enterprises stamped him a past master of the art of humorous pantomime, but did not guarantee him a future on the screen. His popularity in motion pictures is an additional proof only of his wonderful versatility.

"APRIL" (American).

The life of Kentucky mountaineers has a recognized place in fiction. Authors have immortalized a people whose only law was self-preservation. Clifford Howard has written a red-blooded, gripping story on this subject, entitled "April," produced by Director Donald MacDonald of the American Film Company for release as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition. Helene Rosson, who has won her way into the realm of screen stars in a surprisingly short time, gives an eloquent portrayal of a "backwoods" girl, in the title role, "April." E. Forrest Taylor, acknowledged screen favorite, enacts the part of Jeffrey Gordon, a lionized Philadelphia poet who on a trip into the mountains for his health meets April. Harry von Meter and Louise Lester play Tim and Martha Eagan, April's supposed father and mother. Tim mistreats his wife and child. Martha buries her baby without the knowledge of its father and substitutes the child sent as by a miracle to ease the pain of sorrow. April grows to love Jeffrey, who returns the affection, but hesitates because the chasm of life station between them. He, however, marries April to save her from a brutal mountaineer to whom she has been sold by Tim. Her identity is revealed at the death of Martha, and the marriage results in happiness and the restoration of April to her father and mother.

"SOCIAL PIRATES" HERALDS LIKED.

An official of the Kalem Company states that three car-loads of paper have already been delivered to the printer to keep up with the demand for heralds on the first and second issues of "The Social Pirates" and that worthy is making frantic calls for more. The Kalem heralds are in two colors, of unusually large size and because of the unprecedented quantity in which they are being turned out are supplied to exhibitors at a price lower than the average herald of half the size. But with the paper market in its present soaring condition Kalem is beginning to worry over the next trip into the mart to secure car-load lots.

TRIANGLE-FINE ARTS TITLES CHANGED.

Pictures are now being completed for the Triangle at the Fine Arts studios to present two established combinations of players later in the spring. Dorothy Gish and Owen Moore seem to be artistically inseparable, as do Mae Marsh and Robert Harron. Little has been given out regarding the Gish-Moore starring piece except that it will give the players an environment entirely different from the atmospheres of "Betty of Graystone" and "Little Meena's Romance." Comedy will be plentiful, it is said. This is suggested by the title, "Susan Rocks the Boat" having been selected.

The Marsh-Harron picture is based on the well-known serial, "The Little Apache." When shown on the screen the picture will be called "A Child of the Paris Streets." Miss Marsh plays the role of an innocent young girl brought up in the Apache section of Paris. Her romance, into which a young American artist enters, furnishes the basis for the story. Grant Carpenter, the author, has achieved considerable fame with his serials and short stories and has already received advance royalties from three New York managers, with prospect of Broadway production next season.

"WHISPERING SMITH" (American).

Samuel S. Hutchinson, President of the Signal Film Corporation announces having secured the film rights to Frank H Spearman's story, "Whispering Smith."

"Whispering Smith" is an ideal subject for the abilities of Director J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes, whose knowledge of the technique of railroad film production is easily and generally acknowledged as peerless.

J. P. McGowan, who will direct the production, will have the title role, and opposite him, Helen Holmes will portray the heroine character, Dicksie Dunning.

"THE UNWRITTEN LAW" BREAKING ALL RECORDS.

The Exclusive Features, Inc., of 71 West 23d street, report that they are rushed with orders for bookings on "The Unwritten Law." Joseph M. Goldstein, president of the company, was compelled to add additional prints to those that are now in use in Greater New York, and asks the exhibitors to bide with him as he is doing the best he can under the circumstances, and promises to fill the dates of all exhibitors, as he receives them in rotation. "First come, first served" is his policy.

UP AND DOWN THE PASIG RIVER WITH BURTON HOLMES.

The Pasig River is to Manila what the Thames is to London; it divides the city into two parts, enables shipping to get into the very heart of the business sections, and above the city is utilized for factory, warehouse and foundry sites. Still further up stream, it is bordered with lovely suburban residences, and picturesque native "shacks," and offers every opportunity for boating through a lovely and varied country. It is through this region that Burton Holmes takes his fellow travelers in the 11th release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures.

From Laguna de Bay, a lake about fifteen miles above Manila, the Pasig flows placidly down to the city and then through it to Manila Bay, its mouth pointed by an old Spanish-built light-house. Mr. Holmes takes his audiences up the river and back again. Beautiful villas and nipa shacks are contrasted with the unpicturesque evidences of American enterprise.

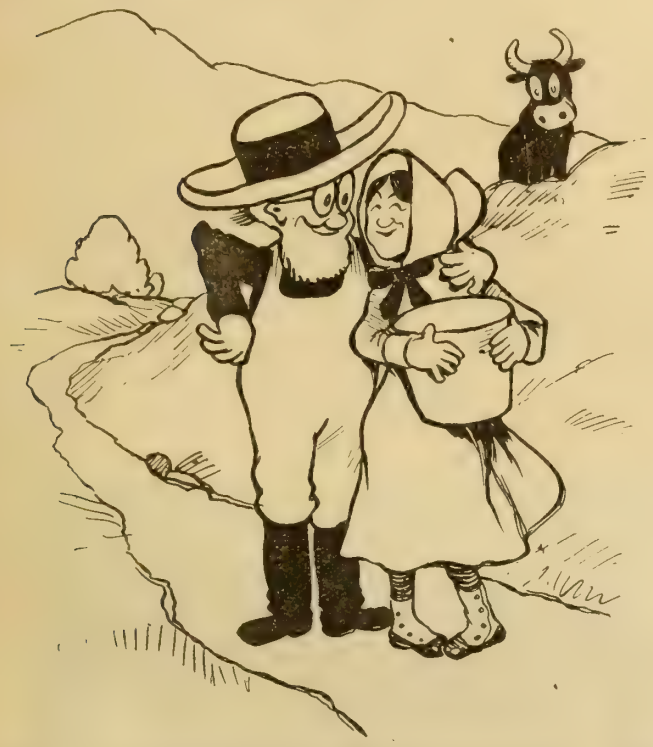
Mr. Holmes stops long enough in his cruise up the river, to enable his audience to study some of the peculiarities of these useful creatures and also, as another incident of the river trip, to watch the cavalry from Fort McKinley go riding past.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY CARTOON SATIRE ON SCIENTIFIC FARMING.

One glance at the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons makes the face of the whole world break into a broad smile. These single reel features inject a dash of film tabasco into the weekly Paramount programs. Each release of the amusingly grotesque antics originated on the screen by J. R. Bray, the cartoonist, whets the public appetite for more.



Scene from "Al Falfa and the Milkmaid" (Paramount-Bray).

"Farmer Al Falfa's Scientific Dairy Farm," a satire on scientific farming, will be the release of April 20th. The story of Al Falfa's experiences with up-to-date farming is carried out in the following manner:

The old farmer is shown sitting comfortably on his own veranda, idly dreaming while he smokes and drinks cocktails. He pushes a button conveniently at hand and the picture is flashed to the other end of the wire. Out in the field a large gong rings and a belled cow runs to gather the other cows together to be milked.

Merrily, a group of milkmaids step into the picture to do their milking. They are greeted by Al Falfa, who kisses each one of them as he takes the can from her. From a huge reservoir the milk is then pumped to a creamery. A long pipe line is shown on the screen. Efficiency is the watchword of this dairy, so parts of the pipe line are used for different things. A portion shaped like the letter "U" makes a swing for the children. Another section is tapped so that the baby carriage brigade may be supplied with milk. A third part is used for roosts in a chicken coop. Finally, the pipe end of the dairy is shown. A title is flashed on the screen: "From Now On Human Hands Do Not Touch This Milk." The remainder of the story is comedy.

MARIE DORO IN NEW LASKY SUBJECT.

Marie Doro who has gone to the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood, California, under a contract for a period of years, will make her debut as a Lasky star on April 24 in a photoplay entitled "The Heart of Nora Flynn" which is being directed by Cecil B. DeMille. This production will show Miss Doro in a role unlike any she has heretofore played in motion pictures.

As Nora Flynn she will play an Irish nurse maid in a house of turbulent domesticity and the role is said to give her exceptional opportunities for the display of her sympathetic powers.

Elliott Dexter will play the principal role in support of Miss Doro and the cast also includes, Lola May, Ernest Joy, Charles H. West and other members of the Lasky company.

STARTED SOMETHING.

George Fitzmaurice, the Pathe director, and the man who made "Via Wireless," "At Bay," "New York," and "Big Jim Garrity," has always been noted for the amount of realism he puts into his pictures. "Fitz" goes to any expense to get the right thing at the right place, and generally does it, if the successes he has turned out on the Pathe Gold Rooster Program may be taken as criterions.

In the feature he is now putting on he wanted to get a good, realistic fight for one of his scenes, and went down into New York's Ghetto to get the proper material, securing the services of some well known "gunmen" as fighters. They went through their paces for a rehearsal, but Fitzmaurice was not entirely satisfied. He started them off again, but this time, too, the fight lacked enough realism to suit the producer. This rather exasperated him and he was at his wits' ends for something to make them fight. Finally he announced that he would offer an extra day's pay to the man who fought hard enough to get hurt.

Did he get what he was after? Well, rather. Ask the ambulance surgeons who came around on the jump to patch the belligerents up.

"FOUR MONTHS" HAS INTEREST.

"Four Months," a three-reel "Flying A" picture, has been completed by Director Carl LeViness and, at its first run, was shown to be a photoplay of gripping interest. The fundamental theme of a young millionaire who believes himself to have but a third of a year to live and so tries to find someone worthy of inheriting his fortune offers an excellent basis for the swift action of the story. Although there are several melodramatic scenes, it is logical melodrama that increases the interest without straining the imagination. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat are ideally cast. "Four Months" will be released in the near future through the Mutual Service.

SCREEN PSYCHOLOGY TO INSTRUCT COLLEGE STUDENTS.

Hugo Munsterberg, the well-known psychologist, who first realized the advantages to be obtained by using the motion picture screen to forward the country-wide movement of having every man realize whether or not he was "a square peg in a round hole," is soon to utilize the same methods for the teaching of fundamentals in psychology in colleges, and within a few weeks will show his series of pictures "Testing the Mind," which has been released through Paramount in the Paramount Pictographs, as one of its special departments, to the student body of Harvard University.

The ultra motive behind this work on the screen that Mr. Munsterberg is doing, is to "help men find themselves."

"THE GAY LORD WARING" (Bluebird).

J. Warren Kerrigan makes his advent as a star of Bluebird Photoplays April 24 in "The Gay Lord Waring" a sensational story of England's spendthrift nobility. Mr. Kerrigan's leading lady will be Lois Wilson, the Alabama delegate in the nation-wide beauty contest conducted for the purpose of sending a convention of pretty girls to the San Francisco Exposition last summer.

Another beauty will be Maude George who, with Miss Wilson and a large company of transiet loveliness in supernumerary assignment, will sustain the "high society" element that is necessary to all replicas of English swelldom. Duke Worne, Bertram Grassby and J. H. Holland will be other principals in support of Mr. Kerrigan in this exciting release. "The Gay Lord Waring" tells the story of a typical lording who exists on borrowed money because his greatly cherished title is about the only asset he has, plus an inordinate aversion to doing anything useful to pay his toll through life. There comes a day of reckoning with the avaricious money-lender and the incidents that lead up to that eventful day provide the sensational elements that hold together the strands of the "sociey" element that forms the basis of the photoplay.

There is a realistic fire scene and double rescue; an exciting runaway ending in the spectacular death of the villian in the piece; the representation of a murder enacted during the wild night when the rain was pelting over the moor, and an adventure during a cross-country chase that ends in a collision between the hero and the heroine, making for the eventual love story that ends in traditional happy fashion.

WILLIAM COLLIER'S "THE NO-GOOD GUY."

Convinced by Billie Burke's success in "Peggy," made under his direction, Thomas H. Ince has decided to produce more light comedy features at Culver City for the Triangle. His next release will be William Collier in "The No-Good Guy." A. C. Gardner Sullivan story. It required only projection room showings to reveal to Ince that he was on the right track, and Collier was at once re-engaged for another five-reeler.

The comedian, by training and ability, should be well fitted for the task of transferring comedy to the screen. At twelve years of age he was a call boy in the famous theater of the late Austin Daly. For some time he watched the eminent artists of Daly's company and finally became an inconspicuous associate. His subsequent career has been one of growth and he has been known as a man who could extract more comedy from an unfunny line than any man on the stage. This art is his principal asset in the motion picture field. In "The No-Good Guy" he is said to extract every bit of comedy from the situations as they were developed.

Collier has the character of Jimmy Coghlan, generally recognized as being no good. Enid Markey, Charles K. French and Walter Edwards are prominent in the cast. Edwards directed the picture under the supervision of Ince.

"HUMAN DRIFTWOOD" (World).

Robert Warwick and Frances Nelson, two of World Film's leading artistes appear jointly in the April 17 issue on the World program, in "Human Driftwood," a sensational and picturesque story of both the Southland and Northland.

For the making of "Human Driftwood" director Emile Chautard, of the Peerless branch of World Film, took his company to Florida where the sub-tropical scenes were staged and then with Mr. Warwick and Miss Nelson and thirty-eight players a journey was made to a small settlement fifty miles inland from Saranac Lake, New York. There the proper snow scenes were made in just the environment requisite to a faithful carrying out of the author's story. The company arrived in the Adirondacks during the extremely cold spell, but as the picture was scheduled for release in April and Mr. Warwick was scheduled to appear with Grace George in a legitimate production at the Playhouse, the trip to the interior was made in the face of a terrible blizzard and a universe of snow.

Scene from "Human Driftwood" (World).

"Human Driftwood" with Robert Warwick and Frances Nelson will be the regular unit on the World Film program February 10. It is in five acts and contains three hundred scenes.

SPEED CONTROLLER IN PHILADELPHIA.

The appointment of Williams, Brown & Eerle, Inc., of 918 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., is announced as distributors of Speedco Arc Controllers for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and the State of Delaware, with some prospect of enlarging that territory if the elaborate plans of the company are fruitful. The firm will open a branch display room for moving picture apparatus at 1208 Vine street, which is within the moving picture and film district.

"ALMOST RIGHT" (Cub).

"Almost Right," the Cub Comedy release on the Mutual program for April 14 will present in the featured role the well-known pantomimic comedian, Billy Armstrong, instead of George Ovey, who has been starred in most of the Cub Comedies released to date. Ovey will return to the release chart with the release of the following week (April 21) entitled "The Conquering Hero."

In "Almost Right" Armstrong portrays the character of Luke Sharpe, the detective—a character in which he attained no mean amount of attention while a member of the Essanay-Chaplin company.

He starts out with his ever-present aide, Jigger, to run down a criminal for whose capture a large reward is offered. The clue leads Sharpe and Jigger to a Bowery type of restaurant. In persuance of their plans the detecting firm of two disguise themselves and go to work—Sharpe as a waiter and Scene from "Almost Right" (Cub).

Jigger as a cabaret performer. As such they prove dismal failures and the consternation which follows their effort gives the criminal, who has entered meanwhile, a quickly seized opportunity to ply his profession.

Not to be outdone Sharpe and Pigger pursue the flying thief to a lodging house where, in the performance of their duty, they cut such curious capers that the police are called and the detectives arrested, the crook meanwhile escaping.

Armstrong interpolates into his scenes a lot of original funny "business" which is enjoyable and Tommy Hayes, as Jigger, is an admirable foil. The two, along with a big cast of comedians, make "Almost Right" a most amusing subject.

GREENE GETS "DRIFTWOOD" RIGHTS.

What is considered the "plum" territory of the United States in the purchasing of the state rights was recently secured by Walter E. Greene of the Greene Feature Film Co. of New York, and Mr. Abrams of the Boston Photoplay Co. on the pictures "The Other Girl" from the Augustus Thomas play featuring James J. Corbett; "The Fortunate Youth" from the novel of the same name by Will J. Locke and "Driftwood" the successful Owen Davis play featuring Vera Michelena.

"APRIL" BY AMERICAN.

Director Donald MacDonald has completed the field work on "April" a five-part master picture by Clifford Howard, which gives so many chances for excellent acting to Helene Rosson, E. Forrest Taylor, Harry Von Meter, Louis Lester and Harry McCabe. The mountain scenes of a photoplay and a delightful love theme lend great beauty to the production which has strong heart interest with swift action.

NEW THOUGHTS IN NEW FILM FOR PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPH.

Fresh screen propaganda for the cause of "Preparedness," the universal theme throughout the United States today, and that of "Better Babies" is contained in the Paramount Pictographs for the week of April 17. This is the twelfth release of the "magazine on the screen."

The question "Can New York Be Captured," receives a startling and decisive answer through the films in an animated map made under the direction of Frederick Palmer. This great war expert has chosen the point at which an enemy would land, near Boston. Under Palmer's direction and guided by his remarkable store of military knowledge the artist shows the capture of the Springfield Arsenal, and the over-running of New England, which is rich in munition plants, arsenals, and ship and navy yards. The probable strategic moves in such a campaign are followed down to the capture of New York. Mr. Palmer's animated map shows exactly what maneuvers would be used by a foreign foe to capture the largest city in the world.

Other subjects in this release will include new films for the "Better Babies" department; the "Trickids" Serial, "The Hazards of Happifat"; the Psychological tests by Professor Hugo Munsterberg, and a new series "The Old and the New—No. 1. Candles to Electric Lights."

UP-TO-DATE VERSION OF "FEATHERTOP."

There are occasional photodramas which are of unusual value to the exhibitor in attracting patronage because they picture some story which is a household favorite. In this class is "Feathertop," the Gaumont five reel feature which is released April 17 as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition. The story of the scare crow, Feathertop, as told by Nathaniel Hawthorne, has a colonial setting. Paul M. Bryan, who wrote "Feathertop" for the screen, cleverly made use of the Hawthorne theme, and even introduced the colonial story as a short dream interlude, but he uses a modern setting for the story. The author also pays tribute to the present demand that photodramas deal with high society by locating many scenes of the play upon Fifth Avenue.

Miss Marguerite Courtot, who is now seen on the screen in "The Dead Alive," will be heroine of "Feathertop." Henry J. Vernot, her director, has exercised great ingenuity in selecting locations that will bring out both the charm of the story and the charm of his distinctive little screen star. Miss Courtot has the part of the daughter of a kindly old florist who is content to dwell remote from the city's distractions and frivolities. She is in love with her father's assistant, and is happy in her quiet, sheltered life until she pays a visit to her wealthy uncle in the city. Here her head is turned by the attention paid her because she is reputed to be her uncle's heiress. She falls in love with a social idler, the modern prototype of Hawthorne's Feathertop.

Among those prominent in Miss Courtot's support are Sydney Mason, featured as her leading man, James Levering, Charles Graham, Gerald Griffin and Miss Mathilde Baring. The picture was made at Gaumont's winter studios, Jacksonville, Fla.

EXHIBITORS SEND "HAM" TO WAR AGAIN.

As the result of letters from exhibitors following the release of "Ham Agrees With Sherman," the Kalem comedian has been forced to go to war again in search of laughs. Exhibitors were loud in their praise of the first war burlesque and insisted that they be given another reel on the same theme. So "Ham and Bud" are now at work on "Ham and Preparedness" at the Kalem California studio.

"ARTIE, THE MILLIONAIRE KID" (Vitagraph).

In this five-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, artful humor underlies the whole action of the play which gives wide range to the comicalities of Ernest Truex, the celebrated young Broadway star who was especially engaged for the production.

The story deals with the adventures of a light-hearted youth whose father turns him out, when his escapades send him home from college with a degree of G. B., P.D.Q. The old man hangs the degree of N. G. upon the kid and sends him out to earn his own way, whereat friend son full of conceit, flings back the word to his dad that in a year he'll come back with enough money to buy his "old railroad."

"BATTLES OF A NATION" BOOKING DIRECT.

The American Correspondent Film Co., Inc., announce that all bookings and leasing of state rights in connection with "The Battles of a Nation" are now being handled through their office, 220 West 42nd Street, New York, direct.

"THE WOMAN WHO DARED" (California).

From San Rafael, Cal., where they are busily engaged in the production of the second release of their "Better-than-Program" pictures, the California Motion Picture Corporation are sending on "stills" of "The Woman Who Dared," the subject which is now in the making. Progress reported to date warrants the statement that the production will certainly be ready some time in May. General Manager Alexander E. Beyfuss expects to return to New York in a few weeks to take up the business of marketing the new release on the states rights basis.

With studios at San Rafael, not far distant from San Francisco, the California people are in the ideal spot in which to do exceptional work of all kinds. The exterior locations which they require are picked with all that could be desired for a choice. In "The Woman Who Dared," which will be the most pretentious thing the company has yet attempted, no trouble or expense has been spared in getting just what the action of the story seemed to call for and the "still" pictures which have been sent on bring a promise of a production which will be much out of the ordinary.

"SHADOW OF DOUBT" (Equitable).

Carlyle Blackwell has a new leading woman for his next Equitable release. Jean Shelby she is and how well she matches the romantic nature of the popular Carlyle, will best be shown when the finished picture is flashed throughout the country on April 17 on the regular Equitable program. The title of the next Carlyle Blackwell production is "The Shadow of Doubt" and the direction was under the supervision of Ray Physioc. Blackwell and his company, without any preliminary arrangement, journeyed to Moose Jaw, Manitoba, many, many miles north of the Canadian border and there, midst the actual surroundings so ably set forth by the author, a series of highly sensational and vivid scenes were staged.

Scene from "The Shadow of Doubt" (Equitable).

The story of "The Shadow of Doubt" in itself, comprises many novel situations. Even without two noted players, such as Blackwell and Miss Shelby, the screen would show a most attractive and unusual entertainment.

Blackwell is superb in the role of the man with a dual disposition. His hard-hearted treatment of criminals and his undying devotion to his wife, construct an unusual theme and unusual type.

"FOLLOWING THE FLAG IN MEXICO."

The one branch of the motion picture business that is seemingly never affected by trade conditions is the topical. Though business may ebb and flow the topicals go on forever and though photo plays live their short life and die the topicals bob up time and again as the same subject periodically gets into the news columns. Thus the Mexican films of three years ago are doing a land office business all over the country.

The Feinberg Amusement Corporation, Fitzgerald Building, New York, appreciating the fact that Mexico is likely to hold the center of the stage for the next few months and perhaps years has just put out a new Mexican five reeler entitled "Following the Flag in Mexico." This is practically the only new series of Mexican war pictures made during the last year and is described as being absolutely up to the minute, including the attack on Columbus, N. M. and the chase of the bandit, Villa. Many of the scenes are extremely sensational and show up the activities of the Mexican gorillas in a light that is sure to interest, if not excite American audiences. The picture is being sold by state rights.

NANKIVELL CARTOONS FOR DRA-KO.

The Dra-Ko Film Co., Inc., is announcing in this issue the installation of a new department, in which they are producing animated, commercial, advertising cartoons. They have under contract Frank A. Nankivell, formerly of "Puck" and other well-known publications, who is devoting his entire time to this department.

Two of Mr. Nankivell's reels were recently shown at the Strand Theater of New York City. This is one of the largest and most select picture houses in the country, and it was because of the quality of the humor in the animated cartoons of Mr. Nankivell that they were selected by B. A. Rolfe. Mr. Nankivell's ability to make his humor convincing and to the point, is what makes him particularly valuable. He never wavers from the subject he is advertising, or fails to bring out clearly every point that has advertising value, and he does all this without sacrificing one particle of humor.

Very gratifying results are said to have been produced, in the short time that the Dra-Ko Film Co. have been working on this idea.

WHAT AUTOMATIC TICKET MEN ARE DOING.

E. S. Bowman, Assistant Secretary of the Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Co., has located temporarily in Chicago and is organizing a sales force for that territory. Mr. Bowman has been in Chicago now for four weeks and is going to lease offices in one of the prominent buildings. He reports business very good in his territory.

L. C. Manning, who has been connected with the National Cash Register Co. for several years, has accepted the salesmanagership of the Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Co. and will be pleased to meet his friends at the offices of the company, 1737 Broadway, New York.

H. C. Simeral, who has been with the Automatic Company for the past three years, made a short visit to the Company's offices this week and reports business in his territory as being exceptionally good.

"QUALITY OF FAITH" TO BE RELEASED MAY 1.

Following Miss Courtot in "Feathertop," an April 17 Mutual Masterpicture, Gaumont releases as its next five reel feature, "The Quality of Faith." This will reach the screen May 1 with Alexander Gaden and Miss Gertrude Robinson as co-stars. They were last seen together in "As a Woman Sows." Prominent in their support are Lucille Taft, Charles W. Travis, John Reinhard, Henry W. Pemberton, Alan Robinson, and John Mackin. The production is being directed by Richard Garrick.

The Gaumont company making this Masterpicture went to Anniston, Ga., to film the strike scenes in a cotton mill. The exteriors were taken at Jacksonville. Nearly a thousand extra people were employed in the rioting. These were ridden down by mounted police, giving the exact representation of how a mob is handled by officers and how it fights back.

MARY MOORE IN BUSHMAN COMPANY.

Mary Moore, one of the Moore family which includes Matt, Owen and Tom, is working in the forthcoming Quality-Metro "A Million a Minute," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are starred. In one part Miss Moore, who is young and attractive, plays the role of Mr. Bushman's mother. But it is when Mr. Bushman is a baby in the photodrama.

"AT PINEY RIDGE" TO BE RELEASED MAY 1.

Picturized by Gilson Willets from the famous stage play by David K. Higgins, "At Piney Ridge" will be released on Monday, May 1, as a Selig Red Seal Play, through V-L-S-E. Featured in this unusual production, carrying the atmosphere of the Tennessee Mountains, is Fritzi Brunette as Cindy Lane, the mountain flower, Al W. Filson as grim, old Zeb Lane, Leo Pierson as Jack Rose, Edward J. Piel as Mark Brierson, Frank Clark as General Deering, Vivian Reed as Azalia, his daughter, James Bradbury as Major Jartree, Wm. Scott as Rube Hollar, the mountaineer lover of Cindy, and Lillian Hayward, who is versatile in the character part of Dagmar, an octoroon.

The thousands who have seen and enjoyed this wonderful drama on the stage, will anticipate the film version with much pleasure. There is plot and counterplot, and the story moves rapidly from start to finish.

Wm. Robt. Daly, the producer, escorted a company of players to the heart of the Tennessee Mountains where true scenes of mountaineer life were filmed. The scenic effects in "At Piney Ridge" are among the most beautiful ever presented on the motion picture screen. Miss Fritzi Brunette in marked contrast to her character role of "Nadia, the Temptress" in the Selig Red Seal Play, "Unto Those Who Sin," appears throughout the production of "At Piney Ridge" in sunbonnet and calico gown, as an unsophisticated mountaineer damsel. Miss Brunette has many opportunities for strong emotional work, and her art was never more pronounced than it is in the role of Cindy Lane in "At Piney Ridge."

NEW NAME FOR LUBIN FEATURE.

The five act photoplay feature from the Sudermann drama, which was to have been released through the V-L-S-E, by the Lubin Company as "The Fires of St. John" has been renamed. The new feature in which Nance O'Neil is starred is to be issued under the title of "The Flames of Johannis." The change is illustrative of frequent complications arising in photoplay nomenclature.

The scenario from which Edgar Lewis prepared the photoplay for the Lubin Company was taken from the Sudermann drama as originally published. Some years ago a stage adaptation was made, in which Nance O'Neil starred, under the title of "The Fires of St. John."

It is to avoid identification with this stage version that the Lubin Company has changed the title of its pretentious photoplay feature to "The Flames of Johannis." With this change the feature is now ready for release.

PICTOGRAPHS TO URGE PREPAREDNESS.

Immediately after attacking the five year naval plan of Secretary of the Navy Daniels, in an address made to the members of the American Defense Society, Henry Reuterdahl, artist and naval expert, has brought into play the motion picture, with the fundamental purpose of impressing upon the minds of the people that our navy is absolutely inadequate, and that we should immediately start to prepare for defense.

Motion pictures were chosen by Mr. Reuterdahl by reason of the fact that he could reach many more millions of people at the same time, and having his thoughts visualized on the screen would make a greater impression, than simply his written words. In so doing, he has given his substantial reasons why United States should begin immediately to prepare to be visualized in the Paramount Pictographs, and his thoughts are being pictured in a most impressive manner

GREAT NORTHERN SUBJECTS SELL WELL.

The Celebrated Players Film Company of Chicago, Ill., have recently acquired the Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin rights to the Great Northern Film Company's latest release entitled "The Mother Who Paid."

Joseph L. Friedman, the active head of the Chicago concern, spent last week in New York, and was a welcome visitor at the offices of the Great Northern Film Company. He expressed great enthusiasm over "The Mother Who Paid," and hoped that all Polar Bear features would equal this one in every regard, and be on the same high plane.

Sol. Lesser, of San Francisco and New York, also visited the offices of the Great Northern Film Company, and has acquired the Pacific coast rights to a number of their recent and past releases.

"DRIFTWOOD" NOT FOR PROGRAMS.

"Driftwood" the Ocean picture which is being marketed by the Raver Film Corporation will not be released on a program. The persistence with which some attempted to qualify to the contrary, would make it seem that this rumor was true, nevertheless it is vigorously denied by Mr. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation. He admits, however, that several programs were considering it and some of them had given offers that would have meant a very substantial profit.

On the open market basis where it will receive the individual attention of the state right purchasers it, without a doubt, will have the big success that its worth demands. The open market is badly in need of just such strong pictures as "Driftwood" and in the long run it will mean a more profitable revenue for us and certainly bigger returns to the purchasers of territory.

"BIG JIM GARRITY" A STRONG PATHE RELEASE.

"Big Jim Garrity," the five part Pathe Gold Rooster release for April 18, shows for the first time Robert Edeson in a Pathe picture. Mr. Edeson finds in the title role a part well suited to him and as the big hearted, big bodied foreman of a southern mine is always convincing and forceful. He is ably supported by Eleanor Woodruff, who for some time starred in Pathe productions. Carl Harbaugh, and Lyster Chambers. Lyster Chambers will be remembered for his splendid work in Pathe's "At Bay," and Mr. Harbaugh used to be in the Pathe Stock Company in Jersey City.

George Fitzmaurice, who is winning golden opinions as a maker of Gold Rooster Plays, directed the picture which is adapted from the A. H. Woods' success of the same name.

P. THAD. VOLKMAN A LOCATION EXPERT.

Obtaining correct and appropriate exterior locations for motion pictures has become an art in itself, and there are few in the business who have a better knowledge of where to go, what to get and how to get it, than P. Thad Volkman, of the Columbia-Metro directing forces. He has proved his worth on many occasions, and notably in the making of the forthcoming Columbia-Metro wonderplay, "The Half Million Bribe," in which Hamilton Revelle and Marguerite Snow are starred.

The scenario called for, among other things, the interior and exterior of a millionaire's home. Mr. Volkman obtained permission to use a magnificent home diagonally across from the home of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, at Madison avenue and Thirty-sixth street.

GOLD KING SCREEN COMPANY MOVES OFFICE.

Owing to the great increase in business President Jones of the Gold King Screen Company has been forced to seek larger and more commodious office space. A lease has just been signed for the entire suite of offices in the second floor of the Hightower Building the largest and most completely appointed office building in Altus, Okla., and an addition made to the office force which will enable the company to handle the clerical work more promptly.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

"THE HARD WAY," a three reel comedy featuring Jack Pickford, is being produced at the Selig Pacific Coast studios by Director T. N. Heffron. It is a story written by Russell E. Smith, the plot moving swiftly along to a wholly unexpected climax. Important characters are portrayed by Vivian Reed, Lillian Hayward, Harry Lonsdale and Sidney Smith.

Richard Garrick, who is directing the co-stars, Alexander Gaden and Gertrude Robinson, in Gaumont, the Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe, "The Quality of Faith," cast himself for the role of "Baker," the strike-leader in the factory strike scenes. However, the mob scenes assumed such vast proportions that Mr. Garrick found all his attention would be required for the task of directing. Accordingly he surrendered the role to John Mackin. These factory scenes are being taken in Atlanta, Ga., whither a score of the players were taken from the winter studios at Jacksonville, Fla.

Rex de Rosselli has resumed charge of the animal zoo at Universal City and in future will have complete control over the training and exhibition of the large number of wild beasts which are used in photoplays at the film capital.

Roselli has had years of experience in the handling of wild animals.

One of the biggest ball room sets ever erected in the Famous Players studio was just built for "Molly Make-Believe" in which Marguerite Clark is to be starred. It was for the great masquerade ball in which "Molly" is the unconscious cause of her future lover's being seriously injured. It is the fall which Carl takes while pursuing Molly that later gives rise to the series of letters that in turn develop their delightful little romance.

Director William Worthington is engaged in the picturization of a two reel comedy drama entitled, "The Day of Days," featuring Herbert Rawlinson with Agnes Vernon playing opposite.

Muriel Ostriche is to be seen after April 17th co-starring with Edna Wallace Hopper and Charles J. Ross in Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf's story, "Who Killed Simon Baird," which is screened under the title of "By Whose Hand."

The Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation is responsible for the production.

In the first episode of "The Grip of Evil," the new photoplay series being filmed by Balboa for Pathe, a perfectly good touring car was blown up recently. Norman Manning superintended the feat, which was highly spectacular. Harry Harvey is the director in charge of the production which will star Jackie Saunders.

"The Soil," is the title of a two reel photoplay which is being filmed by director Otis Turner with Harry Carter and Maude George in the leading roles. Most of the plot is laid in Sweden and the story was written by Turner. In this photoplay Lois Wilson assumes an entirely new role that of a Swedish girl.

Lewis J. Selznick, president of the new Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, has just returned from a trip through the middle west during which he completed negotiations for the establishment of the Selznick Exchanges which will have the exclusive distribution of Miss Young's pictures from October on.

The Smalleys have spent a week in San Diego filming scenes for Lois Weber's psychological drama "The Eye of God," in which Tyrone Powers plays the featured lead, with Lois Weber playing opposite. It will take Director Smalley at least ten days more to complete this picture, which will be released as a feature in five reels.

The popular Gaumont Mutual scenic series "See America First" is now being handled by C. M. White, assistant to F. G. Bradford, general manager of the Gaumont company. The release of March 19 shows entertaining views of San Francisco, Cal., "See America First" is a split-reel release with Harry Palmer's animated cartoons which are also the product of the Gaumont Mutual laboratories at Flushing, N.Y. Mr. Palmer will devote his part of the reel to a humorous skit on Charlie Chaplin, the latest Mutual recruit. It will be called "Preparedness."

Cleo Madison has completed the making of a comedy entitled, "Maggie McGady's Choice," in which she plays, "Maggie," with William V. Mong, Edward Hearn, Margaret Whistler, Ray Handford, Harry Mann and Lule Warrenton in the cast.

The Dillon Brothers—Robert and Jack—are combining their various talents in Vogue (Mutual) comedies.

Robert Dillon writes comedies for brother Jack to produce in laugh makers.

Director E. J. Le Saint has practically completed the filming of Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Three Godfathers," most of the scenes of which were taken on the Mojave desert where a company of twenty-five people spent two weeks. Harry Carey and Stella Razeto play the leads.

In the filming of "Into The Primitive," a forthcoming Selig Red Seal Play to be released through V-L-S-E, it was necessary during the course of the story, written by Robert Ames Bennett, to introduce a terrific hurricane. The usual methods proved inadequate and finally the plan of using huge propellors of an aeroplane was hit upon. The result fully justified the means.

"She Wasn't That Kind of a Girl" is the title of the comedy now being produced by Jack Dillon at the Vogue (Mutual) studios in Hollywood.

It is burlesque melodrama combined with a bit of gentle slapstick play, in which Baddy McQuire, Russ Powell, Priscilla Dean, and a brand new addition to the company, named Louise Owen, do their best to upset all the traditions for funny pictures.

Two prominent theater openings within the past month have been marked by the installation of the latest development in picture progress—the American Master Organ. The United States Photo Play theater, Paterson and the Regent theater, Kearney, N. J., have both installed this instrument as a part of their ultra-modern equipment.

Director Robert Leonard has commenced work on a five reel comedy drama in which he and Ella Hall play the leads.

Winnifred Greenwood, Franklin Ritchie, Eugenie Forde, Clarence Burton and Roy Stewart have just finished working in a five part photodrama produced by Edward Sloman, which will be released as a Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe Edition entitled "None So Blind."

The theme of the story is centered about the objections of an artist to the appearance of his wife on the stage.

Balboa now has a pair of sisters, the Reeves girls, who are destined to become screen favorites. Myrtle has been appearing in Horkheimer productions for a year past. Mary has just joined the company. Both are decided blondes.

Director Rupert Julian will finish in a few days the picturization of "Maude," a five reel romantic drama suggested by Tennyson's poem. The story was written by Julian and prepared for the screen by Olga Printzlau. Julian plays the featured lead with Francelia Billington playing opposite. Others in the cast are Nanine Wright, Jack Holt, Douglas Gerrard, Gordon Griffith and little Zoe Bech.

Anna Little, the popular American (Mutual) star of "western" pictures, plays the role of a dance hall girl in the two part drama, "The Awakening," which will appear soon as a Mutual release.

Miss Little succeeds in marrying herself to a cowboy (Art Acord) when he is drunk. In the morning, he has forgotten all about it. Jack Richardson plays a prominent role.

"The Purple Shadows," a two reel underworld drama, has been completed by director Jacques Jaccard. Jaccard has commenced a new two reel underworld drama entitled, "The Cage Man," dealing largely with prison life. The story was written by Harold C. Burr and was adapted for the screen by Jaccard.

Clara Kimball Young, star of the film corporation bearing her name, is making arrangements for a Scenario Contest in which $2,000 will be offered for the best five-reel scenario submitted by July 15th, the date on which she will begin the production of her own photoplays. The scenarios must be written with Miss Young's personality in view and originality of theme and dramatic power will be the first considerations.

"The Masterpiece," is the title of a two part drama by Nathan P. Oaks which was recently begun by Director Thomas Ricketts of the Mutual American studio.

Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorn and Charles Newton, the American (Mutual) stars, are seen in the leading roles.

"The Wheels of Power," a five reel society drama, in which Adele Farrington is playing the featured lead, will be finished within a few days by director Jay Hunt. Miss Farrington is supported by C. N. Hammond. Others in the cast are Mina Jeffries, Mrs. Jay Hunt, O. C. Jackson and Kingsley Benedict.

Edwin Middleton, who will direct "The Isle of Love" at Gaumont's winter studio, Jacksonville, Fla., has selected the principals who will support Miss Gertrude McCoy in this five reel feature. Earl O. Schenck will have the role of a young sea captain. Robert Clugston will enact a wealthy man of the world. Iva Shepard will portray the belle of a fishing village who is scorned by the sea captain. Charles A. Travis will have a chance to show how theatrical managers once treated him, since he is cast for the part of a manager. W. J. Butler has a part that smells of the sea, that of the captain of a schooner.

In the three reel feature, "The Test of Chivalry," in course of production at the Los Angeles studios by William Robert Daly, the Selig director, Fritzi Brunette is again seen in one of her favorite "ragged" roles. "The Test of Chivalry" is a story of the east and west, of a woman's love and sacrifice. The supporting cast includes Edward J. Piel, Vivian Reed and James Bradbury.

Director William C. Dowlan is nearing the completion of the five reel comedy-drama adapted from "The Madcap" by George Gibbs, in which Flora Parker De Haven is featured, with Richard Sterling playing opposite.

Some fine scenes, taken in one of the big cotton mills of Anniston, Ala., promise to be a feature of the approaching Gaumont Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition release "The Quality of Faith," directed by Richard Garrick. Scores of the employes of the mill participated in the scenes. The Gaumonters who went to Anniston included Gertrude Robinson, Alexander Gaden, John Macklin, Alan Robinson, Gladys Thornton and Lucille Taft.

Need of Sunday Shows

In Cambridge, Mass., a Public Hearing on Sabbath Shows Brings Out Exceptionally Telling Pleas for Healthy Amusements on Sundays—Ministers Had Protested—What a Practical Manufacturer Thinks About the Matter.

By William Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—One of the strongest indorsements ever given the moving picture from a practical point of view was delivered by Emory H. Marsters, a Cambridge manufacturer, at recent public hearing before Mayor Rockwood, of Cambridge, when he said that he bought tickets for moving picture shows and sent his employees to see the films to keep them out of saloons. Mr. Marsters was one of several public spirited citizens of Cambridge who appeared before the Mayor to protest against the plea of several Cambridge ministers to do away with the Sunday night moving picture shows, and after a lengthy hearing on the question Mayor Rockwood took the matter under advisement.

Film Men Represented at Hearing.

The amusement houses were represented at the hearing by Former Senator Harry M. Stearns, Arthur K. Redding and W. H. Smart. Mr. Stearns, in an effort to placate the ministers who were seeking to abolish the Sunday night shows, suggested at the hearing that these ministers confer with the managers of the various moving picture houses in the city and decide upon a Sunday night program that would be agreeable to everybody.

Although a score of clergymen appeared at the hearing in opposition to Sunday night film shows there are many other clergymen in the same city who declare this form of entertainment is desirable, among whom is Mgr. John O'Brien, pastor of the Church of the Sacred Heart East Cambridge. A letter from Mgr. O'Brien was read at the hearing in which he approved of Sunday night film shows.

Mr. Marsters, however, fired the hook shell into the ranks of the protesting ministers. He is a representative business man who stands high in the community and whose argument had considerable weight.

The Greatest Enemy of Liquor.

"The motion picture house is the greatest enemy of liquor," he said. "Manufacturers are coming to realize more and more the importance of trying to govern the acts of their employees when they are not at work. When young men gather on Sunday, and, in their idleness, try to think of some place to go, it is much better that they go to a moving picture show than to a drinking place.

"Two of the young men in my employ were making a practice to go to Boston on a Sunday night, and there spend the time in drinking. To get them away from this practice I bought them tickets and sent them to see a show on Sunday nights."

Among others who spoke against abolishing the Sunday night moving picture shows were James E. Cassidy, retiring president of the Inman Square Business Men's Association.

The movement against the Sunday shows was led by the Rev. William M. McNair, pastor of the Prospect Street Congregational Church, and the Rev. Richard Wright, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational Church in Cambridge.

ANOTHER TICKET BILL DIES.

Representative Craig of Boston Loses Amendment.

Boston, Mass.—A second attempt to force a bill through the Massachusetts Legislature this year to regulate the sale of tickets to theaters has failed and Representative John W. Craig, of Boston, was behind both movements. Both of the bills were aimed at ticket speculators, but they affected the moving picture houses as well as the playhouses. The first bill introduced by Representative Craig provided that no tickets for a theater should be sold anywhere but in the regular box office of that theater, and only by an employee of that theater. This bill was rejected by the Legislative Committee on Mercantile Affairs. Representative Craig, however, staved off final action, offered an amendment to the bill and the measure was reconsidered by the same committee. The amendment offered by the Representative did not materially change the scope of the bill and after a hearing on the measure the members of the committee gave the bill and its amendment "leave to withdraw."

"FIREFLY OVERTURE."

A Novelty Attracting Attention in Boston—Other New Things.

Boston, Mass.—Innovations are getting to be quite the thing in moving picture houses in this territory and exhibitors are constantly on the watch for new ideas to make their theaters more attractive. The "Firefly Overture" is one of the latest novelties. This was introduced by Manager Thomas Sorriero at the Park theater, Boston, and has made a decided impression. The entire stage is wired with small electric bulbs, and to the accompaniment of appropriate music these thousands of miniature lights are flashed on and off, carrying out the firefly effect. Photoplays particularly adapted to the Lenten season have been drawing large houses to this theater at every performance and Manager Sorriero, at the request of several prominent Boston society women, has consented to give a fourteen-year-old girl soprano her first opportunity to appear in public as a soloist at the Park theater on Sunday evening, April 9. The young lady is said to be possessed of a wonderful voice and has aroused the interest of many Boston music lovers who predict for her a brilliant career.

The Modern theater is the last of the high class moving picture houses of Boston to succumb to the call of the times. A full orchestra has been introduced into this house to share the musical honors with the organists and the change has been very pleasing to its host of patrons.

MAINE NEWS LETTER.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World, Bangor.

Mutual Opens Bangor Office.

BANGOR, Me.—The Mutual Film Co. this week opened a branch office on Franklin street, Bangor, next to the headquarters of the General and Universal companies. On this latest acquisition of a film exchange to the Queen City of the East it may now safely be said that 95 per cent. of the film distributing business of Maine is done in Bangor. Perhaps it would be better to qualify this statement a little by saying that of the film distributing business originating in Maine 95 per cent. is done here. In the western part of the state, near Portland, the theaters secure their films largely from Boston.

R. F. Borroto is in charge of the local branch and is assisted by Arthur Allen, formerly manager of the Palace theater, Bangor, as booker.

George Newhall Busy.

Bangor, Me.—George Newhall, Bangor manager of the General Film Company, has recently introduced General service to the Vinalhaven, Kennebunk and Hallowell theaters of the Acme Amusement Company, John Goodwin manager. The Loyal theater, Waterville, is using full General service.

Pierce Morrison, of Greenville, manager of the Greenville theater, was a visitor to town this week looking up the latest in films for his house.

NEWARK NEWS LETTER.

George Corlies Managing Astor Theater.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.—George Corlies, well known in the moving picture industry in the state of New Jersey, recently took charge of the Astor theater, Plainfield, N. J., and was tended a hearty reception by the folks in that vicinity. Various tokens of regard were sent by many friends, not the least of which was a handsome bouquet placed on his desk by employes of the theater. A beautiful floral horseshoe came from friends in Jersey City, where Mr. Corlies conducted a moving picture theater for the past five years. The theater was crowded at the opening performance and it is the wish of the many friends of Mr. Corlies that his latest undertaking will prove a complete success.

Jersey City Officials Want Censors.

Jersey City, N. J.—A conference on the question of motion picture censorship was held last week between Judge George G. Tenant, of the Hudson County Court, and Commissioner of Public Safety Frank B. Hague, of Jersey City. It was decided to ask the aid of the ministers and improvement associations in keeping out indecent pictures and in enforcing the minor admissions law. A volunteer censorship board was proposed.

Marbach Association Dances.

Newark, N. J.—The Otto Marbach Association, of which Otto Marbach, booker at the Royal Feature Film exchange, is manager, held its second annual dance March 25. A goodly number of film men were in attendance. The affair was a decided success. Mr. Marbach gave several exhibition dances.

At It Again.

Paterson, N. J.—The Paterson Board of Censors called upon the Paterson exhibitors to show their lithographs and posters at a meeting held last week. Pictures advertising "Lilo of the Sulu Seas," "Three Weeks" and "Surrender" were all tabooed. Among those that were not censored were Blue Bird's "Undine," "Tillie's Punctured Romance," "The Law's Decree," "Woman of Mystery" and many others.

Strand Morning Matinee.

Newark, N. J.—The Strand theater, 118 Market street, of which Jules Gerstle is manager, will, beginning April 1, give a morning performance for children.

Feature at Loew's.

Newark, N. J.—Loew's Newark theater, 99 Springfield avenue, managed by Eugene Meyers, last week showed the World Film's "The Yellow Passport" in conjunction with its regular vaudeville. It is also announced that by popular request "The Battle Cry of Peace" will return to Loew's during the first part of April.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

ALBANY GENERAL FILM MOVES.

Syracuse to Be New Headquarters—A Change in Management.

By E. O. Weinberg, Troy Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ALBANY, N. Y.—General Film Company's Albany branch moved to Syracuse at close of business Saturday, April 1. No reason for the change has been given. Mr. A. Bevan, present manager, formerly of the New Haven branch, has resigned, and Mr. C. W. Allers will have charge of this territory with office in Syracuse. Mr. O'Neil, now assistant manager, will remain in the Capitol district to take charge of the different matters and will aid the exhibitors whenever possible.

Troy Times Offers Prizes.

Troy, N. Y.—The Troy Times Art Section is offering two prizes each week to public school pupils of the city for the best essays on the subject of the feature picture shown each Saturday in the educational motion picture performances held in the Central School auditorium under the direction of the Troy Parent-Teacher Association.

This contest has received the endorsement of the school authorities of the city and the Motion Picture Committee of the Parent-Teacher Association. The contest is intended to develop the perception and quicken the interest of the hundreds of Troy boys and girls who attend and enjoy these motion pictures each Saturday.

This is not a contest in grammar or literary skill, but in ability to see with understanding and tell what is seen.

The prizes for a recent week were: First prize, a Brownie camera No. 2, for roll film pictures, 2¼ by 3¼ inches, and the second prize, "Poems of Childhood."

A Safety-First Campaign.

Troy, N. Y.—The city administration will shortly inaugurate a "safety first" compaign for the purpose of educating Trojans in traffic rules. A plan, worked out by Mayor Burns, provides that films will be displayed at local moving picture houses showing the proper manner in which to alight from street cars and the way to travel generally so that danger of accidents will be reduced.

Philadelphia Matters

Suicide of Philip Sternberg the Startling Event of the Week in the Keystone Metropolis—Manager Boyer, of Hagerstown, Makes Valuable Present to His City—Business Notes and Personal Mention.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Philip Sternberg, well known in local moving picture and real estate circles, recently committed suicide by inhaling gas at his home, 309 Pine street, his body having been discovered by a son, Abraham, 19 years of age, and a daughter, Pearl, 20 years of age. In a final message to his family and friends he remarked that business troubles had preyed upon his mind until he had practically become insane. He stated that the men in whom he had placed the utmost reliance and thought his best friends had robbed him of the savings of a lifetime.

Mr. Sternberg conducted the Philip Sternberg Company, Inc., manufacturers of knit goods, 21 South Third street, for many years, and accumulated considerable wealth. Recently he was interested in the moving picture industry by several of his supposed friends and was induced to purchase controlling share in the Hippodrome, Sixth and South streets, The Princess theater, Fifth and South streets, and a moving picture theater located at Sixtieth street and Lansdowne avenue. According to members of his family he invested a total of $6,500 in the Lansdowne Avenue theater, from which investment he never received a return. After having become interested in the moving picture industry he sold his manufacturing interest at a loss and devoted his entire energies to the theatrical field.

There is not a single doubt as to the fact of Mr. Sternberg having been swindled, and his supposed friends grasped every opportunity to secure money from the easily influenced business man. Among his dying effects was found a hastily written message which read as follows: "They robbed me of my name, my reputation, my credit and my business. For a long time I have feared insanity, although I have been fighting it hard. I cannot stand it any longer. I don't want to do this, but things have got the best of me. I was handled very cruelly by those for whom I did a lot of good."

Trenton Exhibitor Dies.

Trenton, N. J.—Harry C. Taylor, vice-president of the Trenton Theater Building Company, Trenton, N. J., and widely known in theatrical circles throughout the entire country, died in a hospital in Chicago on the afternoon of Monday, March 27. He had been suffering for several weeks from a complication of troubles and the news of his death had been momentarily expected. William T. Taylor, a brother of the deceased, left immediately for Chicago to take care of the remains.

A. L. Fox Controls the Playhouse.

East Stroudsburg, Pa.—The management of the Playhouse theater, East Stroudsburg, Pa., formerly known as the Plaza, has been taken over by Andrew L. Fox, of Washington, N. J. Mr. Fox was formerly in partnership with Albert H. Beach, of Newark, N. J., but Mr. Beach has recently withdrawn from the partnership and left Mr. Fox in complete charge. Mr. Leach will continue to act in the capacity of piano player and announces that his family have moved to East Stroudsburg, where they intend making their permanent residence. Mr. Fox is an experienced exhibitor and patrons of the theater are assured of the best performances.

Sturk Amusement Company.

Philadelphia, Pa.—An application will be made for a Pennsylvania charter by Charles A. Sturk, John C. Swartley and Paul Freeman, for the charter of an intended corporation to be called the Sturk Amusement Company, the character and object of which concern is the construction, operation and maintenance of places of amusement.

Edith Ritchie Dies.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Mrs. Isobel Ritchie Miller Morris, known in moving picture circles as Edith Ritchie, widely known to Main Line society, died recently in the Bryn Mawr Hospital, as a result of a nervous breakdown from overwork. She had been ill since the death of her mother, Mrs. D. Leeds Miller, who died on the 25th day of last February.

Will Build New Reading House.

Reading, Pa.—Architect Alexander F. Smith is receiving sealed proposals from contractors for the tearing down and removal of the properties 653 to 661 Penn street, Reading, Pa., for the erection of the new Paramount moving picture theater for Carr & Shadd. Work on the structure will be started as soon as possible.

A Valuable Present to His City.

Hagerstown, Pa.—Manager Charles W. Boyer, of the New Academy moving picture theater, Hagerstown, Md., will present the film "Hagerstown in Movies" to the city of Hagerstown, to be placed in the city vaults for use at some future date. The pictures were taken under the personal direction of Mr. Boyer and all of the principal points of interest in the city may be seen in the films. It is certain that they will prove of great value to the city authorities in years to come, and a vote of thanks has been extended to Mr. Boyer by the city officials

Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation.

The Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation has recently been granted a charter under the laws of the state of Delaware for the purpose of engaging in the manufacture of moving picture films. David R. Wilkins, Edward C. Doust and Harry W. Davis are the principal incorporators, the new concern having been capitalized at $2,500,000.

Philadelphia Business Notes.

Joseph Katz, manager of the Stanley theater, 1622 Market street, declares that business has been of a most satisfactory nature during recent weeks and that he has installed considerable new equipment, including a new Baird projecting machine. The Stanley is one of Philadelphia's beauty spots and is patronized by a very high class of people.

Bill Wert, of the Calehuff Supply Co., 1301 Race street, Philadelphia, announces that business has been very good of recent date and that he has installed equipment in many theaters throughout the state, including National theater, Bethlehem, Pa., A. Tocci, manager; Victor theater, Pottsville, S. D. Brown, formerly manager of the Garden theater, destroyed by fire, manager; Marconi theater, Eighth and Federal streets, Philadelphia, Mr. Ingenito, manager, and the Palm theater, formerly the Hart theater, Frankford avenue and Norris street, which has recently installed a moving picture show.

M. Hausman, proprietor of the Hippodrome theater, Pottsville, Pa., one of the largest theaters in that section of the state, was a recent visitor to Philadelphia and paid a visit to the Calehuff Supply Company, where he purchased a new Simplex projecting machine.

Washington Exchanges

Sidney B. Lust Coming to the Front as Big Factor in Film Business at National Capital—International Film Service Opens Its Local Office with Fritz B. Wathne in Charge—Among Other Exchanges.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth Street, N. E. Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There is considerable excitement in exchange circles due to the turn things have taken in Washington. It is definitely understood that within the next two weeks there will be two new distributing depots in the National Capital while one already existing has been greatly enlarged. It is always usual to deal with realities first, so Sidney B. Lust, proprietor of the United Film Service in this territory is to be introduced as a progressive exchange man, one who is fast forging to the front.

S. B. Lust Buys Famous Players.

Mr. Lust has just secured control of the Famous Players Corporation, taking over in addition to the good will of the company, nearly two hundred reels of film. That is one of the big steps he has taken during the past few weeks. A second undertaking was the purchasing of states' rights for the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, North Carolina and West Virginia for "Tilly's Punctured Romance," and the purchase of the following war pictures, put on by the Timely Events Company: "The Fall of Warsaw," "War World Wide," "Fighting With the Allies" and "Italy at War With Austria."

Sidney B. Lust.

Supplementing all of these, he has contracted for the Ella Wheeler Wilcox series and for the Charley Chaplin cartoons, of which latter he will get one each week.

Not satisfied with these various purchases, Mr. Lust has entered into a contract with a Philadelphia concern handling the New Corporation films and will also handle their goods in this section.

He has made very rapid strides in the film business. It was not so many months ago that he was acting as manager for the concern whose business in this locality he has since purchased. He has maintained an office in Baltimore, where he has enjoyed good business and recently opened a branch in Kimball, W. Va. The former is in charge of Carl Jones, while Ed. Leon looks after the State of West Virginia. He now contemplates invading Charlotte and another week or two will find him firmly established in the North Carolina city. In addition to the films Mr. Lust has arranged to handle a full line of motion picture theater supplies, such as chairs, machine parts, deodorizers, etc.

Local Hearst Exchange Opens.

The end of this week will see the International Film Service, the Hearst chain of film exchanges, fully established on Eleventh street, between G and H streets, Northwest, with Fritz B. Wathne in charge of the local branch. In addition to the semi-weekly release of the Hearst-Vitagraph News Weekly, Mr. Wathne will have comedies and cartoons to offer, and shortly the fifteen-week serial "The Mysteries of Myra."

Mr. Wathne will have associated with him G. S. Manning, formerly a road man traveling out of the Atlanta, Ga., office of Pathe, Inc.; a Mr. Johnson, from the same city; Earle E. Reese, who has lately been traveling for the Metro, and who is well known in this city by reason of his long residence here, and two other men whose names are withheld.

Mr. Wathne has served the past six years in the employ of Pathe. He has lately been manager of the Charlotte office of that concern, going there from the Jersey City studio to establish the North Carolina branch. Previous to that time he was located in the New York offices. While with his former employers he made splendid strides and in the Tar Heel section he was universally well liked. The new exchange is starting off with a big noise and it is predicted by its personnel that it will soon be firmly rooted in this locality.

A Big Rumor.

The other exchange here referred to is at present the subject of rumor, but the big noise is that James and W. S. Wickham will soon embark again as exchange men. It is said that they are at present negotiating for quarters somewhere on E street, near Ninth street, bringing them in close proximity to the center of the first run houses. They contemplate offering a commercial service with a wide selection of subjects and have engaged to market the films of several well known Philadelphia exchanges of the same type. It is understood that contracts have already been signed up and that orders have been placed for the necessary exchange equipment, such as film safes, office furniture, etc. They will cover the District of Columbia and the South.

This is not a new venture exactly, for the Wickham brothers were similarly engaged in one of the larger cities of New York State prior to coming to this city. They had operated an exchange and a string of houses there for about four years. At present they are conducting the Dixie theater, at Eighth and H streets, Northeast. This rumor, which is a very persistent one, says they will be established here by the middle of April.

A Metro Anniversary.

The excitement does not stop, however, with extensions of business and new exchanges, for a visit to the offices of the Metro Film Service, Inc., in the Strand theater building, at Ninth and D streets, Northwest, also causes surprise. This company last week celebrated its first anniversary, not perhaps as one would think, but by entirely remodeling the exchange and getting things into shipshape. First off, the Famous Players films, nearly two hundred in number, were disposed of to Sidney B. Lust, proprietor of the United Film Service, for the company has decided to devote its entire attention to the marketing of the Metro product. In speaking of this L. M. Day, the president, stated that he and his associates were going to have their hands full with the regular five reel feature, the one reel Drew comedy and the one reel Metro travelogue. To these is to be added the two reel Bushman subjects to be released weekly for fourteen weeks.

With the Famous Players film off the boards, the exchange was divided in half by the erection along almost its entire length of an oak and pebbled glass partition. This space was in turn partitioned off crossways so that as one enters the door he finds himself in a small anteroom. Beyond this is the booker's office, where Abe Dresner, formerly handling the Blue Bird and Red Feather features, hangs out. Next comes the president's office, all fixed up with a green plush carpet on the floor and attractive oak office furniture, where one may find, if able to get beyond the guards at the outer and inner doors, L. M. Day and sometimes, (when he is in town) Frank Brown, one of the best known and best liked roadmen in this section. The last office in the line is that of the bookkeeper-cashier-secretary, T. E. Kuntz. These offices are well lighted, for they face on Seventh street, and there is plenty of window space.

Running along the opposite wall for about the same distance are the racks for the storage of posters. In the center is the shipping table. The remaining space at the rear of the exchange is shut off from the other sections by a rack for the accommodation of heralds and other small pieces of advertising matter. Back of this is the rewinding table and the motor-driven Rex film renovator. This section is also well lighted, for it faces on D street.

This exchange has made excellent progress, without noise or far-spreading trumpeting; its business has been carried on along conservative lines by the company of which Messrs. Day, Brown and Kuntz are the members, and what is more, they are in the game to stay and progress and each day finds them past a little bit stronger in their position.

At the Big "U" Exchange.

J. Leo Yates, manager of the local office of the Universal Film Company, known as the Washington Film Exchange, will handle Blue Bird and Red Feather features in addition. Mr. Yates has just returned from a short trip through West Virginia and reports having secured a number of bookings for these pictures. A record run was made on "Undine" in Washington, this feature having been shown for ten days at the Empress theater, on Ninth street, Northwest.

Theaters in Virginia Boom City

An Account of the Picture Houses In Hopeville, Va.—Too Many for All to Be Money-Makers for Hopeful Investors.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth Street, N. E. Washington, D. C.

PETERSBURG, Va.—To the traveler entering the city of Hopewell, Va., for the first time, it becomes a matter of much wonderment to view the great masses of iron, brick and concrete that loom up—the buildings are going up so quickly and closely together that the traveler is given the impression that all at once everyone in the neighborhood has started in all over the place to build structures, and each builder was trying to see if he could not get his place up the first.

The race is not confined to dwellings, nor yet business houses, for the erection of motion picture theaters forms a part of the great activities of Hopewell. Before going into the construction work further it might be said that Hopewell is the boom town of Virginia, the place that sprung into existence over night when the DuPont Powder Company selected it for the manufacture of war materials to be furnished to the European armies. It grew very rapidly and then came the fire which desolated it. In the conflagration four motion picture theaters were demolished.

There are a number of theaters here now. There is the Broadway, under the management of Mr. Harris, who is widely known throughout Virginia, and who was formerly the manager of the Superior theater, in Richmond, which is now a feature house. There is also the Orpheum, running program service and features. The Y. M. C. A. has an auditorium which is used for motion picture exhibitions a part of the time, and at City Point the James River Y. M. C. A. is used by the powder company to give motion picture shows for the benefit of their employees without charge. This latter is on the property of the powder company. Outside the grounds there is another small theater. In addition there is a colored house and a burlesque theater. None of the houses have a seating capacity in excess of 300, with the exception of the burlesque theater. The general admission price is 10 cents to each of these houses.

Too Many Theaters.

There are two more motion picture theaters in Hopewell which are practically completed and ready for opening. Each of these will have a seating capacity of between three and four hundred. In addition there are sixteen other theaters in various stages of construction or exploitation—construction work has started, the ground is being cleared or the promoters are merly selling stock. Eight of these houses will be completed in very short order, and then there is going to be a big battle to see which will survive. Motion pictures have the reputation of having lost more money to their investors than any other "game" in existence; from all appearances there is going to be quite a sum of money lost in the scrap which will begin when all of the projected theaters get into working shape.

ATLANTA NEWS LETTER.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Benefit for Mountain Schools.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Among Atlanta's benefit shows Sunday was a picture program at the Grand for the benefit of mountain schools at Mineral Bluff and Tallulah, Ga.

The entertainment was in charge of the Women's Study Club of the Federation of Women's Clubs. It is said the mountain schools are greatly in need of funds.

Famous Players Company in Georgia.

Atlanta, Ga.—To take part in a photoplay showing a mountain feud, Hazel Dawn, Hardee Kirkland and other stars will soon arrive at Gainesville, Ga., and will then strike out by the stage coach route for the wilds of the moonshine district of Hall county. Frederick Thompson, director of the company of players, is in Atlanta at the Georgian Terrace. He will join the actors in Gainesville.

Wallace Walthall With Ad. Company.

Atlanta, Ga.—Wallace Walthall, brother of Henry Walthall, and himself a film actor of considerable distinction, is said to have signed a contract in Atlanta this week whereby he is to devote his entire time to the Motion Picture Advertising Company of America, who maintain their general offices here and operate branches throughout the south.

Mr. Walthall, who was in the city Tuesday, the guest of R. A. Carhart, president of the Motion Picture company, has gone to Birmingham, Ala., where he expects to secure material for a line of new advertising films which are soon to be placed upon the market by the local concern.

Atlanta Brief Notes.

"The Piedmont," Atlanta's latest moving picture theater will open April 3rd.

Manager Hardcastle of the George Kleine Company is making a business trip this week through the south.

Charles Kessnich, Mutual Manager, has returned from a business trip to Savannah, Ga.

PITTSBURGH POLICE WILL KEEP WATCH OF THEATERS

Department of Public Safety Has Squad Watching Performances in City.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Pittsburgh Department of Public Safety has inaugurated a new system of supervisng "moving picture theaters and burlesque shows," having enlisted four uniformed policemen to visit the various places of amusement in the capacity of censors. By a recent change in the department, the civilian aide to the director became chief of detectives and since then there has been no censor or theatrical critic. In selecting the policemen as censors Director Hubbard stated that he "desired to secure the honest opinions of ordinary, every-day American citizens, who have no high-brow ideas of morality, but a decent respect for the home." For the past few weeks, it has been revealed, the "shockless coppers" have been on the censoring job and their reports have been voluminous. So far no serious consequences have been visted upon the moving picture theaters. Pittsburgh is said to be the first city in the country to adopt the plan.

CANDIDATE FOR LEGISLATURE.

Capt. Alfred McClelland Should Be Elected—Need for a Film Man.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—That the fight against the motion picture censorship law in Pennsylvania is assuming proportions greater than was anticipated, even by those who first raised the issue, is evidenced by some recent developments in the campaign. Interest centers in the coming contest for the Legislature, for the next session of the state law making bodies will see a great struggle for the rights of the industry—to defeat the proposed new amendments increasing the power of the censorship board and to repeal the existing law. The trade has decided that in order to get such remedial action it is necessary to have able representation in the next Legislature, men who know the facts as they exist and who will be equipped with the necessary knowledge of conditions.

Capt. A. McClelland.

Such a man is Captain Alfred H. McClelland, manager of the New Film Corporation in Pittsburgh, and one who knows the moving picture business from a to z. Captain McClelland has announced his candidatcy for the State Legislature from the seventh district, and his chances for nomination and subsequent election are considered excellent. His stand on censorship legislation alone assures him very strong support from the exhibitors and their friends in his district, which is one of the most important in the state. Captain McClelland is an active member of the Screen Club and a leader in the work of the organization.

Orpheum Nearly Ready.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The new Orpheum theater, at Murray and Forbes streets, is rapidly nearing completion and promises to be one of the finest in that section of the city, known as Squirrel Hill. Mark Browarsky, the owner, states that the house will be ready for opening by May 1.

More Film Exchange Space.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Another new film building, with the completion of three additional stories and the remodeling of the structure at 938-940 Penn avenue, will be ready for the use of exchanges. The building is fireproof and is being equipped throughout for the needs of the film business. The World Film, now at 955 Liberty avenue, has leased half of the fifth floor and will move into the larger quarters as soon as they are completed, about May 1. A number of moving picture concerns already have offices in the building.

Princess Theater Sold.

Donora, Pa.—The Princess theater, McKean avenue, Donora, has been purchased by John Hafner, of Waynesburg, Pa., who plans to take charge immediately. The former owner was Harry A. Cox. The Princess is a strictly modern house and the largest theater in town, seating 550 people.

Renovating the Elmore.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Elmore theater, Centre avenue, is being remodeled and redecorated throughout. Beside showing feature pictures, Mr. Feitler will add several vaudeville acts to his show two days a week. With the installation of pretty stage decorations, hangings, etc., the Elmore will be one of the most attractive houses in that part of the city.

Elmer Calhoun Makes a Change.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Elmer Calhoun, recently manager of the Cameraphone theater, 1600 Fifth avenue, resigned that position to take charge of the booking of Kalem's new serial, "The Social Pirates." A very satisfactory number of bookings have already been made. He has his headquarters at the General Film offices.

Harris Bros. Buy American Theater.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The American theater, 1510 Fifth avenue, has been purchased by Harris Bros., and placed under the management of Harry Megown. The new owners are making extensive improvements, including new screen and seats, and redecorating.

The New Theater.

Monongahela, Pa.—The old Anton theater has been greatly improved recently and rechristened the New theater. Manager Shupe states that business is on the upward trend and, with a more inviting house and good feature pictures as an attraction, the New theater should pass all former records.

Open New House in Trauger.

Trauger, Pa.—A moving picture theater has been opened in Simon's Hall by John Squiller and Sam Cucura. The new house is already doing a capaciay business at 10 and 15 cents admission. Hollis & Smith, of this city, installed the equipment.

Paragon Opens Offices.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Paragon Pictures Service, the latest film concern to enter the Pittsburgh territory, has opened offices at 113 Fourth avenue. J. L. Fay is manager of the new exchange, which will release one big feature weekly, beginning April 5. The Olympic theater, Fifth Avenue and other prominent houses have contracted for the service.

Max Stern with Fox.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Max Stern, formerly with the World Film Corporation and later manager of the Diamond theater, East Liverpool, O., has joined the road forces of the Fox Film Corporation, working out of the Pittsburgh office.

Doc Smith with Metro.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—"Doc" Smith, former road man for Fox and lately with the Independent Film Exchange, has been added to the road forces of the Pittsburgh branch of the Metro Pictures Corporation.

Screen Club Governors

Buffalo Screen Club Elects Board of Governors at Meeting on March 27 in New Quarters at 11 Court Street—New Rooms Spacious and Attractive—Ball Proposed for May—Other Committees Chosen.

By Joseph McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y—The Buffalo Screen Club elected a board of governors and various committees Monday night. Much enthusiasm and a good attendance marked the meeting, which was held at the new club rooms of the organization, 11 Court street. G. W. Christoffers, vice-president, presided and F. S. Hopkins was secretary of the meeting.

The following board of governors was elected: B. J. Brandon, Mutual Film Corporation, three years; J. M. Sitterly, Popular Film Exchange, three years; J. L. Mulhauser World Film Corporation, two years; C. A. Taylor, Metro Film Corporation, two years. A picture of the board of governors appears herewith.

The new club rooms are spacious and artistically decorated in tan and yellow, with fixtures and furnishings to harmonize with the general color scheme. A piano, Victrola and billiard tables have been installed.

The club will hold a ball on May 15, at the Elmwood Music Hall, Buffalo. The moving picture houses in Buffalo and Western New York will use slides to advertise the event which promises to be one of the greatest of its kind ever held in this city. It is expected that various film companies will be represented by some of their stars at the ball. Buffalo newspapers will give the affair wide publicity.

J. L. Mulhauser. B. J. Brandon. Chas. A. Taylor. J. M. Sitterly.

House and Publicity Committee.

The club elected the following house and publicity committee: A. C. Willats, Buffalo News; W. A. V. Mack, General Film Co.; Al. Becker, Becker Feature Film Co.; Harry Marsey, Popular Film Exchange; H. E. Hughes, United Film Service; F. J. Leonard, Essanay. These members will interest the local and trade papers in the ball and other features of the club.

Entertainment Committee.

The following entertainment committee, which was elected, will be busily engaged in preparations for the coming ball: Henry J. Carr, manager of Shea's theater, N. I. Filkins, Pathe; J. Gorchof, Mutual; Louis Green, World; Charles Rogers, Essanay Film Co.; H. E. Benedict, General.

The following new members were added: Charles Rogers, A. A. Schmidt, Peter Hofmeister, E. H. Miney, W. A. V. Mack; Henry J. Carr, J. H. Verbeck, Jerome Wilson and C. S. Weill.

New Watertown Theater.

Watertown, N. Y.—A theater to cost approximately $100,000 and to house 2,500 people will be erected in the next few months in Watertown, on State street near Public square.

W. J. Shepard has just completed the sale of the Hooker property to James P. and Aleck P. Papayanakos, well known theater proprietors of this city, and the theater, to be built by E. G. Charlebois, will be completed in July of this year.

The plan of the theater provides for 2,000 people on the main floor and 500 people on the balcony, with 75 box chairs.

J. Levy Added to World Film Staff.

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. Levy has been appointed road representative by J. L. Mulhauser, manager of the Buffalo offices of the World Film Corporation. Murray Cohen and Louis Green also represent these offices. Mr. Green was formerly assistant manager to the late Henry Marcus, when he managed the Academy theater, Buffalo.

Exhibitor G. C. Hall.

Buffalo, N. Y.—G. C. Hall is proprietor of the Maxine theater, Buffalo. Mr. Hall has promised to furnish your representative with a picture of himself and theater, as well as with details covering his successful house.

"I have been using the Triangle pictures for three months," said Mr. Hall, "and they are packing my theater. The Maxine is a ten-cent house, but on Sundays I give my patrons an extra show and advance the price to fifteen cents."

"Passion Play" Good Lenten Feature.

Buffalo, N. Y.—William Lyser, manager of the Rialto moving picture theater, Buffalo, recently put on the "Passion Play." He used a special organist and a lecturer. This made a good Lenten feature.

Ben Abrams With Triangle.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Ben Abrams has been appointed traveling representative of the Buffalo headquarters of the Triangle Film Corporation. He will cover Western New York. He formerly did special work for the Fox Co. He will work under the direction of George A. Hickey, manager of the Buffalo office.

"In point of service I am one of the oldest men in the film business," said Mr. Abrams. "I have always been connected with the exchange and manufacturing end of the industry. I have made a study of exhibitors' wants and as representative of the Triangle Film Corporation I certainly can give my patrons a perfect service."

George A. Hickey, manager of the Triangle office in the Buffalo territory, reports that Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is attracting big business from this service.

Overland to Begin Production.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Overland Film Producing Co. of Buffalo, which was recently incorporated, has raised its capital stock to $50,000. The studios will be improved. James Calnay, president and chief director, says the company will shortly begin its first six-reel feature production.

Buffalo Briefs.

J. N. Sitterly of the Popular Film Exchange recently cancelled a trip through his territory on account of his mother's illness.

The Popular Exchange, which has the state rights on Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter," recently booked this feature at Keith's theater, Buffalo. The Exchange is receiving several repeat orders on this production.

Olean, N. Y.—Lang's theater of Olean, N. Y., formerly managed by Peter Heos, was recently closed.

Oswego, N. Y.—The Eureka theater here has closed its doors.

A Word on Publicity

Detroit Newspaper Man, Editor of Motion Picture Section, Sends a Word to Publicity Departments of Producing Companies—A Bit More Co-operation with Daily Papers Would Be Profitable—About Photographs.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit.

DETROIT, MICH.—The new motion picture editor of the Detroit News is Frank Pipp, who writes under the alias Edward Stone. Mr. Pipp was formerly general manager of the Esperanto Motion Picture Co., and has always been active, more or less, in the business, either in the producing or the scenario end. During the few weeks that he has been on the desk he finds it hard work getting responses to letters which he sends to producing companies for material and photographs, according to the statement made to the World correspondent.

"I am surprised," he says, "that there is not greater co-operation on the part of the producers, because after all it only means publicity for them and for the business," he remarked. "What we want is good photographs—not stills—which will reproduce right. So many of the producers send along scenes from the pictures, but that is not what the average big newspaper wants. If there was more co-operation there would be more motion picture publicity."

Mr. Pipp also says that the film companies send out publicity matter about pictures and that the stories for advance publication turn out to be entirely different from the real story. This has happened several times during the past few weeks, even with some of the biggest producers. As an example, 'The Saleslady" with Hazel Dawn is quite different in the publicity matter as compared with the story of the film as shown at the theater.

W. V. Newkirk to Manage Palace.

Saginaw, Mich.—Clare Hoffman, of the Palace-Detroit theater, and the new Colonial theater, Detroit, announces the appointment of W. V. Newkirk as manager of the new Palace theater in Saginaw, which will open about April 22nd. Mr. Newkirk has had many years' experience in the theatrical business, having managed theaters in Michigan and Illinois.

By the way, the Detroit Colonial Theater Co., organized to operate the Colonial theater to be built at Woodward and Sibley streets, Detroit, has 20,000 shares, par value $10 each, divided as follows: $40,000 paid in in property; Clare Hoffman, 5,050 shares; Graham Hoffman, 5,050 shares; Mortimer Hoffman, 100 shares; Harry J. Dingeman, 200 shares and Julius L. Krimmel, 100 shares.

"Europe's Reign of Terror."

Detroit, Mich.—Maurice Caplan and Ben Reuben, of Cleveland, and proprietors of the Countess theater, Detroit, have the Michigan rights to the film, "Europe's Reign of Terror," which they are booking in conjunction with the newspapers. This film played at the Lyceum theater several weeks ago in conjunction with the Detroit Free Press to big business.

Notes.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The American Seating Company, Grand Rapids, is building an addition to its foundry costing $5,000.

Detroit, Mich.—Lewis Selznick, of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, was in Detroit March 26 and 27. It is understood that the first-run rights have been contracted for by the Broadway-Strand theater in this city.

Owosso, Mich.—Work has started on the remodeling of a building on Washington street, Owosso, Mich., which will be made into a motion picture theater.

Owosso, Mich.—Architect George J. Bachman, Savoy Theater building, Flint, writes that he is preparing plans for a theater to be erected at Owosso, Mich., for the Strand Theater Co. It will cost $20,000, and will be of brick and terra cotta construction.

Flint, Mich.—Architect George J. Bachman is preparing plans for James Mallery for a moving picture house to cost $10,000, to be erected at 621 South Saginaw street, Flint. There will be a portico over the entire front extending to the curb.

HIS VIEWS OF SUNDAY OPENING.

An Indiana Exhibitor Who Gives No Sabbath Shows.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

LAPORTE, IND.—Laporte is continuing in the throes of whether or not there shall be Sunday opening of the motion picture theaters. Some strange points have developed in the controversy. Petitions are now being circulated asking that the theaters remain open on Sunday. They have been closed. Interviewed, one of the motion picture theater owners said he was not "strong" for the Sunday opening. He said that it brought additional expense and would injure the week day business. It would also antagonize the regular patrons of the show who were against the Sunday opening. He added that if the petitions warranted the Sunday opening, however, that he would open.

IN INDIANA.

Newcastle, Ind.—Frank and Watson have leased a theater building in Newcastle and will open a first class motion picture house.

Indianapolis, Ind.—"Indianapolis yields to no city when it comes to motion picture theaters," says the Indianapolis Times, commenting on the opening of the Lyric in pictures and the rebuilt Crystal. Both houses opened recently. The Lyric is showing the Paramount program.

Greensburg, Ind.—The Williams, a motion picture theater of Greensburg will quit business.

Decatur, Ind.—The Theato of Decatur, has reopened under new management. The Theato has been remodeled. The opening attraction was the World production "Bought.". Prices have been increased.

Michigan City, Ind.—Word has been received in Michigan City of the death of E. J. Stanton, former well known motion picture theater owner of that city. Stanton died in Flint, Mich. Stanton formerly operated the Vaudette in Michigan City. Stanton was the owner of two theaters in Flint, the Royal and the Lyric.

Terre Haute, Ind.—John Grivetti has filed suit against Morris Corzetto at Terre Haute seeking to dissolve a partnership in the moving picture business.

Mishawaka, Ind.—Mishawaka is to have a motion picture made of the civic and commercial life of the city. It will be the property of the business men and will be shown to advertise the city.

Connersville, Ind.—The Lyric theater of Connersville has been sold to J. A. Braden of Marion, Ohio. F. A. Chrismer was the former owner. Some remodeling will be done and the employes are retained.

South Bend, Ind.—The Surprise of South Bend is to go out of existence. The building now occupied by the theater is to be torn down.

Crawfordsville, Ind.—The Wayne of Crawfordsville has changed hands, George Heuson of Renssalaer is the new owner. He purchased the theater from E. E. Randel.

Chattanooga Sunday Shows

Special Benefit Performances Keep Shows Open on March 25—Sheriff Says That Only Charity Shows Are Being Run—Attorney General Whittaker, of Chattanooga, Waiting for Report of Court Decision.

G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—The moving picture theaters of Chattanooga were open on Sunday, March 25, while handling special benefit performances for a charitable organization. These are the only shows which have been operated in Chattanooga for several months on Sunday as the theaters remained closed while the case was before the State Supreme Court to test the validity of the Sunday closing laws.

"As soon as I receive the opinion of the Supreme Court in reference to the operations of picture shows on Sunday I will be ready to announce my plan of action in regard to Sunday shows," said Attorney General Whittaker, when asked if he was going to allow the operation of moving picture theaters on Sunday. Nick Bush, sheriff, said that only shows for benefit of charitable organizations or relief work were being given, and therefore did not conflict with the law. Agitation concerning Sunday shows was started again when Sheriff Bush received an annonymous letter in which a veiled threat was made that ouster proceedings might be invoked if he allowed the shows to run on Sunday in the future.

Vitagraphers Visits.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Miss Naomi Childers and Camillus Kessler of the Vitagraph Company were recently in Chattanooga, Tenn., where they had a long talk with C. E. James of the Signal Mountain properties, concerning the great natural scenery of Signal Mountain. Both were enthusiastic over the beauty of some of the sites, and their adaptability for backgrounds for motion pictures. Miss Childers stated that she was in hopes of being able to take the directors into Signal some mountain scenes around Signal Mountain. The Essanay Company had a crew working in the Signal Mountain district for several months last season.

Two Houses Rechristened.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The management of the Picto theater of Chattanooga recently decided that the name was not in keeping with the fine theater and set about to secure a better title. The new style announced is the "Fine Arts," which undoubtedly has a more artistic air than the former name. The theater is playing Triangle productions and is featuring exceptionally attractive musical programs, which are being directed by S. L. Rothapfel, musical director of the Knickerbocker theater orchestra.

The old Crescent theater, 812 Market street, which is under the same management as the Fine Arts, has also had its appendage changed to read 'The Superba." The latter theater has been showing some very attractive mixed bills and the "Musty Suffer" comedy serials.

New Knickerbocker Opens.

Nashville, Tenn.—The new Knickerbocker theater of Nashville is now open and is playing high class films to big crowds. This latest addition to the Nashville moving picture ranks is an unusually handsome and well-appointed theater. William H. Wassman, head of the concern, is also at the head of the Crystal theater, having operated the old Crystal at Louisville a number of years ago. The theater cost nearly $85,000 and has a seating capacity of 1,200, the gallery seating 500. Triangle and Fox first run pictures will be shown.

ST. LOUIS NEWS LETTER.

By A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis, Mo.

New World Manager.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—George W. Fuller, from the New York office of the World Film, has been made manager of the St. Louis branch, at 3626 Olive street, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of E. W. Dustin. Mr. Fuller has been away from this section of the country for some time, but as he is originally from Illinois it is almost like coming back home to him. W. W. Drum, special representative of the World Corporation, is still in the city looking around.

Rosenberg at Kleine-Edison Convention.

St. Louis, Mo.—Manager I. P. Rosenberg, of the Kleine-Edison exchange, went to Chicago last week to meet George Kleine and the assembled western managers of the corporation. Mr. Rosenberg is very enthusiastic over the record "Musty Suffer" is making. He says the Ritz theater, on Sixth street, just off Olive, which has first run privileges of the comedies, finds the eccentric Watson to be a winner in the comedy line. And to make sure that Rosenberg was not giving us a press story we dropped in and asked Mr. Van, of the Ritz, about it. Mr. Van said, "He didn't tell you half enough. Musty is great!"

Wedding in Film Row.

St. Louis, Mo.—S. W. Hatch, manager of the V-L-S-E exchange, at 3630 Olive street, was married on March 25 to Miss Fredericka Hattas, of East Liberty, O. The ceremony was performed at the home of Rev. John L. Brandt, 4526 Westminster Place, St. Louis. The new Mrs. Hatch is a talented musician and was prominent socially in her home town.

Joker Comedian in St. Louis.

Max Asher, Universal Joker comedian, spent last week in St. Louis, and appeared at several theaters, giving little talks on how Joker comedies are made, and going through the action in the scenes of a film in which he appeared, as it was thrown on the screen of the theater. Mr. Asher was slowly working his way to New York by making stops in cities along the route and appearing in theaters showing Joker comedies. "I've never been to New York," he said, "but I've heard a lot of the town, and I'm going to give it the once over before I'll believe it has anything on California."

Le Baume Reopens.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Le Beaume theater on Cass avenue has been reopened under a new management, and many improvements have been made in the house. Manager Cox says he is going to make the Le Beaume one of the nicest and cleanest little theaters on the north side.

With St. Louis Exchange Men.

Harry E. Strickland, traveling representative for the General exchange, has just got in from a trip in Illinois, Missouri and part of Indiana, and reports things looking up "generally."

Manager Barney Rosenthal, of the Universal exchange, at 2116 Locust street, is getting a lot of attractive advertising matter of the new Universal Circus serial, "Peg O' The Ring." "If a circus serial doesn't win big, I am badly mistaken," says Rosenthal. "There is something about circus life that appeals to everyone, and there is not a young person in the land that will not be interested in it; and the older folks, if they do not want to come out and admit that they are as keen for circus stuff as they were when they were kids, they can use the same old dodge of 'taking little Johnny to the circus.'"

CLEVELAND FILM COMPANIES.

Two New Producing Companies to Begin Film Making.

By Hubert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND, O.—A new film company which will make a specialty of taking motion pictures of weddings, private parties, dances and other social events has just been organized here. It is known as the Brabant Film Company and has a temporary studio at 3068 Euclid avenue.

Captain H. H. Brabant-Holland, formerly with the Pathe Company in France and the Biograph Company of Canada, will be managing director and president of the new company, which is incorporated for $35,000.

W. H. Millikan, real estate dealer, is to be secretary-treasurer. The new studio will make an effort to preserve in motion pictures all important events in Cleveland history as well as make films of social functions.

A group of Cleveland capitalists have just filed an application with the secretary of state for the incorporation of another film company with $2,500,000 capital. David R. Wilkin and Edward C. Daoust, attorneys of this city, and Harry W. Davis, secretary of the Delaware Trust Company, Wilmington, O., are interested in the project.

The construction of a studio in New York and another one here is contemplated, but plans have not been definitely formulated.

PICTURE MEN TO THE RESCUE.

Exhibitor E. M. Stanley and J. Mulholland Save Lives from Burning.

Cleveland, O.—Edward M. Stanley, proprietor of the Ray theater, and John Mulholland, one of his operators, were heroes at a fire which swept the Foster apartments, 1121 Prospect avenue, the night of March 27, costing several lives. Stanley lifted Mulholland on his shoulders so the latter could reach a fire escape, and Mulholland passed a woman and three children down from an upper window into Stanley's arms. Stanley then turned his theater into a temporary hospital for the more than a score of injured men and women.

Melba Theater Again Open.

Cleveland, O.—The Melba theater, Detroit avenue and West 117th street, has just reopened under the management of C. J. Goeppinger. The theater has been remodeled to seat 1,000 persons and the largest Minusa gold fiber screen in the city has been installed. A model heating and ventilating plant has also been put in operation.

B. J. Sawyer Out of the Manhattan.

Cleveland, O.—Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has disposed of his interest in the Manhattan theater, Superior avenue and E. 105th street, and the house is now being operated by the newly organized Manhattan Circuit Company. Triangle and Mutual Masterpieces have been booked.

C. F. Beck Buys Glen Theater.

Cleveland, O.—The Glen theater, St. Clair avenue and E. 93d street, has just been sold by A. Kausek to C. F. Beck, who will operate it. The deal was made through the office of B. D. Steel, American Trust building.

CINCINNATI NEWS LETTER.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

"Peace" Film in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—At least two records, and perhaps more, will be broken by the run of "The Battle Cry of Peace," which started at the Grand Opera house on Monday, April 3, to continue for at least two weeks. The length of the run, as contracted for, and with the possibility of being extended, equals and perhaps exceds that of any other picture at a single house for a consecutive period in Cincinnati, and the prices charged, 25 to 50 cts, have been equalled in this city only by those charged for the same picture in its previous exhibitions, at the Lyric theater and at Music Hall, respectively.

Manager C. E. Holah, in charge of the V-L-S-E interests in this territory, saw that the big downtown house would render the picture accessible to thousands of people who refused to make the trip out to Music Hall, at Twelfth and Elm, where the picture was shown from March 19-25, and he preferred to save most of his publicity ammunition for the downtown run. From the way the picture started off at the Grand, it is safe to say that it will make a high attendance record, and as the two weeks following the initial two weeks of the present engagement are open at the Grand, it is by no means impossible that the run will be continued.

Cincinnati Wants League Convention.

Cincinnati, O.—If work and interest count for what they should, the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is going to land a big convention of Ohio exhibitors for some convenient period during the summer. No date has yet been set for any gathering of the Buckeye moving-picture clans, nor has any place been selected for the usual annual convention, but Cincinnati exhibitors believe that their city should be selected, and they are making an energetic bid for the honor. Exhibitors in most of the cities and towns in the State have been enlisted in support of the plan, and probabilities at this time favor the prediction that the convention will be held in Cincinnati.

Busy Round Local Nest.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager W. T. Howard, in charge of the new Blue Bird office, the latest addition to the imposing number of exchanges in Cincinnati, inaugurated his work shortly after taking charge by a highly successful private exhibition of "The Strength of the Weak," with a number of exhibitors in and around Cincinnati as his guests. The picture made a decidedly favorable impression, and a number of good houses have already booked it, including those of J. V. Broomhall of Hamilton, O., and H. V. Spohr of Lexington, Ky.

New Alhambra Reopened.

Dayton, O.—The New Alhambra of Dayton has been completely overhauled and the management now offers to the public one of the prettiest and most modern houses in the city. Immediately following the completion of the remodeling work, and as a sort of opening offering, the Lasky-Paramount feature, "The Secret Sin," showing Blanche Sweet in a dual role, was presented, pulling big houses.

New West Virginia House.

Huntington, W. Va.—The Orpheum theter of Huntington opened on March 15 with a large and enthusiastic attendance. The beauty and size of the house and the merits of the program shown had about equal parts in the approval of the public, according to Manager C. C. Hite, Cincinnati manager for the Triangle, who attended to see the first showing of Triangle pictures in the house.

Operators in Louisville

Strand Theater Subjected to Picket Campaign by Operators' Union—Two Unruly Men Had Been Discharged—Manager Says Theater Is Willing to Have Union Men, But Not These Two—Other Unions Stand by House.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Stark Bldg., Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Trouble between the management of the Strand Theater Co., Masonic building, and the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 163, growing out of the dismissal of two union operators, resulted in the union starting a picket campaign against the theater. Workers have been stationed about the theater distributing cards in an effort to turn people from the shows. Night Chief of Police Ridge refused a request of the management to arrest those distributing the cards, stating that the union was within its rights so long as the pickets caused no disturbance and remained off the property line of the theater.

Statement from the Union.

The men discharged are C. L. Snedeker and E. S. Carpenter, who have been operating the picture machines since the theater was opened, three months ago. Speaking for these men, Virgil Winters, assistant business agent for the union, said: "The management of the theater requested one of the operators to put up signs outside of the place while the other ran the machine. Both refused, as the rules of the union do not permit operators to do anything but the operation and maintenance of the machine, whereupon they were discharged.

"The union wage is $22.50 a week and the management put in $10 men in their places. We endeavored to obtain a peaceful settlement of the matter with Manager McRae, who refused to meet us and threatened to have us all arrested. The matter will be taken up by the Building Trades Council, but we shall not countenance any violence or disturbance whatsoever."

The Manager's Statement.

R. V. McRae, manager of the Strand theater, said: "We were unable to do anything at all with these men. They did just as they pleased and caused us no end of trouble. We were paying them for eight hours' work a day and taking only four hours of their time. If we asked one of them to stay a while longer at night they would refuse point blank, walk away, and leave us in the lurch. Then the union called out E. S. Carpenter. We were willing to have union men, but not these two any longer.

"The musicians, stage hands, and similar employes of the theater are all union men, and the best of feeling exists between them and us. It is merely a question of our refusing to allow the union to force us to employ men whom we cannot control."

What Musicians Think.

E. J. Elliott, state officer of the Federation of Musicians, who is a member of the orchestra at the Strand, said: "The charge that this theater is unfair to organized labor is absolutely untrue, for the musicians, stage hands and other employes are union men. Our union has no part in the controversy. It is a personal matter between the management and the operators. The musicians will stay right here."

LOUISVILLE COUNCILMAN WANTS LOCAL CENSORS

Councilman Dolan Is at Work on Ordinance to Create Board—Names Films.

Louisville, Ky.—Councilman Thomas J. Dolan is fathering a movement looking to the preparation of an ordinance creating a censorship board of moving picture films in Louisville. He stated that he had interested himself in the matter at the solicitation of the Catholic Federation, the Men's Federation and other local organizations, which had represented to him that several films had been shown here recently that contained elements of danger for young people. No ordinance has been prepared, but Mr. Dolan has written to other cities for copies of their censorship regulations, and has discussed the advisability of shaping similar legislation with Acting Mayor J. William Miller.

Some Recent Risque Films.

Before his conference with Mr. Miller, Councilman Dolan discussed the object of his visit informally in the ante-room. Outlining the possible need of better regulations for Louisville, Mr. Dolan asserted that several films on which flitted briefly figures of women wearing little or no clothing had been criticized before him. "One was called 'Born of the People,'" said Mr. Dolan. "Then there was another entitled 'Inspiration.' That one got by me." Some of Mr. Dolan's hearers thought they detected a note of sadness as he described in detail the posing of the artist's model in "Inspiration," which "had gotten by him." Mr. Dolan admitted that if he had seen this film he would be in a better position to pass upon it. He enumerated other pictures that he had viewed and could discuss from personal observation.

LEXINGTON FEELS NO NEED OF SPECIAL CENSORSHIP

Corporation Counsel Thinks City's Police Power Can Protect Show Patrons—Each a Censor.

Lexington, Ky.—That the citizens of Lexington, Ky., are amply protected under the present laws from improper moving pictures is the opinion of the city officials, according to expressions made after the matter was brought up in a meeting of the City Commissioners. There have been a number of petitions presented to the board urging that an ordinance be drafted establishing a board of censorship. Corporation Counsel James B. Denny delivered a verbal opinion before the board, in which he said that the city already had ordinance No. 730, which was sufficent to cope with the situation and that he did not think that any further measures were necessary.

The present ordinance leaves the decision in cases of objectionable shows to the Commissioner of Public Safety and the Chief of Police, and the commissioners are empowered to revoke the license of any exhibitor who does not comply with orders concerning the showing of such films. Practically all of the commissioners expressed themselves as satisfied with the present method of censorship. Mr. Denny stated that he did not believe the commissioners had the legal right to delegate this exercise of one of the police powers of the city to other persons.

Commissioner Land said that he had always been ready to investigate any picture about which complaints were made to him, and that in some case he had so investigated. He said that all or any of the people who believed in stricter censorship could appoint themselves censors and whenever they saw an objectionable picture they could confer with him or the Chief of Police.

New Kansas City Regent

Fine New Theater Opened Its Doors on Saturday, March 25—Shows Many Evidences of Exhibitor Frank L. Newman's Long Experience—Has Seats for 650 Persons—Staff That Will Help Manager Newman.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The new Regent theater, Twelfth street near Walnut, opened its doors March 25, and "turned 'em away." Frank L. Newman, who has made so fine a success of his Royal on Main street, has proved his good judgment again by placing a beautiful playhouse running the highest class of pictures, in that location. Sunday it rained all day—and the crowds continued.

The new house has nearly every conceivable improvement, and is the net result of Mr. Newman's long experience. It seats 650; has a Kimball concert pipe and echo organ, ladies' rest room, men's smoking room, free telephones, drinking fountains with cooled filtered water, elaborate ventilating facilities, and projecting equipment that is superb. The screen is merely plastered wall; it has no glare, and seems to answer well.

The theater is being operated on the same high plane as the Royal, with a 10-piece orchestra in charge of Bert Lewis, whose name means much in that connection in Kansas City. John H. Morgan, who has been with Mr. Newman several years, had charge of the electrical equipment and installation, and is chief operator for both theaters. Geo. I. Nimmer, formerly with picture houses at Los Angeles, is house manager of the Regent. It has started with Metro and V-L-S-E features.

PUBLICITY MEN AT WICHITA.

"Bluebird Warblings," "Big Clansman," "Universal Weekly," in Evidence.

Kansas City, Mo.—The publicity men of the film exchanges were busy members of the convention at Wichita, and the exhibitors took home new ideals of liveliness in getting before the public. This may be a new profession, but it was prominently represented there, with L. B. Balsley of the Kansas City Feature Film, L. J. Scott of the V-L-S-E, and George Bowles of the Universal and Blue Bird. Scott and Bowles, who issue periodicals from their exchanges, issued specials at the convention which made a great hit with the visitors—and were carried home.

Mr. Bowles had two "cracks" at the special feature with editions of the Universal Weekly, and two editions, a noon and a "final" of a joke-sheet called the "Bluebird Warblings." He had commissioned a young man to get advertising for the "Warblings"; when the copy was turned in, it was discovered that most of the advertising space was taken by film exchanges' The competitors paid for the house organ.

Mr. Scott issued two editions, one each day, of the "Big 4 Clansman," one containing the official program the morning of the first day, and another of six pages which was distributed at the banquet the second day. This latter contained real news of the convention, many sprightly bits that add much to the gayety of the last hours.

NEEDS A PICTURE SHOW.

Standard Oil Village to be Made Pleasant Place.

Sugar Creek, Mo.—The Standard Oil Company, it is said, is about to establish a moving picture show at Sugar Creek, an industrial community built by the company around its refinery and storage plant four miles from Independence, Mo. The community is almost wholly managed by the school board, the school district being sandwiched in between sections of the Kansas City school district. The community has recently banished saloons, and is improving markedly. The company is, it is said, bending every effort to make the town attractive to its men, and a place where they will be glad to bring up their children. The first constructive steps towards improving the community life of the present movement is the bringing of a picture show. Brace Murdock, who has been associated with Grubel Brothers, of Kansas City, Kan., is now going over the matter with the officials of Sugar Creek. The community is isolated, being a mile from street car service, but there are more than 200 families and more than 100 school children.

With Kansas City Exchange Men.

The Fox Film Corporation offices in the Ozark have been brightened up by the addition of a new carpet, and beautiful chairs and a table in a reception room. Magazines invite the attention of the visitor and a very pleasant effect is made.

H. G. Gill, manager of the Associated Film Service, reports that he already has three weeks solid booking for the Mutt and Jeff cartoon series, and these pictures are not to be released here until the first of April.

A recent visitor to several of the Kansas City exchange offices was Romaine Fielding, well-known Lubin actor, who has been spending several days with friends in Kansas City.

The Pathescope, Mid-West Co., Inc., an organization for handling motion picture machines for schools, Sunday schools and similar organizations, has recently opened a Kansas City office at 402 Bonfils Bldg., under the management of H. B. Kelly.

After a five months' journey in Cuba, Costa Rica, on the Panama Canal zone and parts of the United States, L. B. Flintom, son of A. D. Flintom president of the Kansas City Feature Film Co., has returned home. Young Flintom was with E. A. Salisbury, famous for his wild-life pictures, who has a party in that country for gathering such material. Along with the expedition was Rex Beach, famous novelist, who was getting material for his writings. "L. B.," as he is known in the Kansas City office, is now working under his father.

The Victor's New Owners.

Kansas City, Kan.—T. C. Wynn and E. L. Evans have formed the company of Wynn & Evans, and on Monday, March 20, took charge of their recent purchase, the Victor theater, Kansas City, Kan. J. F. Rose, formerly proprietor, has retired from the business. Mr. Wynn was known for 15 years as Bontillo, on the circus and carnival circuits with an aerial act. Miss Evans was known as LaBella Celeta, a classical dancer. They are retiring from the road work, settling down with a permanent business. They will continue vaudeville with Mutual features, using fill-in features of the New Film Corporation, and others. The price will continue 5 cents. They probably will do some remodeling this summer, but without closing the theater.

May Build New Emerald Theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—Plans are being considered for the building of a new home for the Emerald theater, now at Thirty-sixth street and Prospect avenue, Kansas City, Mo. The new one will be located in the same neighborhood, and will seat at least 800, against the 510 capacity of the present Emerald. I. H. Hopkins is chief owner, Joe Silverman, who is interested in the Prospect and the Murray, having recently taken a part interest in the Emerald. The admission is 10 cents, it being the southernmost 10-cent house on Prospect, the two houses farther south being 5-cent places. C. L. Hickman is manager.

Gate City Feature Film Corp.

Kansas City, Mo.—The firm of Martin & Estes has dissolved, and from it has appeared the Gate City Feature Film Corporation, handling the pictures of the old company, and probably to greatly expand its operation. H. O. Martin is still in control, E. E. Burdick, formerly with Mr. Martin, being a member of the new corporation, and L. A. Ganaha joining the enterprise. Mr. Ganaha for two years had picture houses at San Diego and Los Angeles, Calif. Mr. Martin's company has handled "The Spoilers" and "The Christian" for several years in a western district, and old customers are still asking for them again.

H. L. Orear Promoted.

H. L. Orear, formerly assistant manager of the Kansas City office of the General Film Co., has been promoted to the managership of the Cincinnati office of the same company. Mr. Orear has been in the Kansas City headquarters for the past two years, coming here from St. Louis, where he was located four years, all the time being with the General Co. John W. Hicks, Jr., formerly a traveler out of the Kansas City office, has been appointed in Mr. Orear's place. At present Mr. Hicks is confined to the hospital with a severe case of tonsilitis. Friends of Mr. Orear will be very glad to hear of his advancement, as he is one of the most popular exchange men in this territory.

New Theaters Hereabouts.

Salina, Kan.—H. J. Thacher was in Kansas City last week from Salina, Kan., where he will open his new Strand about May 1.

Iowa City, Ia.—W. M. McKinzie, formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y., was in Kansas City recently, arranging service for the Englert theater at Iowa City, Iowa, on which he has taken a long lease. W. H. Englert, owner of the house, is in ill health. Mr. McKinzie is said by picture men to have a fine opportunity here.

Kansas City, Mo.—Harry Myers, formerly in the advertising and printing business at St. Joseph, Mo., has leased the Barrymore theater at Thirty-ninth and Summit streets. Mr. Myers was recently married.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Barrymore, 39th and Summit street, Kansas City, recently reopened under the management of Harry Meyers, who redecorated it and made other improvements. The former owners are Gilbert Halzberg and C. H. Green.

Garnett, Kan.—J. P. Kelly, owner of the People's theater in Garnett, has sold his interest in that house to F. C. Nelson. Mr. Kelly purchased the Majestic, at Osawatomie, Kan., from R. R. Root, immediately following the sale of his Garnett house.

Arkansas City, Kan.—Roy Buford has recently purchased the Strand theater at Arkansas City. Mr. Buford is the owner of the Rex theater at the same time, and now has a corner on the theaters here.

Carl Junction, Mo.—Business conditions in the mining district of Missouri have proved such a money producer that the Gem theater, at Carl Junction, after being closed for two years, is soon to be reopened by E. G. Nelson.

Nevada, Mo.—This place will soon be the home of a new moving picture house, as J. E. Haggard, of that place, has plans already prepared for the construction of such an edifice.

DOCTOR GETS BIG CONTRACT.

Dr. Haiselden, Defective Baby Expert, to Act for Pictures.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Benjamin Friedman manager of the Western Kriterion Film company and Benjamin Ross, manager of the Twin City Film Rental company, both of Minneapolis, have paid $25,000 to Dr. Harry J. Haiselden of Chicago, the physician who became famous the country over for his refusal to save the life of Baby Bollinger, a defective, by performing a minor operation. He will appear for the picture men a year. The doctor will appear in productions, now being written for him by special scenariomen, which will disclose him at work in his hospital and give him an opportunity to spread his ideas on making the human race perfect physically and mentally. The play will be in five reels. Beside his screen work the doctor will deliver a number of lectures on the defective baby problem under the auspices of the men who have agreed to exploit his convictions on the film. Incidentally he will be asked to come to the convention in the city May 2 to 5.

Northfield, Minn., to Supervise Films.

Northfield, Minn.—Owing to the fact that authorities of St. Olaf and Carleton colleges in this city have objected to several films recently shown here, the council has agreed to have at least one of their number censor every photoplay offered at local theaters.

Minneapolis Censors Board Meeting.

Minneapolis, Minn.—One of the most important conferences on motion picture censorship ever held in Minneapolis took place at Dayton's tea rooms several days ago when Mayor Wallace G. Nye was the guest of the citizens' censorship board. The Mayor was so pleased with the attitude of the board that he agreed to aid them in their general campaign against what was termed improper films. He even offered suggestions for the betterment of the censor service. He assured the board he would abide by its decisions when within reason. He advised that at least more than five members be present to pass on films.

Five standards have been adopted for the guidance of the censors. Violation of any one of them is held sufficient evidence against the film and it is barred. The standards are: drunkenness, cruelty, indecency, lawlessness and race predjudice. Under the present only a small number of the films shown are censored. Censorship is not resorted to unless complaint has been made to the Mayor by a citizen or he considers press or other reports concerning a picture are such as to warrant action. Cooperation of the citizens in reporting "improper" films is the guiding genius for the censors' board.

Theater Changes and Business Notes.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Minneapolis' picture colony is dusting up in preparation for the expected visit of Carl Laemmle. He is coming to confer with Fred S. Meyer, his Minneapolis manager.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Twin City Film Rental Company has sold out to the Independent Film corporation.

Hampden, N. D.—Busnahan Brothers, who own the theater at Hampden, N. D., write in that they have spent a good roll on improvements.

Winona, Minn.—The B-B Film Producing Company of Winona, Minn., has hired H. L. Craig, formerly with the General Film, to do the advance work in the Dakotas for "The Battles of a Nation." Mr. Craig also is handling "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

St. Paul, Minn.—Robert E. Seng, with a permit to build a theater at 502 Rice street, has added another to the already long list of picture houses in the city.

Judge Had Seen Picture

In Omaha, Nebraska, Where There Is an Anti-Race Hatred Law Aimed at "The Birth of a Nation," Judge Foster Upholds Manager Joy When Arrested for Bringing Picture Back to the Town.

Special to Moving Picture World by Midwest News Service.

OMAHA, Neb.—"The Birth of a Nation" was not stopped on its return show at the Brandeis theater. Police Judge Foster decided it did not tend to incite race hatred and therefore did not violate a new city ordinance.

When the film was here a few months ago the council passed an anti-race hatred law. It did not become effective in time to test its powers on the Griffith picture. With the second engagement at the Brandeis, Rev. John Albert Williams, colored, wrote in protest to the council. The council ordered the police to stop the show. The theater management sought to enjoin the city officials from interfering with the film. Judge Leslie refused this injunction because it would interfere with the proper exercise of police power. The technical arrest of Manager Joy Sutphen of the Brandeis followed. Judge Foster who had seen the film four or five times upheld the picture show men.

Ban on Children Lifted.

Omaha, Neb.—City officials have lifted the ban on children under twelve years of age and they may now attend moving picture shows. Seven exhibitors were fined $25 and costs for violating the order but the fines were suspended.

New Woodmen Picture Ready.

Omaha, Neb.—"Are You a Chopper?" a six reel production—the first of new Tourtenelle Moving Picture Company's of Omaha, has been completed. Five reels are devoted to a comedy-drama relating to the work of the Woodmen of the World and the sixth is out-and-out exploitation of that society. Productions are in charge of A. Durran, formerly with the Pathe company.

Osmond, Neb.—F. H. Dickes has purchased the moving picture show here.

Eddyville, Neb.—I. B. Connor sold his moving picture show to J. K. Guyton.

Gering, Neb.—Construction of a new moving picture theater for Manager Armbus of the Pastime soon will be started.

IN IOWA.

Exhibitor Waterhouse Gets By.

CHARLES CITY, Ia.—A Sunday passed without the arrest of William Waterhouse, manager of the Hildreth theater for violating the Sunday labor law.

Trustees of the Congregational church declined to permit a meeting to be held there to discuss the Sunday show situation.

License Fees in Mason City.

Mason City, Ia.—The city council has passed an ordinance fixing moving picture theater licenses at $50 to $200 a year.

Iowa Theater Changes.

Ft. Dodge, Ia.—L. D. Kenworthy and C. M. Kellogg of Mason City have opened the Lyric theater in the Crawford block here.

Victor, Ia.—Dr. H. W. Anger, dentist, has let the contract for a new business and theater building to cost $7,000. It will play pictures and road shows.

Kensette, Ia.—The Viking theater has been opened.

Sioux City, Ia.—St. Elmo Bateman has been made manager of the Plaza theater at 316 Pierce street.

Lyle, Ia.—Arthur Hildebrand has opened the Ideal theater here.

New Hampton, Ia.—The members of the fire department here will construct an opera house.

DeWitt, Ia.—J. W. Lee sold the Electric theater to George Duvene of Belle Plaine.

Rockwell City, Ia.—Manager Meholin will have no competition for his handsome new Empress theater. He bought the Magic theater and closed it.

Anita, Ia.—George Schwenneker has purchased a half interest in the moving picture theater here from his brother, W. C. Schwenneker.

Des Moines, Ia.—P. I. Gay who was manager of the Alamo theater at Sixth and College avenues is now manager at the Strand theater on Eighth street, succeeding Hugh Bennett.

Pleasantville, Ia.—Manager Shadel will erect a moving picture theater to replace the Travis theater recently destroyed by fire.

Iowa City, Ia.—William M. McKenzie of Brooklyn, N. Y., has leased the Englert theater from W. H. Englert.

Dike, Ia.—Robert Donley has purchased the lease on the opera house from G. C. Mackie.

Maquoketa, Ia.—A. L. Cook has had Clausen & Kruse draw plans for a two-story 70 x 120, tapestry brick and terra cotta moving picture theater and store building to cost $20,000. It will seat 514 on the ground floor.

Des Moines, Ia.—W. A. Biernalzi has taken over the Family theater on Locust street between Fifth and Sixth. It will show a Univerasl program at five cents.

Indianaola, Ia.—Tharp & Walker have opened the remodeled Lyric theater. It is 24 feet longer, has better ventilation and more waiting room. A four piece orchestra will be used four nights a week. The show has started "The Strange Case of Mary Page." Paramount service is used three days a week.

Coon Rapids, Ia.—Dan Bogue is now assisting Chalon Smith in the management of the Lyric theater.

IN THE DAKOTAS.

Dakota Changes, etc.

KRAMER, N. D.—J. H. Kundert contemplates remodeling his hall into a theater.

Aberdeen, S. D.—McCarthy Bros. have named their new theater here the Rialto. It was known as the Idle Hour.

Burlington, N. D.—A. M. Brown, who operates moving picture houses at Kenmare, Carpio and Donnybrook, has taken over the photoplay theater here. Prices have been fixed at ten and twenty cents.

Binford, N. D.—A moving picture theater has been opened here.

Burlington, N. D.—A. M. Brown has secured control of the moving picture theater.

Langdon, N. D.—The commercial club contemplates purchasing and remodeling the opera house.

Wahpeton, N. D.—Arthur Snyder of New York city has been making arrangements to open a moving picture theater here.

Minnewaukan, N. D.—The theater in the Cubison building was destroyed by fire.

Mobridge, S. D.—P. C. Morrison, an attorney, has been making arrangements to erect a brick theater here.

Fire in New Orleans

United States Auditorium Takes Fire From Burning House and Is Destroyed—Owned by W. Tebault, Jr.—Hazardous Rescue of a Film—One Other Tebault House Damaged—Suspect Incendiarism.

By George Cheney, New Orleans Corerspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Fire which started early on the morning of March 24 totally destroyed the United States Auditorium, 3311-3317 Magazine street, a large suburban motion picture house owned by W. Tebault, Jr., and rapidly spread along the path of a dozen other buildings to the United States theater, another Tebault house, at 3312-3314 Magazine street, doing damage here to the extent of $600. The Auditorium, valued at $21,000, and insured for $7,000, was the second structure of more than a dozen to go. During the height of the fire in this theater Mr. W. Tebault, Jr., rushed into the burning building and managed to save the film that had formed the previous evening's bill, a Fox feature, "The Fighting Blood." Mr. Tebault's brash stunt aroused the admiration of the crowd which had gathered. With the film in his hands, he endeavored to save a few other effects of the theater, but was driven back by the intense heat of the flames.

The dwelling at 3319 Magazine street, occupied by Mr. Tebault as a residence, and valued at $4,000, was totally destroyed. Mr. Tebault's effects, including furniture, motion picture supplies, etc., valued at $1,000, were also destroyed. It is probable that the theaters will all be rebuilt, although Mr. Tebault was the heaviest loser in the fire, which devastated almost an entire city block.

The first was spectacular in the extreme, and every piece of fire-fighting apparatus was called out. The flames could be seen for a mile. A score of families were driven from their homes half-clad. Because of the total destruction of the building in which the fire started, a building under course of construction, it could not be learned how the fire began, although the police conducted a rigid investigation. The police hinted at incendiarism, and the fire marshal's office is endeavoring to ascertain the cause.

LAKE CHARLES HOUSE SOLD.

Josiah Pearce & Sons Out of Lake Charles—New Owner and Manager.

Lake Charles, La.—Josiah Pearce & Sons, of New Orleans, have sold their three local houses to Edgar Miller and Arthur G. Wachsen. Bert Miller has been named manager in Lake Charles for the new owners. J. E. Clark, manager for the Pearces in Lake Charles, returns to New Orleans to assume charge of several Pearce houses in the Crescent City. The sale is one of the most important in Louisiana picture circles for years, since it involves three high class houses, the Arcade, the Iris and the Dreamland theaters, and absolute control of Lake Charles, one of the largest cities in Northern Louisiana.

NEW ORLEANS FILM BUSINESS.

List of Local Exchanges, Supply Companies and Producers.

For the benefit of Dave Lyons, exhibitor of Crowley, La., we give herewith the full list of New Orleans exchanges, supply companies and producing companies:

Exchanges.

Pickwick Film Co., Incorporated, 241 Broadway.

New Paramount Exchange Manager.

New Orleans, La.—C. E. Tandy, general manager of the Southern Paramount Pictures Company, came to New Orleans this week, and no sooner had this dynamic film gentleman stepped off the train than things began to happen. In the first place, Mr. Tandy announced a new manager for the New Orleans office, H. F. Wilkes, whose title, although not his official title around the Atlanta office of Paramount has been "business handy man." Mr. Wilkes comes to temporarily take charge of the New Orleans office of Paramount, principally because the whereabouts of one R. S. Verleye, the former manager, are unknown. Verleye "deserted the ship" as it were. Another announcement of interest that Mr. Tandy makes is that the S. A. Lynch Enterprises has opened a head office at Asheville, N. C., in charge of Fred. Kent. This is a financial office, as it were, and by this new arrangement, the health resort of Asheville is richer by a couple of hundred or thousand or more.

New Suburban Theater.

New Orleans, La.—While the bigger exhibitors are falling over one another with announcements of new photoplay houses for New Orleans, those in the suburbs have not been inactive in the building line. The latest theater in the suburban districts will open on April 1. It is the old Dumaine No. 2 in North Hagan Avenue, but has been rehabilitated thoroughly, and will have a new name in time for opening night. L. N. Wooters, some metropolitan newspaper man, will be manager, and the Miller Music Company, 709 Canal street, are the owners. Mr. Wooters, who at one time managed the Christensen School of Rag Time in Cincinnati, says that music will be a special feature at his new house.

Manager Ehrlich, Host.

New Orleans, La.—Nat Ehrlich, general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation's new exchange, at 340-42 Carondelet street, is all puffed up over the fact that he has one of the prettiest exchanges in the city, and one of the most commodious. This week he has played host to most every exchange manager in the Crescent City, who have called on him to pay homage to New Orleans' newest exchange and oldest manager. In explanation of this last statement, let it be said that Mr. Ehrlich was the very first exchange manager in New Orleans. At different times he was connected with the General and Mutual offices in this city.

Fidelity Opens Local Office.

New Orleans, La.—The Fidelity Film Company, Inc., of Texas, with A. C. Bernard as general manager, has opened a New Orleans office at 206 Baronne street. The company's specialty, as announced by Mr. Bernard, is the purchasing of state rights on features for Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma. J. D. Fulton has been named traveling representative for the company, which has invaded the New Orleans field, and at present is in North Louisiana.

Crescent Theater Closes.

New Orleans, La.—The Crescent theater in New Orleans, which for several months has been operated by W. F. Bossner on an all-motion-picture policy with Paramount films, was closed on March 10, by "Tom" Campbell, local representative of the K. and E. interests. The Crescent was not a paying proposition financially, Klaw & Erlanger alleged.

New Orleans Notes.

Nat Sobel, owner of the Washington theater, now entertains his friends in a new Hudson car he bought recently.

The familiar United Program Film Service sign in Common street is no more, for Paul L. Ford announced lately that he had closed up the New Orleans office of this concern. He said, however, that the Memphis and Atlanta offices would be operated as formerly.

New Orleans, La.—The Fichtenberg enterprises have announced several changes of policy. Their Plaza theater, which pioneered one year ago in staying open until three o'clock in the morning, but which lately has been closed at regular hours, now will remain open until two A. M. Their Alamo theater, long a ten-cent house, now is being operated on a five-cent policy, with the exception Sundays.

Sam Dembow, Jr., Southern Division manager for Fox Film, has left for Atlanta; from there he will go to New York City, while the absence of C. B. Gondolfi makes the local Fox lair a trifle lonesome this week.

R. E. Barron, New Orleans manager of Fox, went down in the country for a six days' visit. His net results on the trip were seven contracts.

E. M. Clark, of the Bigger Grand, Baton Rouge, La., and one of the "bigger" exhibitors of the state capital, was on Exchange Row this week purchasing film for his house.

Another visitor who made a ripple on the Row was L. H. Dunn, who virtually controls the moving picture situation in Hammond, La.

Some brand new wrinkles have been inaugurated at the Triangle exchange. A cleaning machine has been put in and every foot of film before it goes out is made as fresh as the day it left the laboratory.

The Magic City theater, Bogalusa, La., lately has been equipped with new opera chairs and other conveniences which makes it one of the prettiest houses in Louisiana's wonder city.

The Colonial theater, a suburban house of New Orleans, was sold at public auction on March 23. It is understood the new owners will reopen the show.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Harry Cassidy Lively Contract Getter.

DENVER, COLO.—Hary Cassidy, road man for the Mutual Film Corporation, recently completed a trip through the southern part of the Denver territory and booked the new Chaplin-Mutual films in every town from Colorado Springs to Albuquerque.

In Colorado Springs he wrote the biggest moving picture contract in the history of the town. J. M. McMahon of the Pike theater had photographs taken of himself and Cassidy signing up for the Chaplin releases and he is using these in advertising the coming of the first Mutual-Chaplin picture.

Denver is said to rank second in the list of 68 Mutual offices in the number of Chaplin contracts already closed.

R. C. Ryan with World Film.

Denver, Colo.—By the addition of R. C. Ryan to its road force the World Film gains the distinction of having one of the biggest staffs of traveling salesmen in the Denver territory. John Drum and George W. Hinton are the other road men.

Among other changes in the World exchange, Manager Charles R. Gilmour announces the addition of Jas. B. Spratt, a Junior at Cornell University, to his shipping room staff.

Milton Cohn Rearranging Circuits.

Denver, Colo.—John W. Scott, road man for the Notable Film, which handles all of the Paramount releases in the Western states, has left Denver for a complete tour of the Rocky Mountain region. He is rearranging the Paramount circuits in preparation for the installation of the new system that will follow the receipt by the Denver office of two copies of each Paramount release.

Plans for an adlitional copy of each picture were completed during the visit here of Louis Marcus, president of the Notable Company. Marcus has returned to Salt Lake, leaving the matter of rearranging the Denver circuits in the hands of Milton Cohn, local exchange manager. It is under instruction of the latter that Scott has gone on the road. During his trip he will prosecute a campaign to increase the business of the local office by getting exhibitors to book three features a week instead of two. With two copies of the new releases it will be possible to accommodate patrons with current pictures and fill in the third date each week with an older subject.

Club Luncheon Draws Crowd.

Denver, Colo.—Joe Howard, who is now starring in vaudeville, but was one time a leading factor in the moving picture industry, was the guest of honor at the last weekly luncheon of the Rocky Mountain Screen club at the Savoy Hotel. He made a short speech in which he reviewed his former connection with the film game, commented on the great advancement made in the industry and predicted a more wonderful future.

A large crowd turned out for the luncheon and the fear that the novelty of a Screen Club would soon die out seems to be a thing of the past.

The athletic committee reported that progress was being made in the organization of a baseball team to represent the club in local amateur and semi-pro circles and it is expected that the lineup will be announced soon. Of the exchange managers in Denver W. H. Cree of the General Film is being touted as the Ty Cobb of the Screen Club team.

Florence Reed has been the whole show last week in town. She appeared in person, with a stock company.

Paris, Texas, Theaters Go.

All Theaters in Paris, Texas, Destroyed When Business Section of City Burns—Grand, Lyric, Queen, Princess and Gem Are Temporarily No More—Other Houses Will Quickly Take Their Places.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PARIS, TEX.—On the night of March 22 a fire broke out in Paris, Texas, as reported in all the papers, that very nearly wiped out the entire city. The business section was swept away completely and deep inroads made into the residence section. The total loss is estimated to be in the millions.

Every theater in the city was in the burned section and went to the ground. These were the Grand, Lyric and Queen under the control of C. J. Musselman; the Princess, managed by J. H. Snively, and A. R. Patterson's Gem. A peculiar feature of the fire, however, was the fact that not a foot of film was lost. Several Dallas exchangemen remarked on this fact and expressed deep gratitude to the theater men for their protection of the films.

Mr. Musselman immediately began to erect a temporary structure to use until the city is rehabilitated, and it is understood that the other exhibitors will reconstruct their houses as soon as possible. The city is undaunted and is rising Phoenix-like out of the ruins.

WILL TRY THE BOYCOTT.

Opponents of Sunday Shows Hold Meetings and Advocate Boycott.

Fort Worth, Texas.—The latest move of the anti-Sunday shows element in Fort Worth, Texas, is to invoke the boycott. Meetings were held in several churches Sunday, March 26, and resolutions passed declaring a boycott on those houses keeping open on Sunday.

One result bids fair to come from the fight in Fort Worth, and that is the engendering of a strong spirit of co-operation between exhibitors. The sentiment in this section in this respect is deplorable. The writer has found practically all exhibitors to be men of honor and high principle, but between themselves the opposite feeling seems to exist. Backcapping and suspicion are expressed on every turn. Just let one exhibitor get a little ahead of the rest in a community and he is suspected of every possible crime in the commercial category. And yet if they could but understand each other they would find that dishonorable dealings are so few as to be nil.

If it would result in a closer spirit of co-operation, it would pay the exhibitors in the long run; for the statute books may be cluttered up with all manner of adverse legislation. They would then get together and their combined weight would clarify the atmosphere

Supply House Consolidation.

Dallas, Texas.—Under the name Southern Theater Equipment Company, a rather important consolidation of supply interests has been formed. The new company is practically the supply department of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, separated entirely from the old company. Offices and warerooms will be maintained in New Orleans, Dallas, Atlanta and Memphis.

The Dallas branch is located at 1817 Main street, in the building recently reconstructed for J. D. Wheelan. The business of the R. D. Thrash Film Company will be consolidated with the Southern and the office will be in charge of R. D. Thrash, assisted by Norman Bucklin, formerly manager of the supply department of the Consolidated.

Local Pictures Shown.

Two sets of pictures of local interest have been made and exhibited in Texas recently, one at Port Arthur and the other at Dallas. The former was a drama, "Won From the Flames," acted by local talent under the sponsorship of J. C. Clemmons of the Elks theater, Port Arthur. The only professional in the bunch was Hugh V. Jamieson, formerly with Edison, who officiated with the camera.

The East Dallas Christian Church Sunday school posed before the Fitzhugh Film company's camera on Sunday March 19, and a couple of hundred feet of very creditable film was made, which were exhibited in the Queen theater the last of the same week. Naturally, Manager John D. DeStefano of the Queen had a job taking care of the crowds who wanted to see themselves and their friends on the screen.

Texas Trade Miscellany.

Paris, Texas.—Messrs. T. C. Harry and W. E. Macarton went to Paris March 23 and made a couple of hundred feet of pictures of the big fire. These two gentlemen are among those interested in the formation of a producing company in Dallas, and it was in the interests of this company that the pictures were made. They will be shown on a news weekly, it is presumed.

Dallas, Texas.—J. R. McIlheran, special manager for Mutual Masterpictures, and Mrs. McIlheran are rejoicing over the arrival of a daughter in their home on March 22. This is the first addition to the family, and mother and daughter are doing well.

Austin, Texas.—J. C. Stevens is overhauling the Bell airdome at Austin preparatory to the summer's run.

Wichita Falls, Texas.—W. E. Perkins has purchased a 1916 Motiograph for use in the Methodist church at that place, according to Barnett, the Dallas Motiograph agent.

Roxton, Texas.—The Grand theater, managed by R. L. Bryant, has purchased a 1916 Motiograph.

Brenham, Texas.—The Rex theater has been sold by D. C. Baker to W. A. Stucker.

Victoria, Texas.—Peter Jecker of the Electric theater, has a pet parrot which he wants to hire out to some city as a censor. He says the parrot can talk just as much and say as little as the average censor and at the same time it has just about as much judgment of pictures.

Fredericksburg, Texas.—R. Solomon has opened the Elite theater, a new house.

Cleburne, Texas, has a new theater for negroes, opened by Ed Helms, under the name of the Joy.

Houston, Texas.—The Globe theater has been bought by I. Krandel from Wicks & Co. Mr. Krandel also controls the Belle.

Houston, Texas.—Taking advantage of some slight damage done by a fire in the vicinity of their Pastime theater, Schulman & Sons will completely remodel the lobby of the theater.

Houston, Texas.—William Gueringer of the Fichtenberg Enterprises, headquarters at New Orleans, paid a business visit to the company's Isis theater in Houston, week of March 20. The Isis is under the management of Harry Van Denmark, for the Fichtenbergs.

McAlester, Okla. — The Yale-Majestic theater is being completely remodeled. A new heating plant, several hundred additional seats and more commodious dressing rooms are some of the improvements being made in this house.

Dallas, Texas.—R. A. Carter, one time house manager for Nevills' Washington theater, has secured the Roseland theater here. The Roseland has been running a mixed program but Mr. Carter will use pictures exclusively.

Immense New Theater

San Francisco Capitalists, Headed by Herbert Rothschild, to Build a Glorious Theater on Corner of Market and Fourth Streets—Site Cost $1,250,000. Will Seat 3,500 Persons—Eugene H. Roth Is General Manager.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif.—Perhaps the greatest single advancement made in the moving picture industry in the West, is the culmination of the colossal enterprise recently launched at San Francisco, by a syndicate of local capitalists, headed by Herbert L. Rothchild, of the well known firm of Rothchild, Golden & Rothchild, and one of the leading stockholders of the Portola theater. This syndicate has just purchased from John D. Spreckels the property at the southeast corner of Market and Fourth streets, unquestionably one of the choicest corners in any city in the entire country, with the possible exception of Forty-second street and Broadway, New York City. The property is in the very heart of San Francisco and has a frontage of one hundred feet on Market street, one hundred and seventy feet on Fourth street and one hundred feet on Stevenson. The price paid was $12,500 a front foot, or $1,250,000, setting a new record for realty values on the Pacific Coast.

A Magnificent Theater.

The newly organized company contemplates the early erection of a magnificiently appointed moving picture palace with a seating capacity of at least 3,500 and is already making arrangements for razing the building that now covers the site. Eugene H. Roth, who for many years has so successfully managed the Portola theater, and who is recognized as being one of the leading exhibitors in the entire country, has been appointed general manager, and has been given full power to perfect every detail and to embody in the construction of the new building every idea that promises to make this house a distinctive one.

Will Travel for Best Ideas.

Messrs. Cunningham & Politeo, perhaps the foremost theatrical and auditorium architects in the West, have been given the task of furnishing San Francisco with the grandest and most artistic moving picture theater in the country. Mr. Polito, accompanied by manager Roth, has started upon a tour to inspect all of the largest moving picture houses in the United States, in order to secure the most advanced ideas and upon his return the plans for the new building will be perfected with all possible speed. While away Mr. Roth will make a special study of musical instruments, for, realizing that San Francisco is the musical center of the West, the syndicate plans to furnish a musical feature that will be a rare treat in itself.

CLUB PRESIDENT RETIRES.

Screen Club President Sid Grauman Succeeded by Abe Markowitz.

San Francisco, Calif.—Owing to the press of private business Sid Grauman, of the Empress theater, who has been president of the Screen Club, of San Francisco, since its organization more than a year ago, has tendered his resignation and has been succeeded in this office by Abe Markowitz, of the California Film Exchange. He will, however, continue as director of the organization. Upon retiring from the position which he has filled with so much credit to himself and the industry he was presented with a beautiful loving cup by fellow club members. Bert Levey, of vaudeville and moving picture fame, has been elected vice-president of the club.

The report of financial secretary, Joseph Huff recently rendered indicates that the organization is in splendid shape. The regular Saturday luncheons in the club rooms are proving to be very popular and there is a steady increase in the number of film men who are making this place their headquarters. A committee has been appointed to make arrangements for a stag entertainment some time in April and this event is being looked forward to.

STAGE SETS FOR PICTURES.

Tivoli Theater Gets Up Beautiful Set for "Dahpne and the Pirates."

San Francisco, Cal.—The splendid stage settings which have been a feature of the entertainment at the Tivoli theater for more than a year, are being made more and more elaborate until they now rival the best attempts along this line that are to be seen on the legitimate stage. When "Daphne and the Pirates" was shown recently at this house the stage setting was designed by Fred L. Packer, manager of the art department of San Francisco Call, and was painted under his personal direction. The scene is called "The Pirate's Retreat," and shows a tropical sea across which sails a galleon of the eighteenth century. A storm arises and the lightening strikes the craft flying the black flag, burning the vessel to the water's edge. Hearty applause greeted this setting at every performance.

Big Organ for Rialto Theater.

San Francisco, Calif.—Prof. M. Cockroft, of the Wurlitzer organ factory, arrived in San Francisco recently to confer with the architect and contractor who have in charge the remodeling of the old American theater on Market street, soon to be opened as the Rialto. A Wurlitzer Hope-Jones unit orchestra costing about $20,000 is to be installed here and will be the largest instrument of its kind in California. It is a replica of the one that received the gold medal of honor at the recent Exposition where it was shown in connection with the display of the United States Steel Corporation in the Palace of Mines.

Nat Magner Plans to Go East.

San Francisco, Calif.—Nat A. Magner, who has offices in the Pacific building, plans to make a business trip to New York about the middle of April to secure additional feature films. He recently took over the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to the Pavlowa film, "The Blind Girl of Portici," and has been very successful in booking this, a two week's engagement having been arranged for at the Portola theater. The initial showing of this production was made just a week after the appearance of this artist on the local stage.

Exhibitors Visit City.

San Francisco, Calif.—With the advent of clear weather many visitors from outside points are coming to San Francisco to arrange for service and to secure equipment for their houses. Among those who have been here recently are: J. E. Lowrey, of the Unique theater, Napa; H. J. Judah, Santa Cruz; Mr. Howard, of the Cardella theater, Oroville; John Ratto and wife, of Jackson; Dave Solari, Stockton; B. R. Davis, of the Lyric theater, Stockton; and Mr. Wotten, of the Colonial theater, Stockton.

New Film Service Commences Business.

San Francisco, Calif.—E. H. Emmick returned recently from Los Angeles where he completed arrangements whereby the Peerless Film Services, Inc., of Los Angeles and San Francisco, will handle "The Escape," "Avenging Conscience," "Sealed Orders," "The Littlest Rebel," Mutt and Jeff comedies and the releases of the E. & R. Jungle Film Co. This is a new organization making its local headquarters in Film Row on Golden Gate Avenue, and which has gotten off here to a flying start.

Leon Bories with California Film

San Francisco, Calif.—Leon Bories, for many years manager of the San Francisco branch of the General Film Company, has joined the force of the California Film Exchange as special representative, with headquarters at San Francisco, and will cover the entire Western territory. He has returned from his recent vacation trip to Los Angeles and Universal City and is glad to be back in the harness again.

Serials Please at Pantages Theater.

San Francisco, Calif.—The Pathe serial, "The Red Circle," which has been featured with signal success at Pantages theater, was recently brought to a close here and the "Iron Claw" has taken its place as the moving picture attraction. The experiment of showing serial photo-play productions in conjunction with vaudeville has worked out to the entire satisfaction of the management of this house and they are now being shown at other theaters in the big circuit. Alex. Pantages is one of the cleverest men in the amusement field in the West and his stamp of approval on moving pictures as a part of a vaudeville entertainment is of particular interest and weight. Business at the local theater of this circuit has been exceedingly heavy of late, despite the Lenten season and the general reports of quiet business.

Paramount Trophy Much Admired.

San Francisco, Calif.—The local Progressive exchange has just received the trophy won by it in the efficiency contest in which all of the Paramount exchanges took part and since being set up in a place of honor in the offices of this organization it has been greatly admired by visiting exhibitors. The receipt of the trophy has stimulated the efforts of the local workers who hope to again gain the coveted honor of having the name of the San Francisco exchange engraved upon it.

San Francisco Briefs.

The Regent theater at Fillmore and Clay streets, recently taken over by F. A. Lacey, has been sold to J. F. Hughes.

The Elite theater on Market street is making a success with long runs and recently booked East Lynne for one week. Formerly changes were made daily.

The Pastime theater is located in the building at Fourth and Market streets, soon to be razed to make room for a mammoth moving picture house, and will be closed within a comparatively short time.

The Western Theater Company has purchased two Powers Cameragraphs No. 6 B for the new Rialto theater from G. A. Metcalfe, together with four Caille ticket selling machines and a Caille ticket chopper.

J. F. Seymour is having plans prepared for a moving picture house to be erected in the vicinity of Church and Thirtieth streets.

The Glen Park auditorium is to be remodeled and changed into a moving picture theater.

A number of Motiograph projection machines have been disposed of during the past few days by Edward H. Kemp, including one to the Auburn grammar school, Auburn, Calif.; one to the Ladies' Club at Lindsay, Calif., and one to the West Side Christian Church of San Francisco.

The Atlas Educational Film Co. has supplied the grammar school at Crockett, Calif. with an Atlas projector, and has sold another machine of this type to the First Baptist Church at Fort Bragg, Cal.

Leichter & Selleck, who recently took over the Rex theater at Polk and Washington streets, have remodeled, painted and carpeted the house, greatly improving its appearance and comfort. As a result of their energetic management a gain of thirty per cent in receipts has been made since the first of the year.

A FINE SALT LAKE THEATER.

Paramount-Empress, Under Management of H. E. Ellison, Succeeds.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SALT LAKE, Utah—The Paramount-Empress theater, which opened in Salt Lake City the latter part of February as a house for the exclusive showing of the Paramount program, has proved one of the most marked successes among the many successful theaters of this district. H. E. Ellison, the manager, who came to Salt Lake from the Princess theater, Denver, has won the approval of the theater-goers of Salt Lake by his methods and especially through his introduction in this city of the practice of "staging" his pictures. Notable among these efforts were the scenic and electrical effects accompanying the Burton Holmes pictures of West Point and Annapolis. An agreeable effect was also obtained in the showing of the "Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

H. C. Ellison.

The Paramount-Empress was fitted up as a photoplay theater from the Sullivan & Considine Empress theater, which had a varied experience as a vaudeville and stock house. For a large cash consideration, a Utah corporation took over the Sullivan & Considine theater and at great additional expense, remodeled the house for the showing of pictures. The large musical staff of the house is headed by Willard Weihe, who conducts the orchestra; Edward P. Kimball, organist, also assistant organist at the famous "Mormon" Tabernacle, and Franz Rath, pianist, whose work has been a distinct feature of the bills at the Paramount-Empress.

A model projection room on the parquet floor of the house gives a straight "shoot" at the screen, which is of the Minusa fibra variety. A large pipe organ, roomy and convenient rest rooms and nursery, an automatic ticket-selling machine and a very courteous house staff are notable features of the management and equipment of the house.

General Film Miniature Theater.

Manager Henry, of the General Film Company, has completed the erection of a private exhibition room in the offices on Postoffice place, and now gives all his wares the "once over" before offering them to the exhibitor.

The "room" consists of a squared-off space about 50 by 50 feet, with thick brown canvas curtains running to the ceiling and effectually shutting out the light. There are chairs in the room for customers and guests and a fiber screen is in place.

More Organizations

Exhibitors of Oregon Invited to Join Motion Picture Men's Association—Feeling of Fraternity and Harmony Throughout State Desired—Suburban Exhibitors of Portland Organizing—Southern Oregon Men Contemplate Association.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—At the regular meeting and luncheon of the Moving Picture Men's Association held at the Hotel Oregon, March 23, it was decided that the time was ripe to ask the moving picture exhibitors and film men throughout the state to join the association. At its inception the Motion Picture Men's Association was organized to include all the branches of the industry in the state and with its organization now successfully accomplished, an effort will be made to have every film man in Oregon a member.

E. J. Myrick, who acted as chairman and who laid the plan before the meeting, said, in proposing the invitation, "I believe the time is at hand when the film men of the entire state should be banded together for their mutual welfare. It is only through concerted action that the perils that beset this great industry can be brought fairly to the attention of the people. It is only through organization and fraternal understanding that this concerted action can be had."

The relation of the suburban exhibitor to the downtown exhibitor was discussed and C. B. Cannon, of the Nob Hill theater, E. T. Pittmon, of the Cineograph and H. C. Phillips, of the Tivoli, presented the side of the suburban theaters. I. Leeser Cohen, secretary of the association, in making the invitation for membership, assured the suburban men that the scope of the organization was too broad to give rise to sectional differences.

"Its purposes," said Mr. Cohen, "are to further the sociability of the film fraternity throughout the state and to promote better and more understandable relations in its ranks."

The meeting was well attended. George Bligh, of Salem, wearing his now famous emerald colored vest set with nile green buttons, was conspicuous among the visiting guests.

The writer was requested by Mr. Myrick to repeat in this column the invitation to all members of the film fraternity in Oregon to affiliate themselves with the organization.

Other Associations in View.

An effort is being made to organize the suburban exhibitors of Portland. The leaders of the movement are said to be C. B. Cannon and Max Gjedsted. Since the Portland Exhibitors League has gone into decline and the downtown picture houses have allied themselves with the other downtown theaters under the name of the Portland Protective Association, some of the suburban exhibitors have felt that the differences in the interests of the downtown and suburban men warrant a suburban exhibitors' association.

Southern Oregon exhibitors, Grants Pass, Roseburg, Medford, Ashland and neighboring towns are contemplating forming a Southern Oregon Exhibitors' League.

INSPECTORS TOO OFFICIOUS.

Managers Complain of Manner in Which Inspections Are Often Made.

PORTLAND, Ore.—Preparatory to issuing the quarterly theater licenses April 1, the inspection of the Portland theaters has occupied much of the time of the Fire Marshall. Complaints have been made that the inspectors insist in doing their work while a show is on, flashing their lamps in the corners of the theaters and making their presence generally known in audiences. It was reported that three firemen inspectors dashed up to a suburban theater in South Portland in a red automobile and entered the house in such a manner as to cause the audience to rise to its feet with fright. At another house firemen are said to have inspected the screen while the picture was on. Complaints were made to the Fire Marshall.

WANTS MORE SINGLE REELS.

Exhibitor Pittman Thinks Theaters Are Neglecting a Good Thing.

PORTLAND, Ore.—E. T. Pittmon, who, after an absence from the business for a half a year has taken charge of the Cineograph theater, Portland, marveled at the change in the industry during the past six months. He regretted the fact that producers were spending most of their money on big features and neglecting the quality of their one, two and three-reel productions. He said he heard a woman remark, after indifferently viewing a new two-reel picture of one of the best brands, "I guess I must be getting tired of picture shows." But the fault lay with the picture. Suburban houses suffer when manufacturers neglect their smaller subjects.

PORTLAND STRAND OPENS.

Old National Reopens With Life and Bustle.

Portland, Ore.—The Strand theater, formerly the National, opened Mar. 19. If the success of the house is to be measured by its first day's business the Strand Theater Company need not fear the outcome of its Portland venture. The quiet atmosphere that prevailed in the days of the old National was missing and in its stead the bustle of the candy boys between acts and the ushers and the orchestra music gave the house a metropolitan air that it never had before. The comfortable loges on the lower floor have been replaced by orchestra chairs and some changes have been made on the stage.

The program consisted of Blue Bird's "The Strength of the Weak," a Universal Weekly, a Pat Sullivan cartoon and five acts of vaudeville. S. Morton Cohen has applied the name "photoville" to this combination of photoplays and vaudeville. The admission price is 10 cents all the time.

A Happy Father.

The responsibilities of being a father have not altered Paul Noble's smile the least bit. It was even rumored on Film Row that shortly after the happy event the newcomer kept daddy awake all night for two successive nights. But even that did not phase Paul's smile. The baby is a boy and looks just like his dad.

Columbia Theater, Portland, Ore., E. J. Myrick, Manager.

It is owned by Jensen and Von Herberg. Has just closed ten-day run of "Peggy," a recently Triangle film.

Soldiers in Union Jobs

Returned Soldiers Who Took Union Operators' Jobs in Five Calgary Theaters When Managers Refused New Union Agreement Are Doing Well—Old Soldiers May Be More Generally Favored by Exhibitors.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CALGARY, Alberta.—The ten returned soldiers who took the places of the union operators at the time of the recent strike in five local picture houses, are still at work. According to J. B. Cronk, manager of the Allen theater, one of the affected houses, the new men are giving entire satisfaction, and are being paid the same wages as were paid to the union operators—$22.50 per week of six days, working six hours each day, and with $1.00 per hour for all overtime. This is reported to be the scale as submitted by the union men, who suggested a minimum of $25.00 per week, with a ten per cent. reduction during the period of the war.

Making Places for Soldiers.

"As regards the returned soldiers," said Mr. Cronk, "some time ago the authorities took up with the moving picture theater managers the question of employing these men, and asked us to give them positions whenever we could. We commenced training them, because we were dissatisfied with the claims of the men we had."

Manager Belmont of the Bijou theater said that in his opinion the idea of placing returned soldiers in the picture houses was so good that he expected to see the practice become general throughout Canada. The Moving Picture Managers' Association, he said, was at present working on such a scheme. It will be seen that if these plans are put into effect, the result will be a complete readjustment of the relations now existing between the managers and the unions, with a consequent period of more or less harmful friction.

In Calgary, the city by-law states that an operator must not only pass the usual examination, but must hold licenses from both the provincial government and the city. At the time that the soldiers replaced the union men the former did not have city licenses but it was stated that the city did not intend to take any steps to prevent the men from working.

Chief of Police Cuddy confirmed a statement that one of the old operators at the Empress recently short-circuited the switches and put some gum in the automatic fire shutters there. When a returned veteran came to practice on the machine the fuses blew out, but nothing serious resulted. Chief Cuddy cancelled the offender's city license, and has requested the provincial government to do the same.

As the strike has developed into a question involving the employment of returned soldiers, without regard to their affiliations with any union, most of the arguments and statements of both exhibitors and union officials deal with the patriotic aspect of the situation.

Discussed by Trades Council.

The matter was the principal topic discussed at the latest meeting of the local Trades and Labor Council, which afterward issued a long statement dealing with the strike. This set forth that the managers had taken advantage of a favorable opportunity to exploit the veterans, and were paying them from $6 to $8 less than the union had arranged for in the schedule. They also pointed out that 25 per cent. of the operators have enlisted.

Vancouver, B. C.—James E. Finch, manager of the local Universal office, stated to the representative of the Moving Picture World that as a result of the Calgary strike approximately 15 reels of film had recently arrived from that city in very bad condition, and that Manager D. G. Walkley of that office had explained that the damage was caused (unintentionally, of course) by the substitute operators. The 12th episode of "Graft" was so badly torn up that it was necessary to order a new copy sent out from New York.

WITHHOLDING LICENSES.

Alberta Court Upholds Right of City to Deny License.

Edmonton, Alberta.—A decision was handed down recently by Chief Justice Harvey of the Supreme Court of Alberta, which affects all persons doing business in the province under a city license, and so, of course, applies to moving picture exhibitors.

In the case of Martin E. Elves versus the City of Edmonton the applicant asked for a mandamus order compelling the city to issue to him a license to conduct a shooting gallery. Under the city's by-laws, the municipality can refuse to grant a license on the grounds of the character of the applicant, or any other grounds deemed sufficient by the chief of police to warrant the refusal to issue a license for any business. The applicant then has the right to appeal to the city commissioners, and in the case of Elves the appeal was made.

The commissioners sustained the ruling of the license inspector backed by a report from the chief of police, and the license was again refused. The applicant then applied to the courts for the mandamus order compelling the city to issue the license, arguing that all the city had power to do was to collect the fees and issue the license, and could not inquire into the character of the applicant, or whether he was a fit and proper person to conduct the business stated in the license application.

Chief Justice Harvey, in refusing the mandamus, held the city charter gave the power to the city to act as it had done in this case. The city can inquire into the qualifications of the licensee, both morally and in a business way, to conduct the business set forth in the license application.

A New Picture Show.

Winnipeg, Man.—As a result of the recent victory of the prohibition forces in Manitoba the Queen's Hotel on Portage avenue, this city, will be closed, and the building remodeled to house a picture show.

Something Up His Sleeve.

Vancouver, B. C.—W. F. Grunnah, bookkeeper and stenographer at the local Universal office, has on several occasions lodged complaints with the World man because he is never mentioned in the Western Canadian correspondence. Having been thus goaded into speaking our mind, we hasten to inform the exhibitors of the province that whereas Mr. Grunnah has previously had no mustache with which to deceive them, he is now industriously engaged in cultivating one. Also, he has something up his sleeve.

Reasonable Admission Now.

Winnipeg, Man.—Two more local houses—the Wonderland and Mac—have raised to 15 cents, and according to W. F. Barrett, Universal manager, three more have promised to raise to the same figure. The Majestic has raised to 10 and 15 cents in the evening; matinees 5 and 10 cents.

Old Time Exhibitor Dies.

Cumberland, B. C.—Miss E. I. Reynolds, who conducts the Ilo theater here, is mourning the loss of her father, who died a short time ago. Mr. Reynolds was an old time exhibitor and newspaper man, and was formerly in the government customs service in Yukon Territory.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Live Lion Catcher's Pictures.

SPOKANE, Wash.—Climbing a tree after a 240-pound mountain lion and getting in close enough range to slip a wire noose around his neck while the animal was making up its mind whether to spring at him or the dogs, on the ground below, is one of the experiences of H. H. Bakker of Libby, Mont., who is in the city making final arrangements for a tour through the northwest with a reel of moving pictures of his work as a lion hunter during the winter.

The pictures were taken by Al Smith, local representative of the Pathe company, and are said to be views of the regular work carried on by Bakker during the entire winter while he was securing the animals for the zoo at Independence, Mo. They will be given a trial run at the Liberty theater before Bakker starts on his tour.

"One of the animals could kill a whole pack of dogs if it but had the courage to try," said Mr. Bakker, "but for the same reason that a house cat runs from a poodle dog, the biggest mountain lion that ever walked will be put to flight by a few bloodhounds.

"My work is done entirely in the winter, when the animals can be easily tracked. As soon as the dogs overtake the lion, it will tree.

"I climbed the tree and slipped the noose over the head of the cat with a 10-foot pole. When it felt the wire, it pulled back, tightening the loop around its neck. One of the men on the ground jerked it off the limb and tied the lasso to a tree.

"I slipped behind and grabbed it by the tail, when it turned on its back, cat fashion, and began to claw. One of my helpers threw the rope around its feet and we soon had it bound. It measured nine feet from head to tip of tail and weighed 240 pounds. The average lion such as the large one at Manito park, Spokane, Wash., weighs about 175 pounds."

Bakker has been in the business four years and has captured alive 40 lions for the eastern zoo. Lions are becoming scarce, according to his report.

Ralph Ruffner Gets More Trumps.

Spokane Wash.—The Liberty theater's "live wire" manager, Ralph Ruffner, announces the new "scoops." One is the new Pathecolor fashion features and the other is the signing-up of the "Rube" Goldberg animated cartoons.

Manager H. J. Brown Pleased.

Spokane, Wash.—Manager H. J. Brown of the Hippodrome theater, Spokane, has contracted for the V-S-L-E productions and the first offering was Kathlyn Williams and Tyrone Power in "Thou Shalt Not Covet," and this was followed by Frank Daniels in "What Happened to Father." Since inaugurating the 5-cent matinee policy several weeks ago manager Brown states that his receipts have increased 40 per cent. He also said "The advent of the 'Big Four' feature films at the Hippodrome had been accompanied by decided increase in business."

He has recently installed improvements of a modern fireproof operator's booth, two new projecting machines and a new system of indirect lighting.

Adaline Kirkman at the Class A.

Spokane, Wash.—Adaline Kirkman, organist and pianist, has been secured by the Class A theater as accompanist for the motion pictures. She has had several years' experience in picture houses in the larger cities of the middle west and came here from St. Louis. She is a thorough musician and has developed the art of improvisation, found essential in interpreting the varied scenes. Her musicianship will add materially to the pleasure of Class A Patrons.

LOCAL PAPERS AND THE FILMS.

Fox Manager Gets Newspaper Men Aside and Talks to Them.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MONTREAL, Quebec—One of the most discouraging conditions facing the Montreal film industry is its treatment at the hands of the local papers. There is one paper in particular that accepts advertising from film concerns and then consistently knocks the business. The question looked as if it would never reach a solution when a way was shown last week.

On Monday, March 20th, a gathering of advertising managers was called by Chandos St. John Brenon, local manager for William Fox. The chair was taken by Proprietor J. Tarte, of "La Patrie," one of the two leading French papers in the Dominion. Mr. Brenon addressed the assembly. His chief contention was that the local publications did not exploit the moving picture befittingly. He showed samples of United States film pages and compared them with those maintained by Montreal newspapers.

In Montreal alone he said, motion picture theaters owned $10,000,000 worth of property. He charged the papers with throwing away much advertising which could be got by means of attractive, interesting, and readable photoplay departments.

Mr. Tarte, at the conclusion of Mr. Brenon's address, stated that he was astounded at the figures that had been submitted and would not question their veracity which he realized for the first time. He stated that the Fox Film Corporation was the first film manufacturer that had ever taken the trouble of pointing out to the papers the situation. He said that for the first time in 18 years the representative advertising men of all the local papers had been assembled together, and for this one fact alone a debt was due Mr. Brenon. Mr. Dunn, of the Herald-Telegraph, and Mr. Arrowsmith of the Standard, also addressed the gathering. Among others present were: J. Chevrier, of Le Devoir; Mr. Myerson, of Der Weg; F. C. Sutton, of the Star; W. H. Sutton, of the Gazette; Mr. Robert, of La Presse.

THOSE QUEBEC CENSORS.

Interesting Fate of Universal Film and Its Paper.

Montreal, Quebec—When the Montreal office of the Universal sent down the film "Campbells are Coming," for approval last October, the film was condemned, but the posters were approved. After the approval of Sir Sam Hughes was obtained this last month, the film was passed by the Quebec Censors, but the paper was condemned—just vice versa this time. Mr. Taube, of the Universal, thereupon called on Chief of Police Campeau, and this gentleman cut the gordian knot by stamping "approved" on the troublesome paper. Some officials!

Recent Montreal Features.

The features at Montreal theaters for the week of March 26th were: Connaught, "The Prisoner of Zenda," Famous Players; Regent, "The Flirt," Bluebird, and "Aloha Oe,"Triangle, and "The Village Scandal," also Triangle; Strand, "The Little Gypsy," Fox, and "Tangled Hearts," Bluebird; Moulin Rouge, "Double Trouble," Triangle; Windsor Photoplays, "Vanity Fair," Kleine-Edison; St. Denis, "The Great Divide," V-L-S-E, and "The Vampire," Metro; Imperial, "Poor Little Peppina," and "To Have and to Hold," both Paramount, and Metro's, "Tables Turned"; Mount Royal, "Mme. La Presidente," Paramount.

The local Pathe had a well-attended private screening at the Connaught theater, on the evening of March 24th. Two Gold Rooster plays were screened, "Little Mary Sunshine" and "The Woman's Law." Between four and five hundred people were present. Music was rendered by Miss Mantha. Both pictures were liked, particularly the first mentioned.

Toronto Prospects

A New Theater is Promised—Will Stand at Corner of Yonge and College Streets, City's Geographical Center—May Seat as Many as 5,000 Persons—Empire Hippodrome Company Behind It.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TORONTO, Ontario—The Ontario Government has just announced the incorporation of a brand new theatrical enterprise and, through the formal notice concerning the new company, there is brought to light the plans for the largest moving picture house in Canada. It is to be known as the Empire Hippodrome Company and the official capitalization is $1,000,000. The president of the corporation is Herbert Hale Williams, a prominent citizen of Toronto. He has already purchased a large property in the geographical center of Toronto for the site of the huge theater. This block, which is near the corner of Yonge and College streets, has a 400-foot frontage on two streets and a frontage of 270 feet on a third thoroughfare and the ground area is 108,000 square feet. The plans call for a structure with a seating capacity of between 4,000 and 5,000 persons. Mr. Williams is said to control a very large amount of money and is associated with men of wealth, according to long-established indications.

The largest theater in Canada at the present time is the St. Denis of Montreal with seating accommodations for approximately 3,000 people. This theater was opened less than one month ago.

In Toronto work of reconstructing the Majestic theater, the former home of melodrama, is proceeding rapidly. When reopened as a film house, this theater will be known as The Regent.

Toronto exchange managers are welcoming the coming of large moving picture theaters in the city. It is declared that the presence of several big houses in Toronto would help the whole local moving picture business.

PAY FOR COLLECTING TAX.

Ten Per Cent. Allowed to Exhibitors from Ticket Tax.

Toronto, Ontario—Toronto's moving picture exhibitors heard some welcome news the other day when Hon. T. W. McGarry, provincial treasurer, announced that, by a new provision of the Amusements Tax Act, theater managers would be allowed to retain ten per cent. of the tax which they collect at their respective box offices. This arrangement has been made to enable the theater owners to cover their costs of collection. The exhibitors will be held responsible for the collecting of one cent from every patron but they will given ten per cent. of this revenue as recompense for their services and for inconveniences caused.

It was also announced by Mr. McGarry that the act would come into effect on May 15th. For an indefinite period after this date, every theater patron will have to pay a one cent tax regardless of the cost of admission but it is promised that a schedule of taxes will be arranged at a future time so that higher taxes will be paid with more costly reserved seat prices.

THEATER'S OWN LOCAL FILMS.

Strand at Toronto Begins an Interesting Experiment.

Toronto, Ontario—In order to provide moving pictures of the very latest local happenings for the entertainment of patrons of the Strand theater, Toronto, Manager Marvin of this picture house has secured the services of a cameraman to take views of all important local events. Mr. Marvin has established a developing room in connection with the theater and has also fitted up a special studio for the taking of indoor pictures when arrangements can be made for the bringing of principals straight to the theater for poses. Recently Mayor Church of Toronto consented to appear before the camera in this studio to be shown in the act of signing an important letter. In a few hours this scene was being shown on the screen. Mr. Marvin aims to perfect his camera service so that an outdoor event can be portrayed on the Strand screen the same day. He himself has been taking many pictures with a view to perfecting this branch of his amusement institution but he has now engaged a cameraman for the outside work.

False Rumors in Circulation.

Toronto, Ontario—Managers of several local film exchanges have been called upon to issue denials, recently, of several unfounded rumors regarding their business or about certain releases.

According to one report, the V-L-S-E had decided to import no more features into Canada although the "Big Four" had only become established in the Dominion since December. W. C. Gookin, Canadian manager for the V-L-S-E, has made a flat denial of this rumor.

"We have found that we will have to secure new offices for the Toronto branch because our present quarters have become overcrowded. We have, indeed, just closed with W. H. Golding, manager of the Imperial theater, St. John, New Brunswick, to use V-L-S-E features. Our business is expanding in every direction."

General Manager C. B. Price, of the Mutual, was also aroused recently when a local newspaper published a statement that the first Chaplin-Mutual release in New York City had proved to be a big failure. He quickly pointed out that Chaplin has not started to work for the Mutual yet and that no Chaplin feature could have been placed on the market by the Mutual at this time.

Even the Ontario Government has been called upon to deny a report that it intended to place a large tax upon film exchanges. With a tax on theaters and a fee for pictures and an assessment on theater patrons, it has been pointed out that the Government could not very well assess moving picture exchanges.

Pathe Exchange Notes.

Toronto, Ontario—Arrangements have been made for the Toronto branch of the company to move into much larger offices in the same building at 56 King street West where the branch has been operated for some time. The new suite, which is on the third floor of the building, is approximately double the size of the old offices.

It has also been announced that the serial "The Iron Claw" had, on March 27th, been booked to the end of May in Toronto and adjacent territory. Loew's Yonge street theater has started the first run of this picture. No solicitors for this serial have been put on the road.

"Britain Prepares" in Ten Reels.

Toronto, Ontario—The Paramount Pictures Company, Limited, with head office in Toronto and branches throughout Canada, has just brought out a big English film feature entitled, "Britain Prepares." This picture, which has a war theme, is made up of ten reels and is the longest photoplay ever produced in England. It was prepared under the direction of the British Government. The feature will be shown first at Montreal and also at Ottawa. In Toronto it will have a long run, it is expected, in Hassey Hall. The Paramount company will take it all over Canada.

KALEM.

FROM ALTAR TO HALTER (April 4).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); Ham's bride (Norma Nicholls); Bud's boss (Myrta Sterling).

Later it develops that it was only a nightmare—but while Ham and Bud are married—Ham is boss in his home, but Bud is a lowly worm. The worm turns—and believe us, there is an exciting time in both households. Ham finds himself battered and beaten, while Bud surprises his better half with a strenuous display of bossism.

TRAPPING THE BACHELOR (April 5).—The cast: The girl (Ethel Teare); Jack Williams (Victor Rottman); his aunt (Mrs. Davenport); Jack's chum (Jack MacDermott). Produced by William Beaudine.

Jack's aunt and his chum are both seeking strenuously to cure him of the error of his ways. When Ethel, who has been left penniless, accepts the aunt's invitation to stay at her home for a while, the matchmaking plotters seize the opportunity to work up all sorts of schemes to get Jack interested in Ethel. Their schemes result in a whirl of excitement that is at times too serious for those concerned, but the close finds Jack about to foreswear his bachelorhood in the arms of Ethel.

THE FICKLE FIDDLER'S FINISH (April 7).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville), the banana peddler (Henry Murdock); Neil (Mary Kennedy), the chauffeur (Frank Minzey); Jack (Arthur Albertson); pa (Richard Purdon); ma (Olive Wyatt), the professor (Robert Ellis). Author, Frank Howard Clark. Producer, Robert Ellis.

Sis is a lover of music—she plays the harmonica. So it's all off for her chauffeur admirer when she hears the banana peddling genius play his violin in the park. The violinist is a faithful lover until he is taken by the professor and made into a master concert player overnight. Neil, who fears that Jack's affections are growing cold, invites the newly-found genius to play at her home, which is where Sis is employed. When Sis, who is mourning her lost love, hears the strains of his violin a real hot time begins for all concerned.

THE RECORD RUN (No. 74 of the "Hazards of Helen"—April 8).—The cast: The operator (Helen Gibson), engineer of the mail train (True Boardman), President Benton (George Williams), the rival road's president (Roy Watson), leader of the road's agents (Percy Pembroke). Produced by James Davis.

The story is built around the rivalry of two railroads and the record run that is to decide the awarding of large mail contracts. Helen learns of the rival road's plot to delay the mail train and speeds on an electric car which is derailed, almost costing Helen her life. The plotters send a wild engine down the track towards the mail train.

Helen boards a small hand car from which she leaps to the speeding runaway. The mail train is almost upon her, so she reverses the engine and speeds the other way. Momentarily, the distance between the two engines is growing smaller, and collision seems certain when Helen's signal is seen by a switchman and her engine takes a flying switch a second before the mail train roars by.

VIM.

THE BATTLE royal (April 13).—Far away in the Kentucky hills live the families of Plump and Runt. The former were all big and fat—the latter small and wiry. Never a cross word passed between them. The eldest Plump son was the future husband of the Runt girl and the stocky son and heir of the Runts was the bethrothed of the two hundred and sixty pound daughter of the Plumps. Life flowed in one happy stream—the two fathers ran the old still undisturbed by either conscience or Revenue—the hills resounded with the joyous cries of the boys and girls, until the fatal day arrived, and then, Ye Gods, how the blood and feathers flew.

Plump and Runt happened to hook the same fish. Argument, hot words and blows followed and the Feud was born. Each fired on the others at sight, and had their marksmanship in any way equalled their intentions, the two families would have been wiped out. Grandma Runt was the fiercest and most bloodthirsty of all. Bred in the Feudist country, a fight was the breath of life to her, but as she had the unfortunate knack of getting in everyone's way, her family had their hands full in taking care of her. Inspired by thought of direst revenge her son and his family dig a large hole and cover it with leaves and wait for their mortal enemies to fall into the pit. Grandma, determined not to miss anything, falls in and is rescued only with the greatest difficulty. The Plump stronghold is attacked by the Runts, when some unfortunate Revenue officers find their way to the hills and become targets for the combined fire of both families. The joyful discovery that they are fighting the law blinds the Feudists to their personal quarrel and joining forces they pepper the fleeing officers, then a general handshake takes place and once more harmony reigns.

THE SLEUTHS (April 14).—When Mrs. Newlywed received the sacred jewel from her uncle in the Far East with a note telling her that the jewel had once adorned the famous idol in one of the temples, she naturally was anxious to have her friend admire it. Wearing it to a dance the jewel received much comment in the papers. The newspaper articles are seen by some Arabs who have been commissioned by the Sheik to follow the jewel to the end of the world and recover it.

The Arabs force an entrance into the house, but are discovered by the Newlywed family as they are blowing the safe. Missing the jewel, the Newlyweds call in Pokes and Jabbs, "the world famous detectives" who undertake to recover the precious stone. The Arabs, who really did not succeed in gaining possession of the jewel learn that Pokes and Jabbs are on their trail.

Luring them into the house of one of the band, the Arabs finally succeed in imprisoning the sleuths in the torture chamber. Once the sleuths are safely imprisoned the Arabs start the mechanism controlling the chamber and which forces the walls to compress. While the Arabs are gloating over the untimely end of the sleuths, the latter are anxiously waiting the moment when the walls shall crush them. At the last minute, however, the detectives seeking comfort from the horror of their position indulge in some snuff which causes them to sneeze. The mighty blast blows down the torture chambers, wrecks the entire house and liberates the sleuths who triumphantly emerge from the wreckage.

Columbus, N. M.—On the way to get Villa! The army crosses the international boundary and heads for the hills to the south, where the bandit is supposed to be.

WIVES OF THE RICH (Three Parts—April 10).—The cast: John Grant (Harry Mestayer); Mrs. Grant (Grace Darmond); Robert Baker (Lafayette McKee); Mrs. Childs (Lillian Hayward); Mrs. Condon (Emma Glenwood). Written by Allen Curtis Mason. Directed by T. N. Heffron.

John Grant, capitalist, is devoted to his wife, but is obliged to curtail her weekly allowance because of her fondness for cards. Robert Baker, a wealthy bachelor, is a great admirer of Mrs. Grant and calls frequently. Finding that her allowance is not enough for her losses at cards Mrs. Grant, incited by society friends, deceives her husband in the hope of gaining more pocket money.

Mrs. Grant loses a hundred dollars at cards, and she gives her I. O. U. to Mrs. Condon, the hostess. Not knowing where to obtain the money to pay this debt, she confides in Baker, who asks to be permitted to loan the funds to her, and she reluctantly consents.

In order to obtain more money, Mrs. Grant purchases a costly necklace on credit and pawns it, hoping to pay for it with her gains at cards. She loses all this money, and the jeweler, unable to obtain the money from her, says: "If you don't pay for the necklace by Tuesday, I will take up the matter with your husband."

Later, Baker writes Mrs. Grant, asking her to call on him at 9 o'clock that night. A scrap of this note falls into her husband's hands, and he decides to follow his wife to Baker's apartments. There is nothing else for Mrs. Grant to do but visit Baker. Grant also goes, and through a trick hides in Baker's smoking room. Once inside, Baker forces his attentions on Mrs. Grant. There is a terrible struggle in the next room and, despite his pounding on the door, Grant cannot break it down. He hears a pistol shot. He crawls through a window into Baker's room. He finds the man dead and his wife gone.

Grant goes home and finds his wife sitting at the fireside. A look into her husband's face and Mrs. Grant realizes that he knows it all. She then explains how Baker accidentally shot himself trying to wrest the revolver from her, which she had carried with her to defend her honor.

THE BEAUTY HUNTERS (April 15).—The cast: John Queerphiz (James Bradbury); Jane Apeface (Martha Mattox); Male Beautifier (C. C. Holland); Physician (Frank Clark); Cook (May White). Written by James Oliver Curwood. Produced by William Robert Daly.

John Queerphiz and Jane Apeface exchange bogus photographs. These photographs are so appealing to the parties in question that they resolve to be married by telephone. The matrimonial knot is tied, and Jane arrives at her husband's home. Consternation ensues when each spies the other's face. Both aggrieved by the doubtful compliments naturally cast resolve to consult a beauty doctor.

They do so and a transformation results in both of them. They meet again while thus transformed, and fall in love with each other. They make an engagement to meet the following day. Jane goes home and is followed by Queerphiz. Jane, not recognizing him, tells him to leave, as her husband will be home soon. Finally they recognize each other despite the beauty disguise, and a struggle ensues in which wigs and false hair are scattered around promiscuously. Both fall exhausted to the floor, and a physician summoned, pronounces death caused by heart failure. When he leaves the two recover.

LUBIN.

THE SCARLET CHASTITY (Three Parts—April 6).—The cast: Austin Strong (George Routh); Julia Strong (Helen Wolcott); Blanche Wayne (Josephine West); Clyde Saxon (Alan Forrest); Karl Stock (Sydney Deane); Charlotte, housekeeper (Adelaide Bronti); Earl, Austin's son (Deon Routh); the old Maestro (Ben Hopkins). Written and directed by Wilbert Melville.

Austin Strong, a writer, and his wife, Julia, are very badly mated. She is rather "loud" and common, having no sympathy with his work and forever accusing him of not loving her. Austin does his best to get along, particularly upon learning she is to become a mother. Julia is very much opposed to children and is very much upset at her approaching motherhood. Shortly after the birth of the child (a son) Julia goes crazy and Strong is obliged to have her confined to a private sanitarium.

Blanche Wayne, a singer, is advised to go abroad to finish her studies. Before going she is proposed to by Clyde Saxon, an artist, but she rejects his offer. On her return four years later, she makes her debut at a fashionable reception at the Beaux Arts Club, where she meets Austin. They are mutually attracted. At the reception, Karl Stock, a "New Thoughtest," gives a speech, declaring that "the higher mentality has no sex!" It is evident that Blanche agrees with Karl, though Strong is skeptical. As time progresses, Austin and Blanche are strongly attached to each other. Little Earl, Austin's son, now four years old, falls ill, and Austin in despair sends for Blanche, whom the child takes for his mamma who is "far away." Blanche finally decides to live in the house with Austin and Earl, just as companions, they needing each other, she says, for the "higher things in life."

Just as things are progressing in this ideal relationship, Austin receives word that his wife is unconscious and upon coming out of the stupor may recover her mind. He hastens to the sanitarium, and is present when Julia comes to; she is in her right mind. He returns in despair to Blanche, who leaves immediately and returns to her studio. Julia returns home her old self again. She is always scolding Earl, who finally in a fit of temper, tells her he wants his other mamma. Julia accuses Austin, who, driven to desperation, confesses his love for Blanche. Julia immediately goes to Blanche and, accusing her of wrong relationship with her husband, warns her to stay away. Shortly after Austin finds Julia in a fit of anger at Earl and asks for a divorce. Julia refuses it, saying she will never divorce him. Austin makes up his mind to go to Blanche with Earl and ask her to go away with him.

Clyde Saxon, hearing the gossip about Blanche, believes it. Asking her into his studio, he makes love to her, she believing he means only the honorable thing, and, tired of the misunderstandings which have ostracised her, half yields, when he whispers his meaning. Horrified, Blanche leaves him and goes to her studio. She is sitting there despondently when Austin and Earl enter.

Julia, discovering her husband and Earl leaving the house, knows that he is going to Blanche and goes to his room to get a revolver. She gets to Blanche's studio just as Austin is pleading with Blanche to go away with him. Earl has wandered off and is standing by the door when Julia pushes it open. He sees her take the revolver out of her bag, and, remembering a scolding he had received for playing with a revolver, he catches hold of it. It goes off, killing Julia. Austin and Blanche rush up as Earl tells them what happened.

A WISE WAITER—(April 8).—The cast: Billie, a waiter (Billie Reeves); Justin Love (John Shermer); Caldwell Fluster (Francis Joyner); Helena Fluster (Eleanor Blanchard); Carrie Potts, cook (Margaret Moore). Written by Clay M. Greene. Directed by Earl Metcalfe.

Justin Love and his lady, Miss Helena Fluster, also Caldwell Fluster, her brother, and Carrie Potts, the cook, elope separately on the same night, and both couples choose for the carrying out of their escapades, a restaurant where Billie is head waiter. Both couples arrive at the restaurant at the same time. They confide their separate secrets to Billie; a minister is summoned; the two marriages are solemnized in adjoining rooms, and Billie is the subscribing witness to both.

Then comes a bombshell into the quiet boarding house, in the shape of a will, signed by the uncle of the Flusters, which specifies that if either of them marries, his or her share shall be given to the unmarried one. Then ensue many attempts on the part of each of the secretly married, to induce the other to marry, so that the single one shall inherit the entire fortune.

Caldwell Fluster is caught one day making love to Carrie Potts, and Helena, of course, not knowing of their relations, indignantly discharges Carrie at once, and Caldwell does not dare defend her. A man servant is advertised for. Billie reads the ad., applies for the position and secures it. He is, of course, recognized by the guilty newlyweds. He recognizes them, and learning for the first time of the family mix-up, immediately starts a system of blackmailing which brings great tribulation into the Fluster family. But becoming greedy, he pushes his advantage too far and is caught by the watchful Carrie. She calls the police and there ensues a lively chase. A codicil is found to the Uncle's will, revoking the first singular provision, and leaving his money to his niece and nephew, share and share alike.

OTTO THE BELL BOY (April 10).—The cast: Otto, the bell boy (Davy Don); Lizzie (Patsy De Forrest). Written and directed by Edwin McKim.

Otto is given the job of bell boy. It keeps him busy attending to the wants of the different guests. His assistance results disastrously for all concerned. With the addition of brass buttons worn on his bell boy suit, Lizzie becomes smitten with him. Otto falls in love with Lizzie, but hides the fact that he has no money with which to get married.

Otto in assisting one who has filled up on liquor receives a crisp greenback. Now Otto knows that in a certain room there is a card game in progress and here he goes to try his luck. His luck is so good that after a short time Otto emerges from the game with all the money. He goes to meet Lizzie and shows the money, saying now: "We have de money got let us ged married." He tells her to dress up and they go to the minister.

In the meantime the hotel clerk is raging for the guests are complaining about the service. Otto and Lizzie walk through the hotel lobby, heads high in the air, on their way to the nearest minister.

THE GREATER WRONG (Three Parts—April 13).—The cast: James Cannon (Leslie Austen); Mrs. Cannon (Octavia Handworth); Grace Andrews (Margaret Adair); daughter (Adelaide Hayes); doctor (Herbert Fortier). Written and directed by George W. Terwilliger.

James Cannon, a young engineer, anxious to better himself, finally marries Helen Maitland, an heiress. Grace Andrews, a stenographer in the employ of Cannon, secretly loves him, but he is unmindful of the fact. After their marriage, Helen's ideals regarding Cannon are shattered, for she realizes that he married her for money and they begin to draw apart. Later when her child is born they partly resume their intimacy. When Cannon suggests to Helen that she let him manage her entire estate the previous quarrel is resumed with the result that Cannon disappears and Helen then takes up society, leaving her child in the nurse's care. Returning home one evening Helen finds the child is dead, and that day she receives a letter from Cannon telling of his love for his child and that he will soon return.

Helen, fearful of the consequence of her act, learns from the doctor that he has in his keeping a little child whose mother died at its birth. Helen, not knowing that this is Grace's child, decides to substitute it for her own and so Helen's child is buried with Grace. On his return Cannon finds that the child turns away from him and he is broken-hearted. With the passing years the substituted child never shows affection for Cannon and she causes him many a heartache. Helen, not knowing of the child's parentage, is fearful of the outcome. Later when the daughter is grown she and Cannon quarrel and she tells him that she never loved him as there is something in him that always prevented it. Helen, seeing that Cannon's heart is broken, confides the secret. Cannon turns on her in anger, but the doctor, who has been summoned, takes Cannon to one side and tells him that the child is really his own and of the terrible agony in which Grace died because of his neglect of her. Cannon seeks Helen and confesses his guilt.

MR. HOUSEKEEPER (April 15).—The cast: Billie Henpeck (Billie Reeves); Mrs. Henpeck (Eleanor Blanchard); star boarder (Francis Joyner). Written by Clay M. Greene. Directed by Earl Metcalfe.

Billie Henpeck has made the mistake of marrying his landlady to secure a home, and soon begins to reap the fruits of his error. Unable or unwilling to secure employment, he is compelled to apply to his wife for the money wherewith to gratify his small needs, and she, being of a close fisted kind, gives with a cruel frugality, while she is very liberal with one a star boarder. One day a telegram comes to Mrs. Henpeck, bidding her come at once to the bedside of her father, who is seriously ill. Consequently she hastens away, leaving all of the affairs of the house not with her husband but the "star boarder."

This procedure excites the ire of the boarders, who leave the house in a body. Here Billie sees his opportunity. In order to secure the money with which to enjoy himself during his wife's absence, he will rent the empty room for cash, and pocket the money. Accordingly he tears the portrait of the hated star boarder from the wall, and on the back of it letters a placard, which he exposes at the front door.

RUINOUS BOARD BARGAINS!
COME ONE COME ALL!
$10 room marked down to $6
$6 room marked down to $4
$8 and $5 double.
50c. meals marked down to 30c.

This attractive announcement soon has its effect, for contrary to the opposition of the star boarder boarders flock to the house, much advance money is paid, and as soon as Billie has adjusted the several earthquakes, occasioned by the people whom he has "doubled up," he is in clover. Among the lady boarders is an attractive woman, who, to emulate the example of his spouse, he makes his star boarder. He entertains her with a lavish hand, again to the disgust of his boarders, whose minds are poisoned by Mr. Star Boarder. One day his wife returns while he is entertaining his lady favorite in her room, and the watchful Mr. Boarder tells her what has occurred during her absence, at the same time showing her bills of tradesmen for $500, while Billie has been spending the cash received from the boarders. Taking the situation in her own hands, the matter is brought to adjustment in an effective and permanent way.

BIOGRAPH.

THE TENDER-HEARTED BOY (April 10—Biograph Reissue).—The cast: the girl (Mae Marsh); her father (W. Chrystie Miller); the boy (Robert Harron); his mother (Kate Bruce); the butcher (Jack Dillon); the miser (Gertrude Norman).

After her father's death the girl comes to live with her sweetheart and his mother. He gets employment in a butcher shop and secretly provides meat to an old woman whose misery he pities. He intends to pay for the meat, but when caught taking it out of the store he is discharged as a thief. The old woman dies, and the police find in her room a will leaving several thousand dollars to the boy. When they go to his house he fears arrest and hides in a closet until, the truth discovered, the butcher himself congratulates him.

THE MAN WHO CALLED AFTER DARK (Two Parts—April 11).—The cast: Henry Whitmore (Jack Drumeir); Dorothy, his ward (Vera Sisson); Robert Whitmore (Jack Mulhall); Daniel Hayes, editor (Ivan Christy); his wife (Gretchen Hartman); Stanley Cooper, the man (Charles Perley).

Robert Whitmore, the son of a wealthy business man, at college becomes addicted to gambling and incurs several debts—the I. O. U.'s of which are held by the proprietor of a gambling parlor, who threatens to bring the matter before the president of the college if Robert does not pay at once. In order to get the money, Robert raises a check which his father has sent him, giving it to the gambler in settlement of his I. O. U.'s. But the gambler is suspicious and holds the I. O. U's until he has seen the check go through.

Meanwhile Robert has returned home and upon the day of his arrival, his father received the canceled check from the bank endorsed by the gambler. Armed with the check, he returns home and finds Robert in the act of destroying several pieces of paper as he enters. Noting his confusion at the time, he shows him the check and asks him if he knows anything about it. Realizing that there is no escape, Robert breaks down and confesses, whereupon his father mildly but firmly declares that he must go away and make out for himself—not to return until he has proved himself worthy of his forgiveness.

Dorothy, his father's ward, is in love with Robert and is amazed when she learns that Robert has gone away without leaving any explanation. Firmly intent upon proving his mettle, we find Robert in a distant city, where he is searching in vain for work. Among other places he tries to get a position as reporter on one of the leading papers, but fails.

One morning during his stay in town, a man is found shot dead in one of the public parks, and while the authorities search for clues, the identity of the murderer remains a mystery. As the murdered man was a stranger in town, it looks as if the affair would be dropped, when Robert hits on a plan, whereby he may prove himself a valuable asset to the paper before mentioned in increasing its circulation through a great scope. He hastens to the editor to lay his scheme before him which is that he leave a certain chain of evidence that will direct their reporters to him as the murderer of the man found in the park.

This proposition is accepted by the editor, who has promised Robert to produce enough counteracting alibis to clear him, after the paper has enjoyed the fruits of the story. The plan works only too well for the jury brings in a verdict of guilty and it looks very much as if Robert would suffer the penalty of the crime, because the editor had positively refused to even recognize him when he, at the last moment, disclosed the whole plot.

The news reaches Dorothy and she hastens to Robert's side believing his story to be true. They both reason that the editor must have had some hidden reason for throwing Robert down, so with this in view Dorothy secures a position as a lady's maid in the home of the editor, and there learns that it was the editor himself who had killed this man whom he claims was his wife's sweetheart, and carried him to the park. This all comes out during a quarrel between the editor and his wife regarding the man who called one night after dark, and whom he claimed to be a lover, and the wife confesses that it was her former worthless husband whom she thought dead years before in prison, for during this quarrel Dorothy is listening at the door. The district attorney is notified and the wrong righted.

THE STAMPEDE (Three Parts—April 12).—The cast: John Morton (Robert Drouet); Chief Chapa (Walter Lewis), Panca, the chief's daughter (Linda Arvidson); Wanga (Linda Arvidson); Jessica (H. Harroun); Joe Iron Horn (A. Hollingsworth); Senator Bobbs (Charles H. West); Dick Travers (Charles Perley); Mrs. Morton (Miss E. Stone).

John Morton, prospector, weds Panca, daughter of an Indian chief, in order to get the secret of a mine whence came great nuggets of gold. On learning the secret he deserts her. She dies after giving birth to a child who at her request, is educated "white man fash'on."

The girl Wanga at school becomes the chosen friend of Morton's daughter by the woman he has married after returning to civilization. Thus she meets Dick Travers, a young engineer, whom Morton has sent to lay out a railroad across the Indians' land, with the ulterior object of getting possession of the mine. Morton plays upon Senator Bobbs' love for his daughter, Jessica, to push the nefarious scheme through Congress.

Joe Iron Horn, an Indian who loves Wanga, calls at Morton's residence while a ball is in progress and orders the girl to come with him. The secret of her Indian blood being revealed, Dick, who has just declared his love for her, now turns upon her. She goes back to her people. At her instance the president appoints a commission to protect the rights of the Indians and Wanga forces Morton to acknowledge defeat by threatening to claim him as her father.

Having saved her people, she flouts the penitent Dick, but repents and saves his life when Joe Iron Horn, in jealous rage, causes a stampede of wild cattle, from the midst of which Dick is rescued by means of an Indian trick. Iron Horn is killed by her grandfather when he attempts to shoot Dick, and Wanga marries her lover, who now is proud of her inheritance from the noble red man.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

HAUNTED AND HOUNDED (Three Parts—April 14).—The story opens in a small middle West settlement. Jim Lowell, station agent, and Anne Lowell are unhappily married. Jim has an affair with Ida Standing, wife of Joe Standing. After a fearful scene between Anne and Jim, Anne hits him with a crockery jar, when he attempts to choke her, and she believes she has killed him. Horror stricken, she escapes to the city. Later Joe and Ida find Jim and revive him.

Anne is run down by an auto belonging to Jefferson Caldwell, a rich young man suffering from ennui. He takes her to his home, falls in love with her and later marries her, but she tells him nothing of her past, for he has told her that that does not bother him.

Ten years elapse and Anne has developed into a beautiful woman. She is the mother of two children and has almost forgotten the hideous chapter of her life. On their summer estate, Joe Standing is engaged as gardner, and he and Ida occupy the gardener's cottage. Later, Anne meets them and learns that Jim is not dead, but that he is in the city. Ida jealous and longing to get even with Anne for "squealing on her to Joe" as she puts it, informs Jim of Anne's whereabouts, and Jim determines to try blackmail.

That night while Anne, heartbroken, is giving a dance, Ida is called in to watch the children. Her maternal instinct is awakened, she realizes what it will mean for the children and she confesses to Joe what she has done. As Anne is sleeping that night, Caldwell, in the adjoining room, hears Jim enter her room. Joe, wandering in the garden, sees him and follows. He threatens Anne and when she pulls a gun he wrenches it from her. Joe comes in; the two men struggle, when Jim pulls the gun on Joe. Jim is killed and when Caldwell rushes in from his room, Joe explains that he followed the burglar, as he calls Jim, and shot him in self defense.

VITAGRAPH.

OUT OF THE QUAGMIRE (Broadway Star Feature Three Parts April 11).—The cast: Lawrence Arsdale (Joseph Kilgour); Alice Arsdale (Julia Swayne Gordon); Mabel Britton (Eleanor Woodruff); Willard Norton (Robert Whitworth); Mike Coran (John T. Kelly); Huggins (Ned Finley); Lucy Coran (Adele Kelly); Bill Sheidy (Arthur Cozine). Author, Donald J. Buchanan. Director, Theodore Marston.

Though he had always been devoted to his wife, Alice, circumstantial evidence causes Arsdale, candidate for mayor in a large city, to suspect her infidelity. He sees her enter an apartment house with Norton, a gambler, and, though he waits for some time, does not see her come out. Later, in his own home, he hears her tell the same man to return that evening when he will be at the club.

That night when Norton calls, Arsdale is hidden, and watches his actions. His wife is taking a little nap on the soft, and he sees Norton enter and stoop over her sleeping form. Thinking he has kissed her, he raises a revolver, and, in his insane fury, shoots him. For he does not know that the whole thing had been worked out by his political rivals who are anxious to cast a slur on his reputation in order to re-elect the present mayor. He does not know that Norton, the man he suspected and killed, was the husband of his wife's sister, Mabel. When Alice entered the apartment house with Norton, it was for the purpose of rescuing her sister Mabel who had fallen into the clutches of one of the drunken henchmen of Arsdale's rival.

Later, after Mabel had married Norton, he started drinking to excess, and when he refused to stop at her request, she left him. She then returned to Alice, who promised to keep the affair secret and try to buy Norton off. When Norton called, she told him to return that night with this intention in view. When Arsdale saw him stoop over his wife's reclining form, his poisoned mind readily believed the false evidence of his eyes, that Norton had kissed her. Infuriated as he was, he would have shot his wife, too, but the ringing of the telephone bell brings him back to his senses. He answers the call, and the message which comes over the wire, takes the blood from his flushed cheeks. His face bespeaks the intense anguish of his tortured mind, for he has heard the joyous voice of a well wisher, congratulating him upon his election to the mayoralty. Quivering with emotion, he realizes that his hasty action has ruined his career and probably his life.

HER PARTNER (April 3).—The cast: Harmony (Mary Anderson); her father (Otto Lederer); Hardy (Webster Campbell); Joe Scott (Jack Mower). Author, Wm. A. Lathrop.

Harmony runs the only store in a small western town. Her father is a drunkard, and she has grown to hate drink like poison. She loves Jim Hardy, a miner, or rather, a trench digger, for he has not yet excavated any "pay dirt." One day Jim's partner, Scott, comes in, absolutely broke, and offers to trade his half interest in the mine for a week's supply of grub. Harmony readily agrees, in order to be partners with Jim.

Later, Harmony sees Jim with a bottle of whiskey and tells him in no uncertain terms her frank opinion of his character. She then shows him the document making her his partner, and while he is rejoicing over his good fortune, tears it up, saying, "I wouldn't be partner with a drinker." Jim, remourseful, slings the bottle of whiskey away, and then tells Harmony that the claim would never be worth anything anyway, and that he is going to fold up his tents and move to a better paying location. Before going, he sets off a blast in the mine to destroy it.

Just as the explosion occurs, Harmony runs into the mine to examine her property, and Jim, terror-stricken, follows. After their awakening, they are counting their bruises, when Harmony points to her head, saying that it hurts. Jim looks at it, and then stares with unbelieving eyes, for there, nestling on her golden hair, lies a small nugget of real gold. The mine pans out fine after that, and selfish Jim substitutes the name Hardy for Grant on the partnership papers.

FREDDY THE FIXER (April 7).—The cast: Freddy (William Dangman); Sallie (Lucie Crane); Jonathan Green (George O'Donnell); Widow Smiles (Virginia Norden); Hannah (Florence Natol). Written by E. J. Montague. Produced by Frank Currier.

Jonathan, a widower, and Hannah Tubbs, have been engaged for the past twenty years, and still show no symptoms of getting married. Freddy is deeply in love with Jonathan's daughter, Sallie, but father does not favor his suit. The Widow Smiles, learning that Jonathan is wealthy, determines to win him by fair means or foul. She decides to try foul means first, and Jonathan immediately "falls" for her and forgets Hannah, who threatens to sue him for breach of promise.

Jonathan, frightened, decides to leave town, but before he goes, Freddy exacts a promise from him that if he should fix things up, he shall have Sallie for his reward. He allows the rumor to circulate that Hannah has inherited a fortune, and every eligible bachelor in town calls on Hannah and proposes marriage. Hannah, amazed at her sudden popularity, decides to choose while the choosin's good, and settles on Ebenezer. They decide to have a hasty marriage, but while they are on the way to the parson, Jonathan, who has heard of the inheritance, rushes up to renew his suit. Although at first he is scorned, Hannah finally weakens and marries him. Freddy comes just in time to see Jonathan fall into his own trap. Seeing the lay of the land, he exits hastily for parts unknown.

MYRTLE THE MANICURIST (Three Parts—Broadway Star Feature—April 8).—The cast: Myrtle (Jewell Hunt); Mr. Gay (Templar Saxe); Mr. Luvvy (Harold Foshay); Mrs. Luvvy (Adele De Garde); her father (Harry Fisher); director (Ned Finley); Jimmy, the bellhop (Paul Kelly); Percival Plush (Arthur Cozine); Charley (Frank Brule); manager of manicure parlor (A. Robinson). Author, Paul West. Director, Harry Davenport.

Millionaires don't grow on trees, but Myrtle, the manicurist, drew one in her nail clipping emporium, and found a young fortune in her palm after he had gone. "Myrt" wasn't a bit slow in using up the dough, either; and her trim form, swathed in glad rags, sure does look classy, in fact so classy that wealthy Mr. Gay engages himself to her and seals the pact with a diamond ring, purchased in the 5 and 10 cent store. Myrtle's blissful dream of a happy married life in her mansion on Fifth avenue is rudely shattered when Jimmy, the bellhop, informs her that there already is one Mrs. Gay.

Myrtle fixes old Gay, though, and he won't forget the incident for some time to come. Natty as her own clothes are, the sight of Mrs. Luvvy, attired in the latest creation from gay Paree, excites envy in her heart. Mr. and Mrs. Luvvy are elopers and Luvvy is afraid of losing his scalp when wifey's father arrives. Always ready to aid friends in distress, our own Myrtle dons the bride's clothes, and when the old gent comes, he is astounded at seeing another woman with Luvvy, and not his daughter as he expected, and leaves with apologies. The grateful honeymooners present her with an exquisite opera dress and cloak, and she shows her appreciation by wearing them that very night, when the boss takes her to see "La Garlic," or something like that.

Tiring of being a belle of the beauty parlor, she induces her friend, Percy Plush, the dashing film hero, to get her into the movies. She makes a hit, but balks at the prospect of jumping from the top of the Woolworth Building. The director, in a quandary, tries to push her off, but the camera goes off instead, and lands squarely on the noble brow of Percy far below. Wisely deciding that the climate in that region is rather unhealthy for her, Myrtle returns to the more menial labor of trimming the digits of the idle rich.

THE HOYDEN (April 10).—The cast: Bess (Mary Anderson); her father (Otto Beninger); Amy (Edith Reeves); her husband (Webster Campbell). Written by Wm. E. Wing. Directed by Dave Smith.

Working for a living is no easy task to Amy, who has been used to a life of ease. Bess, her forewoman, helps her out and after a while she no longer minds working. One day while walking home with Amy, Bess gets into a fight with a bartender for selling her father liquor. The drink mixer, calling in a blue-coat, demands that he arrest her, but Amy comes to her rescue, and she is allowed to go free.

After some time Amy is informed that her father's estate has been adjusted and she is once more independent. She falls in love with a musician with high ideals and no cash, and marries him. Amy's fortune supplies him with all the luxuries his heart desires, and he goes to society functions galore, leaving Amy at home to do the washing. Bess comes to visit them, and Amy confides in her, telling her that her small fortune has dwindled to nothingness. While Bess is there, Dick, the husband, enters and orders her out of the house.

Amy steps between them, and Dick shoves her away. This arouses Bess's fighting blood, and she wades into Dick and laces out an excellent trimming to him. The beating arouses Dick to a realization of his duty, and he goes to work in earnest and makes a success. Next time Bess visits them, Dick joins Amy in thanking her for the lesson she taught him. In Dick's own words, "Even though it was a bit rough, it sure was worth it."

SUSIE THE SLEUTH (April 14).—The cast: Susie Sharpe (Edith Storey); Hank Handy (Antonio Moreno); Mr. Stockton (John Costello); Mrs. Stockton (Rose E. Tapley); Binks George Stevens); Duffy (Arthur Robinson). Scenario by Kenneth S. Webb. Produced by George D. Baker.

Susie would be a detective. When her lover, Hank, calls at the lace counter of Stockton & Co., where she is employed, and gives her a book called "The Lady Detective," she is overjoyed. Now, thinks she, "I will become a real sleuth." That day, while her nose is buried in her book, a shoplifter steals some goods from her counter. Though Susie's mind is in dreamland, the store detective is on the job and has her arrested. He then gives Susie a good calling down, hurting her professional pride.

Mr. Stockton, the head of the firm, has a young wife who has a weakness for tango teas. He forbids her to indulge in this type of amusement, and threatens to put detectives on her trail. While passing out of the store, a piece of lace catches on Mrs. Stockton's sleeve. Susie, thinking her a shoplifter, follows her out of the store. Mrs. Stockton sees the lace and puts it into her muff, deciding to return it next day. Susie follows her to a tango parlor, where Mrs. Stockton sees her, and, thinking Susie one of her husbands spies, begs her not to tell. This makes Susie sure of her ground, and she has her arrested. Stockton, hearing of his wife's arrest, hurries to the station house, and explanations follow. Susie succeeds in losing her job and shattering her pet ambition.

SIN'S PENALTY (Three Parts—Broadway Star Feature—April 15).—The cast: Lola Wilson (Corinne Griffith); her doting husband (Otto Lederer); Wilson's sister (Anne Schaefer); Doctor Brent (Webster Campbell); Helen Grant (Mary Anderson); Detective Hanley (Fred W. Hiller). Author, Fred. W. Hiller. Director, William Wolbert.

In the mountains of the west, Brent, a young physician, hopes to find relief from the embraces of Lola Wilson, who is infatuated with him, but whom he no longer loves. At one time he had loved Lola, but when he discovered that she had murdered her husband in order to be free to marry him, he had nothing but contempt for her. As her former lover, and physician to Wilson, he covered up the crime by fixing the death certificate, so that she would not have to pay the penalty.

Wilson's sister, suspicious of the actions of Brent and Lola, puts Hanley, a detective, on their trail. He follows Brent to California, and Lola, learning Brent's address, goes on the same train. In California, Brent has fallen in love with Helen, a simple little daughter of the mountains, whom he had rescued from serious injury in a snow slide. Lola, on her arrival, finds Brent, and tells him that unless he agrees to marry her, she will accuse him of being an accomplice to the murder. This conversation is heard by Hanley, who is spying on them in the next room. Brent, heartbroken, for he would not marry Helen with this blight on his past, pens a letter of farewell to her, and then writes a confession of his connection with the crime. His hopes of a happy life blasted, he is about to cross Devil's Pass, a feat which no mortal could survive, when Helen rescues him.

Hanley, meanwhile, had obtained possession of the confession, and, seeing Lola out for a toboggan, had taken the document to her. After a glance at the terrible contents of the sheet, her face became livid with fear, and she attempted to wrest the incriminating evidence from his grasp. A terrible struggle followed and finally the toboggan was upset, and the two struggling forms hurled far, far, below, where the life was crushed from both their bodies by the cruel, jagged rocks. And next day, when Brent passed the scene and saw the mute evidence of the tragedy, he knew that he might at last forget the horrible past, and live only for the future and the happiness which it had in store for him.

UNDER ROYAL PATRONAGE (Reissue—Three Parts—April 4).—The cast: Richard Savage, U. S. A. (Francis X. Bushman); the Princess of Strelitzburg (Beverly Bayne); H. R. H. Francis of Hofgarten (Thomas Commerford); Philip, his nephew (Bryant Washburn); Count Earl Von Blusen (E. H. Calvert).

Francis, reigning prince of Hofgarten, wishes to unite his kingdom with the adjoining principality of Stretlitzburg. To do this it is necessary for his nephew, Philip, to marry Stella, sister of the neighboring prince. She has been in a convent for years and her brother has no idea of her appearance. Philip, who has also been in Paris at school for fourteen years, receives a letter from Francis, telling him that if he should refuse to marry Stella before he is of age his allowance will be cut off.

Frederick is anxious to have his sister marry Philip, as Francis has promised to redeem the state jewels, which he has pawned, if the marriage is brought about. Philip on receiving the letter is quite disconsolate, as he has learned to love another girl and has never disclosed to her his royal birth. However, he strikes upon a plan. He will send Richard Savage, an adventurous American, to pose as himself. His uncle, not having seen him for fourteen years, will not doubt the substitute's identity. Savage falls in love with Stella and is spurned, she insisting their marriage would be one of convenience rather than love.

Meanwhile, Philip, in Paris, has declared his love for a girl of humble birth, and made known his origin. They decide to journey to Strelitzburg, as only eighteen hours remain before he becomes of age. Philip and Savage enter the throne room just as Savage and the princess are to take the vows. Then comes the unexpected—Philip's fiancee is the real princess and to save herself from a marriage of convenience she substituted her friend, Helen Churchill of Philadelphia. Both prince and princess have sent Americans in their places and when this is explained, the bishop performs a double ceremony, and all ends happily.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 8 (Cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson—April 5).—Canimated Nooz Pictorial cameramen film "Spud" Hoosus who claims as how he has the slickest rooster in Sandhill County, Indiana. This bird can tango and everything, and "Spud" makes him show off all the tricks for the fillum men. It also becomes the pleasure of the Canimated Nooz to announce to the public the invention of Gene Yus, who has invented a means of making fish eating less laborious. It consists in making funny remarks to the fish, causing him to giggle so much that he thoroughly shakes himself loose from his bones. With customary ubiquity in covering the world the Nooz photographer goes to the southern training camp of the Cubs. Here Joe Boko works out before the camera. War pictures this week show the Nooz Pictorial's correspondent interviewing Gen. Frank Furter. "Doodabs," the writer is carried off by the General's argument. The other five hundred feet of the reel is made up of western scenic.

THE LIGHTBEARER (Three Parts—April 8).—The cast: Rev. Richard Lennox (Richard C. Travers); Rev. John Stiles (Roderick LaRoque); "Bull" Grogan (Chester Barry); Rose Cahill (Betty Brown); "Kid" Donovan (Jack Dale); Peter Sewell (William Burke).

With death at hand the Rev. John Stiles, missionary in the slums, phones the fashionable church of the city to have a minister at his bedside. Young Richard Lennox, new to the clergy, responds and hears from the dying brother how the work in the mission must go on. As the mission is part of Christ church Rev. Lennox resigns his rich pastorate and goes to the slums.

He finds the territory over which he is to work is dominated by "Bull" Grogan, a vicious saloon keeper and agent for the wealthy owners of the tenements. Grogan rules by his fists, and when he sets out to get Rose Cahill, a slum girl who by miracle has escaped pollution in her environment, he starts in a characteristic way—violence. Rose, with ambitions and ideals above her surroundings, soon finds herself in love with the young rector. They meet and Lennox is interested.

Peter Sewell, capitalist and head vestryman of the big church, is irritated by the minister's activity in cleaning up the district. Sewell owns several of the tenements. He has the vestrymen discharge Lennox. Richard declares he will carry on the work unattached. He phones the papers and they expand with the story of the young minister who lost his place for being over-zealous.

In the meantime, Kid Donovan, a good natured little prize fighter, down and out, is found and cared for by Lennox. Donovan wins back his health and teaches boxing to the aristocratic young rector. "The only way to clean up this neighborhood is with your fists," advises the fighter and Richard agrees. He whips Grogan, who once vanquished him ingloriously before Rose. Grogan is compelled to close his rough saloon and leave the district. When Richard, the drawing room pastor, forgets his poise and wades in to reform the neighborhood with his fists, he succeeds and with Rose a complete metamorphosis is effected.

MILLSTONES (Two Parts—April 11).—The cast: Robert Carstairs, district attorney (Darwin Karr); Mary Ryan (Nell Craig); Bill Dolan, a burglar (Edmund F. Cobb); Bentley, Carstairs' friend (John Cossar); Mrs. Carstairs (Peggy Sweeney).

Bill Dolan, burglar, rescues little Mary Ryan, aged 8 years, from her dissolute parents and raises the child. Ten years later finds her a member of the notorious Dolan gang, long sought by the police. She pleads with Dolan to give up his life and "go straight." Dolan consents to make his next robbery his last one. He is caught and jailed. The gang sends Mary to get word from him and he orders her to invade the home of Carstairs and steal the evidence which represented many months' work on the part of the district attorney and was accurate enough to send all the gangsters to prison for long terms. Mary tries it, and is caught by Carstairs. She tells why she is helping Dolan, because he befriended her. The attorney agrees not to use the evidence if Mary can reform the criminal.

Returning home she hears the gang plotting to waylay Carstairs. Next day she hastens to his home to warn him and discovers Mrs. Carstairs and Bentley. When Carstairs comes in Mary saves his wife from suspicion by declaring she had returned to the house to rob and it was only the intervention of Bentley that prevented her from escaping. Mrs. Carstairs gets the girl aside and gives her a large roll of currency. Mary finds Dolan at home when she returns, he having escaped from jail. They decide to marry and flee together, and with Mary's money get a fresh start and "go straight."

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF BOSTON (April 12).—Historic and beautiful Boston, so closely associated with the earliest traditions of America, has been pictured in Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of motion drawings. This split reel feature unfolds the pen and ink sketches of "The Hub" in an instructive manner. Faneuil Hall, about which the dearest legends of American liberty cling, has been pictured. The beautiful harbor, Boston Commons, Bunker Hill, the Statehouse and the new South Station, combine the old and new to make 500 feet of educative film. The other half of the reel is taken up with a scenic, showing the natural grandeur of the American west.

THE LAST ADVENTURE (Three Parts—April 15).—The cast: Beatrice Clemmons (Lillian Drew); Timothy Hayden (John Lorenz); Arnold Burton (Edward Arnold).

The scheming Timothy Hayden some years before the story opened had won a small town girl and brought her to the city, ostensibly to promote her as a player of unusual ability on the harp. Instead, he has capitalized her beauty and introduced her among his men friends. Each of the wealthy clubmen has at some time or other given Beatrice expensive gifts. This jewelry Hayden sells and provides cheap imitations for her to wear, although the system is known to Beatrice. So the two live until Arnold Burton returns from Alaska with a fortune for which he had fought hardships for for years.

Burton, the honorable, has a virtue for Hayden's every vice. The latter forces Beatrice to sign an agreement with him that she will marry the millionaire, and when he shortly discovers her past, divorce him upon payment of $100,000 alimony. A meeting is cleverly arranged and Burton falls in love with Beatrice. She refuses to marry him as her own love becomes genuine. Hayden forces her to accept her proposal. As soon as they are married Hayden visits Beatrice in her own rooms and while she is telling him she is through with him forever, Burton enters unexpectedly. He handles the situation calmly and forces Hayden to leave. The latter pauses at the door with threats and then covertly levels a revolver at Burton. The latter grasps him and in the struggle hurls him down stairs. His neck is broken.

immature girl to a woman of charm. The first man to fall under her bewitching glance is Hugh Forrest. Bob becomes jealous, but overcomes it a few days later, when Betty dismisses Forrest from her thoughts.

Stanley Gates, one of Bob's friends, has promised to marry Katherine Gray. Betty casts her covetous glance over Stanley and he neglects Katherine to make love to her. But he is discarded when Betty tires of him. brings about a reconciliation between Stanley and Katherine and begins to woo Betty again. Despite her brother Jack's warning that she is too young to think seriously of marriage, Bob proposes to Betty and she consents to marry him. Bob, who has taken his medical degree, now starts out to establish himself in his profession. But patients don't come to him very rapidly. So, on the advice of Mr. Pendleton, he locates in a new field, where he acquires a large practice. Betty has promised to go to him as soon as he sends for her.

But no sooner has Bob left town when Betty meets Count Casalone, an Italian nobleman. She soon forgets her promises to Bob and pledges herself to marry the Count. She receives a letter from Bob telling her that he has provided a home for her and is anxiously awaiting her arrival. Betty reads the letter to the Count and the two have a good laugh over it. Then Betty writes Bob informing him of her engagement to Count Casalone. Bob is heartbroken when he receives the letter.

Meanwhile Betty has amused herself sufficiently at the Count's expense and begins to tire of him. In driving through the park one day she sees Stanley Gates and his young wife and proceeds to engage him in a flirtation. That night Jack writes a letter to Bob, telling him that, despite the fact of Stanley's being happily married, Betty still has the power to enchant him. Later Bob meets Betty at the Van Aldyn reception and she greets him as of old. But Bob cuts her cold. Bob notes that Stanley is nervous, and that Betty cannot keep her eyes off him. Later Betty leads Stanley to the conservatory, where he proclaims his love. She yields to his embraces and he rains passionate kisses upon her face and hair. Bob is a witness of their love-making, and unable to contain himself any longer, he bursts in upon them and tells Stanley that his wife is ill. Stanley is completely dazed by this information and hurries away. Bob denounces her and then leads her back to the ballroom, where Stanley, meanwhile, has found his wife waiting for him. Suddenly realizing the meanness of his conduct he takes his wife home, followed by Bob, who, later in the evening, upbraids Stanley for his behavior. Stanley decides to break off his relations with Betty.

After returning home Betty broods over Bob's denunciation of her as a silly social butterfly. Bob, who is about to leave to resume his practice at his own home, receives a call from Mr. Pendleton, who informs him that Betty has been taken seriously ill and implores him to come and attend her at once. Accordingly, he hurries to the Pendleton home, where he attends Betty with considerable medical skill and succeeds in saving her life. During her convalescence Betty repents of her past flirtations. Bob now makes a discovery. His love for Betty has by no means vanished forever, as he had supposed it had, and for fear that he may again fall a victim to her fascinating wiles, he turns her case over to another physician and returns home, where he finds himself besieged on all sides by his waiting patients. On returning to his office one evening he finds Betty awaiting him there. But she is now very meek and a different sort of a girl than she had been formerly. Bob soon realizes that his love for her is fully reciprocated, for she tells him that she loves him with all her heart. A reconciliation is the result.

HELD FOR DAMAGES (April 11).—The cast: Elisha Norton (Bert Busby); Bob Norton, his son (Harry Benham); Peggy O'Brien (Edna Pendleton). Written by Harry Ditmar. Produced by John Harvey.

Bob Norton is in love with Peggy O'Brien, who conducts a profitable modiste's shop under the name of "Mme Frou Frou." Peggy will not marry Bob unless he has sufficient money, so he calls on his father at his office in Wall Street and finds him dilating over the excellent qualities of a bull dog, for which he has just paid $500. Bob's request is denied and when he tells his father that he is in love with a handsome milliner, it only adds to the old man's anger. However, old Morton tells his son that if he can prove himself worth as much as the dog, he shall have the amount he paid for him. Then he orders Bob to lead the dog home and to take good care of him.

Bob goes to the establishment of his lady-love. The bull spies a cat, the mascot of Peggy's shop, and in the chase which follows, the shop is almost wrecked. Peggy succeeds in imprisoning the bull in a closet. Bob soon afterward shares a similar incarceration to which he makes an emphatic protest.

An hour later Norton receives a telephone message from his son's lady love. He is ordered to call at Peggy's shop and pay a ransom for his dog. Norton yields and after paying the cost price for the dog's release, is staggered when he finds that he must also pay a ransom for his son, who all this time has been languishing in the closet. Norton tells Peggy that all he cares for is the dog. Peggy asserts that she does not want his son either. Bob is turned over to his father, who leads out his son and his dog.

At this point Peggy's heart manifests itself. Finding she is going to lose Bob, she barters with Norton for his son and offers the check she has just received for the wreck of her shop. The millionaire's heart is touched. His son has proved to be worth $500 after all and while worthless to every one else he is worth that much to Peggy.

Moreover, she possesses the common sense which a boy of Bob's type needs in a life partner, and besides she is a very lovely young woman. Norton tears up Peggy's check and writes another, one that is a very substantial foundation of their matrimonial structure.

THE DOCTOR OF THE AFTERNOON ARM (Two Parts—April 14).—The cast: Dr. Rolfe (Sidney Bracy); Sue Kinsman (Edith Roberts); Lou Loring (Sydell Dowling); Ray Kinsman (Paul Kelly); "Pious" Pete (Sam Drane); Dan Clancy (George MacQuarrie). Adapted and produced by Robert F. Hill from the story by Norman Duncan.

Dr. Rolfe is a man of good breeding who has gone to the Northwest to practice medicine. He becomes acquainted with the woman who runs The Afternoon Arm Saloon in Dawson City in the early days of the first gold rush. The doctor has become a confirmed drunkard and loses his self-respect. In Dawson City lives a pair of orphans, Sue Kinsman and her brother, Ray. The boy is far gone with consumption. He does not want Sue to go to Dr. Rolfe because he is prejudiced against him. She finds the doctor drunk in the saloon. Pious Pete, who sits in the Afternoon Arm, reading the Bible, offers to go with Sue to see her brother. She accepts, and when Pete gets a look at Ray he tells her that the boy is in a very bad condition, and together they pray at his bedside. Subsequently the boy regains sufficient strength to be out of immediate danger and Sue attributes this to the result of her praying. She is now supporting Ray by working as a bar-maid in the Afternoon Arm. She leaves Ray in Peter's care.

Lou Loring, who runs the Afternoon Arm, is jealous of Sue when she sees the girl in conversation with the doctor and she tells her to go about her work. That night a gang of miners come to the saloon with bags filled with nuggets. One of the miners, "Big" Dan Clancy, is drunk when he gets there. As Sue waits on him, he looks her over and tries to embrace her, but the doctor, who has been playing the piano, intervenes, and a fight ensues in which the doctor is badly beaten up. To save himself, he grabs a chair and in his endeavor to strike Clancy with it he knocks down the overhead light. Shots are fired and when the lamps are again lighted the doctor is lying across a table with a bullet shot in his shoulder. He is thrown out. The doctor takes the bullet out of his shoulder, and Sue nurses him back to health, and upon his recovery he promises her to stop drinking.

Ray has occasion to go to the saloon where the Loring woman intimates that improper relations exist between his sister and the doctor. Thereupon the boy goes to the doctor and requests him to put a stop to the gossip caused by his association with Sue, and the doctor promises that he will be more careful of his sister's reputation.

Lou, still determined to get Sue into her power, now approaches "Big" Dan Clancy and tells him that the girl is too virtuous and that she will assist him to bring about her ruin. Acting on Lou's suggestion, Clancy goes to Sue's cabin, steals the girl with a couple of thugs and ties the boy to a chair. Ray breaks loose, smashes the door open with a chair, and rushes to the doctor's office.

Meanwhile Clancy succeeds in carrying the girl up to a loft over the saloon. When Sue appeals to the Loring woman to save her the only response is a slap in the face and Lou then goes downstairs to gloat over Sue's contemplated ruin. The doctor now arrives with Ray and threatens violence to the Loring woman. She starts upstairs to warn Clancy, who, hearing the noise in the saloon, pulls his gun and shoots down the stairway. His bullet hits Lou as she is going up to warn him and she drops dead on the stairs.

The doctor, seeing that the man from above is desperate, pulls out his gun and shoots to kill, hitting Clancy, who falls headlong down the stairs into the saloon. Ray then brings his sister, down from the loft while the doctor holds the rough crowd at bay with his gun to prevent their interference. Then the doctor sees that Sue and Ray get out of the saloon in safety.

JOKER.

HUBBY PUTS ONE OVER (April 15).—The cast: Binks (William Franey); Mrs. Binks (Gale Henry); Mr. Drew (Charles Conklin); La Belle (Lilian Peacock); the butler (Milburn Moranti). Written and produced by Allen Curtis.

Mr. and Mrs. Binks having risen to sudden affluence, are enjoying the "high tides" of society. The new role fits Mrs. J. Pottsworth Binks like a glove, but Binks is true to his raising and frequently thinks with envy of the happy care-free days when he was a common laborer. Mrs. Binks receives an invitation to a swell reception.

At the time she is thinking over what she will wear, Binks has found an old acquaintance, Smith, who is a billposter, and the two are ardently admiring a poster of "La Belle," who is billed to appear at a local theater. Binks is very much attracted and Smith promises to introduce him to the lady. Binks is so struck with the girl that he invites her to a supper that night, not knowing of the prior invitation his wife has in mind for him. At the theater he also makes the acquaintance of a Mr. Drew, who is a wizard at impersonations.

Binks returns home and receives a severe tongue lashing from his wife for returning so late. He makes a good excuse and she hurries him into his dress suit for the reception. Binks tries in vain to think of a good excuse to get away, but it is not until they are on the way to the entertainment that the bright idea of getting Drew to impersonate him comes into his mind. He acts on the suggestion and escapes from his wife. La Belle is hurrying with her dressing to keep the date with Binks and the latter soon comes to terms with Mr. Drew. Drew leaves for the reception after Binks tells him that he will have no trouble recognizing Mrs. Binks, as she is in a class of her own. Binks and La Belle hurry to keep the dinner engagement.

Drew finds his better half, for the time being, without any trouble at all. In fact she is laying for him. He almost forgets he is to be Binks. As the evening wears on, Drew (Binks) gets interested in some of the younger girls and his wife almost has a fit. To spite him she flirts with a count, but Binks never sees her at all. Thereupon she angrily takes him home. Binks and La Belle are enjoying a fine time, when La Belle's husband suddenly turns up. Unknown to her he was a waiter in the restaurant and things become pretty warm. Binks escapes, hurries on home and hides just as his wife and Drew come in. There are many funny situations when Binks tries to resume his regular role, while Drew tries to escape. They finally get straight and Drew gets away without Mrs. Binks being any the wiser. Binks decides that there shall be no more little trips on "The Great White Way" for him, as he has had a narrow escape.

GOLD SEAL.

THE VOICE OF THE TEMPTER (Gold Seal—Three Reels—April 11).—The cast: Ralph Hartley (Juan de la Cruz); Fern Roberts (Stella Razet); Joe Ramsey (Eddie Poll). Written by Olga Printzlau. Produced by E. J. Le Saint.

When Ralph Hartley's uncle died, Ralph had to find a cousin whom he had never met and marry her, in order to claim his share of the fortune. He discovers her to be Fern Roberts, a little waitress in a cheap cafe. He enters the cafe and orders a meal in order to better study her. She politely reminds him that "she is not the menu card." Ralph leaves the cafe after her promise to visit him at his home that night and learn the details of the will. Fern tells her sweetheart, a tough bully, of the news.

Ralph says she can be free after the ceremony and they are married. Fern lives in luxury. Her sweetheart visits her and the servants spread scandal.

Ralph in wrath calls Fern before him one night when she comes home late from a theater with Joe. She reminds him that he gave her absolute freedom when they married. As the days pass, Joe urges Fern to elope with him and she consents. She goes to Ralph and tells him that she is going away that night with Joe. He controls himself and with a calm bow wishes her all the joy possible. They are speeding away and out on a lonely road, another car follows them. A few shots are fired by a masked man and the rear tire of Joe's car is punctured. Joe gets out to discover what the trouble is, and two masked men tell him and Fern is kidnapped in the other car. At last they draw up to a lodge in the mountains. She is carried inside. She recognizes her husband. He compels her to be calm and tells her he has stood caprices long enough. He teaches her the art of housekeeping, at all times being met with sullen looks or pouts. His patience at the end of the month dies away as hopeless. She walks out into the woods disconsolate. It is spring and the wild natural woods are filled with love. She goes back to the cabin and leans against the doorway, sadly thinking. At the close of the day, Ralph returns resolving to take Fern back to the city at once. He opens the door, and to his surprise, the room is immaculate and neat and the table set for the evening meal. He calls her, but no answer comes. He opens the door to his room and sees her fixing a dainty spray of wild flowers upon his dresser. She turns as he calls her and shyly comes to him. Lowering her head on his breast she confesses that she wants to stay there with him.

BISON.

THE RIVAL PILOTS (Two Parts—April 15). The cast: Jack Worth (Lee Hill); Steve Burns (L. C. Schuman); Margaret Mayburn (Margaret Mayburn); Dave Mayburn ("Buster" Emmons); Superintendent (E. N. Wallick). Scenario by Wright Roberts. Produced by Henry McRae.

Jack Worth is the youngest engineer on the system and has the cleanest record. Margaret Mayburn, who has charge of one of the Harvey Houses, is admired by Jack, but she, having the care and support of an invalid mother and younger brothers, has put aside his proposal. Steve Burns, another engineer, is an admirer of the girl and he hates Worth. He learns of Jack's appointment with Margaret to take her for a ride in his Ford, and hurries to the house shortly after they leave. Dave, Margaret's young brother, tells Steve of his hatred for Jack and also of how he tampered with the machine so that it will not run far.

Steve secures a rented machine and offers to take the boy with him for a ride, intending to overtake the disabled car and take Margaret away from Jack. When Jack's auto reaches the country both tires then blow out. Jack proposes to the girl and finally overrules her objections. She agrees to the marriage and they set an early date. Steve has been unable to find the two and returns to work in an ugly humor.

Next day Jack pulls his train into a siding at a junction station where all the railroad men are accustomed to eat dinner. Although it is strictly against the rules to leave a train without anyone in charge, the practice has become general and the train was stationary on the side track. The discharged fireman whom Steve has inveigled into helping him discredit Jack, starts the train running wild. The fireman sees the train starting out with no one in the cab and hurries to the lunch house. Jack, however, manages to stop the engine by racing after it on horseback. He is taken off the passenger run and assigned a freight run on a distant division. Having discredited Jack as an engineer, Steve now seeks to ruin him with the girl. This he does by means of a letter supposedly to Jack from a girl who claims that they are to be married. He gets this letter to Margaret through Dave. She breaks her engagement with Jack and marries Steve.

Four years pass. Jack has again been given a passenger run and returns to his old run. Steve has become careless and takes to drink. The married life of Margaret and Steve is not very happy and the only bright spot is the presence of a little child which has been named Margaret. Jack has made the acquaintance of the child and taken a strange liking to her. One day Margaret finds him and the child together and confesses that she is the mother, and Steve her husband.

Steve becomes violently angry at Jack because of the friendship between him and the child and orders Jack never to speak to her again. Returning home, he abuses his wife, accusing her of again seeking Jack out. One day as Jack is going to work he meets the little child, who is crying because her doll is broken. He promises to get her a new one and absently places the doll in his breast pocket. Steve broods over his supposed injuries and determines to kill Jack. He slips beside the track and as Jack's train is speeding on, deliberately aims at his heart and fires. Jack sinks down. The fireman rushes to his side. Jack is only stunned, the doll having saved his life.

Steve, unable to find out why his shot was not fatal, determines to try the same trick the next day. The child has wandered away from the house and is playing on the track. Unable to get her to leave the track, the little girl in whose charge she is entrusted, hurries home to tell her mother. Jack and his fireman are talking when the fireman suddenly looks out and sees the child. With a quick word to his fireman, Jack hurries on to the pilot and rescues the child. Steve, in the act of shooting sees the rescue and hurries away.

Margaret's brother, Dave, has returned home from school and is more of a man. Disgusted with Steve's brutality, he remembers the episode of the letter and determines to learn the truth of it. He corners Steve and makes him confess that he had persuaded another girl to write the letter. When Jack arrives at the station with the child he is warmly congratulated by all his friends. Margaret comes in for the child and realizes that Jack has always possessed her love. Steve, peering through the window, sees this in her face and realizing now how cowardly he has been, takes the best way out and shoots himself. Jack takes the widow and child under his care and there is a prospect that in the near future the child will have a good father.

LATHERED TRUTH (Two Parts—April 12).—The cast: Karl Clifford (Harry C. Myers); Selman von Sable (Rosemary Theby). Written by Norbert Lusk. Produced by Harry C. Myers.

Selma von Sable skimps along on her earnings and on her off hours cuts a dash on Fifth avenue, where she passes for a member of the smart set. Through a friend she meets Karl Clifford, leading man and producer for a moving picture concern, and bluffs him into thinking she is a member of one of the oldest families in New York.

The bluff is so effective that Karl is ashamed of his business and does not confide what is uppermost in his mind—his search for a type to fill the place of the star who is laid up with an accident. He never thinks of the real Selma in that connection nor does she confess that she is a daughter of the rural districts and longs to be an actress and queen it over an army of admirers.

Things come to such a pass that Karl is forced to abandon all hope of continuing his interrupted production. He stays up all night reading scenarios for a new story. But the writers are apparently all graduates of correspondence schools. He starts to the studio to dismiss his people, stopping on the way to be shaved. The barber shop the same he has before patronized—is now run by a woman and the barbers are women, too. Karl, under the soothing influence of the chair and soft hands, falls asleep. An impatient customer enters and rather than lose his patronage the proprietress, who is about to shave Karl, asks him to get into the next chair.

Then she rushes to the alcove in which the newly arrived barberess is donning her apron, and turns over to her the dozing Karl, while the proprietress operates on the other man. As the girl scrapes the lather from his face she recognizes, from a picture that she has just seen, the well-known moving picture man.

It excites her to the point of cutting him. Karl awakes with an ouch! and sees before him, in her simple apron, the very type of girl he wants. It is Selma von Sable. He snatches her up, leaps into his car at the curb and with lather spread everywhere, bursts into the studio with his find. Need this synopsis go any further?

THE DOUBLE'S TROUBLES (Two Parts—April 16).—The cast: Countess Troubleskoy and the chambermaid (Alice Howell); Mr. Oscar Yeppenger (Harry Coleman); Count von Garlic (Bill Bevin); an accomplice (Dick Smith).

The hotel chambermaid, who bears a striking resemblance to the beautiful Countess Troubleskoy, envies her very much and wishes she could wear that lady's dresses if only for one night. She is prompted to this desire by her love for Mr. Oscar Yeppenger, who has refused to even look at the chambermaid.

The Countess is really a female Raffles and the head of a band of pickpockets who immediately deposit their ill-gotten gains with her. The Countess conceives a great idea for getting more loot by giving a ball at the fashionable hotel at which she is stopping, but unfortunately for the Countess an old flame who is very jealous follows her to her room and after a short quarrel strangles her and leaves her alone. This is witnessed by the chambermaid who on finding that the Countess is in a faint, appropriates her clothes and attends the ball. She is mistaken for the Countess and Mr. Oscar is having the time of his life until the crooks begin to deposit their stolen loot with the chambermaid, who, thinking to gain the favor of Oscar, in turn gives them to him.

The crooks, seeing this, start trouble for Oscar and they in turn are joined by the desperate Baron, who makes matters still more unpleasant by throwing a few bombs among the guests. At the end the hotel is wrecked and the chambermaid repents that she ever tried to wear borrowed finery.

THE SHAM REALITY (April 16).—The cast: James Brooks (Francis Ford); his wife (Grace Cunard); Brooks' friend (Irving Lipner). Scenario by Grace Cunard. Produced by Francis Ford.

James Brooks is an actor, and while his wife is away he decides to move to new apartments. He secures the new quarters and when the key is delivered he places same in his vest pocket. His wife telegraphs she is coming home and he in turn wires her that he is unable to meet her, but will have a boy at the train with the key to their new flat.

Brooks goes to the rooms of his friend, who is working in a play with him, and the two actors begin to go over the script of the play. The friend receives a call and leaves Brooks alone in the room, telling him to be sure to lock the door. When Brooks leaves he absently puts his friend's key in his trousers pocket, and arriving at the desk of the apartment house, places the key to his friend's flat in an envelope, instructing the boy to meet his wife at the train and deliver the key to her.

That night the friend and his wife arrive home and have to get the landlady to open their flat. Later Brooks joins them and they talk of the play. Left alone with the friend's wife, Brooks becomes very attentive to her and this is noticed by the husband, who becomes enraged. Not knowing they are watched she and Brooks carry on a love affair.

Mrs. Brooks arrives at the apartment and finding the boy at the desk asleep she decides to go on up to the apartment, as it is shown on the key. Hearing noises in the room she peers through the keyhole and sees her husband making love to another woman. She unlocks the door and enters. Brooks jumps up nervously and tells his wife he was only rehearsing their new play. His friend, in a moment of rage, fires at his wife and she falls over backward.

As Brooks and his wife laugh and joke with another friend who has dropped in, the body of the actor's wife is shown apparently lying stiff in death. At the end of the play one is left to puzzle out whether the shooting actually occurred or was a part of the rehearsal.

ZOO ARRIVALS FROM SOUTH AMERICA (On Same Reel as Foregoing).—One of the most interesting and strangest beasts in the world is the sloth, a descendant of the prehistoric creatures who attained enormous size and fed upon vegetation, having no means apparently of defending themselves. This film shows this strange creature, his appearance, his extremely deliberate method of locomotion, and his constant regard for his stomach. He is continually looking at the ground and apparently figuring where his next bite is coming from.

A near relative of the sloth is the giant ant eater, a toothless animal armed with enormous claws with which it is possible for him to withstand the attack of the most ferocious of the jungle hunters, the jaguar. This strange animal feeds almost entirely upon ants and inasmuch as ants live in queer places in the tropics he is provided with a long slender tongue which he can insert into crevices of trees and other entrances to ant hills.

Another strange creature coming from South America is the Matamata, a hideous but amusing turtle, which attains enormous size and is provided with a head which is so grisly that it must have been designed to frighten its enemies to death.

POWERS.

THE BRUSH INDUSTRY (April 6).—This interesting split-reel shows the manner in which brushes are made from the raw product, which comes from the bogs of Poland, China, Siberia and the Indies, right up to the finished product. In the countries where the bristle industry is important the farmer ties little bunches of the hair on the hog's back together, and when the warm weather comes the bristles in their little packages fall out. They are then sorted, straightened, combed and divided into colors and qualities as desired. They are thoroughly soaked, washed, bleached and dried. The film then shows the manner in which they are inserted and cemented into the ferrule and thence into the leather-bound brush.

THE DANCE OF LOVE (on Same Reel as Foregoing).—The first dance performed is the Dance of the Serpent, to the music of Boccalari's "Dance of the Serpents," beneath which little Miss Baskette performs evolutions which would do credit to a dancer of three times her years and ten times her experience. Next comes an Egyptian dance to the music of Auber's "Crown Diamond Overture," followed by a Polka Coquette to the Dance of the Honey Bees, by Richmond. A ballet follows, to Theadore Bendix's "Crickets Serenade."

NESTOR.

PUTTING HER FOOT IN IT (April 10).—The cast: Randolph Cutter (Neal Burns), the bride (Billie Rhodes); the groom (Ray Gallagher). Written by Al. E. Christie. Produced by Horace Davey.

Mr. Cutter, proprietor of a shoe store, finds business very slack. Billie and Ray are in the throes of their honeymoon and while seeing the town, the girl decides she needs a new pair of shoes. They wander into Cutter's establishment to select a suitable pair.

Customers being few and far between, Cutter waits on the newcomers himself and his effusive politeness rankles in the bridegroom's chest. The bride appreciates the personal attention given her by the proprietor, but Ray takes her away and refuses to allow her to trade there. They go down the street quarreling.

Mrs. Newlywed finally breaks away from her husband and returns to the store and buys a pair of shoes, leaving them at the store. The next day Ray meets his lawyer for a business conference. As they leave the office Ray sees Cutter loaded down with a mass of boxes and begins to suspect that Cutter is paying attention to his wife.

His wife, meanwhile, has phoned the shoe store and requested Cutter to bring the shoes she had left. He not only takes the pair she selected, but also various others, an assortment, thinking he may sell her more shoes. In order to be sure of his suspicions, Ray phones the shoe store and one of the clerks tells him that Mr. Cutter is fitting a particular lady customer at her home. The husband imagines the worst, and securing a gun he hurries on home.

He bursts into the house and finds Cutter fitting a pair of shoes to his wife's feet. He does not wait for explanations but begins shooting and he and Cutter have it up and down all through the house. Cutter escapes for a wonder, but still the irate husband pursues him and it is only when he reaches the protecting bulk of a traffic policeman that he stops to draw a breath.

They explain to the officer their versions of the affair and the officer is successful in making peace between them. Cutter returns to the house for his shoes and as a peace offering presents the bride with a beautiful pair of shoes. Ray apologizes for his roughness and promises Cutter that all their trading will be done with him in the future.

SOME HONEYMOON (April 14).—The cast: The bride (Billie Rhodes); the bridegroom (Lee Moran); the best man (Neal Burns). Scenario by Palmer Bowman. Produced by Al. E. Christie.

After a delightful wedding breakfast the friends of Lee and his bride ask about their intended honeymoon. Lee tells them that on account of the high cost of living their honeymoon will be taken right there in the city, but the friends will not know where they are. His best man makes a bet that he and his friends can locate the honeymooners before 10 o'clock that night, and Lee takes him up, with the provision that they be given five minutes' start. They all agree.

Lee and his bride make good their escape and are wondering where to take refuge when a newsboy insists on Lee buying a paper. Lee idly glances over the paper and finds an ad for a maid and a bell hop at a popular hotel. He and Billie decide to try the jobs. After a short talk they go to a nearby pawnshop and get different suits of clothes. Lee disguises as a woman, while Billie is made the bell hop. They call upon the hotel manager and are given the jobs. Their friends begin to scour the town and Neal, calling his friends, who are members of the police department, to his assistance, they soon have detectives on the lookout for the newlyweds.

The newlyweds are having some honeymoon. Things run pretty smooth until one of the guests of the hotel insists that Lee help her take her bath, while on the other hand a man under the influence of liquor, insists that Billie put him to bed. The two are about to throw up their jobs but manage to successfully eliminate these difficulties. Lee and Billie are consoling each other in the hall when Neal and some friends stop in searching for the newlyweds. Billie hears Neal tell the manager he is looking for newlyweds and the manager informs him he has none in the hotel. Neal calls Billie to get him some cigars, and when she returns, he notices her wedding ring. He comments on this fact to his friends. Billie, fearing they are about to be discovered, tells Lee, and he haughtily informs the visitors that he is the bell hop's wife, and "he" allowed "him" to wear "her" wedding ring.

Neal and his friends fail to locate the couple. That night Lee and Billie resign their jobs and boarding a taxicab order the driver to drive about until 10 o'clock. They then return to the house. Neal and his friends are all gathered together and are forced to acknowledge that Lee has put one over on them. Billie then shows her rings and tells him what a narrow escape they had. Lee collects the five hundred dollars and is thus able to take a honeymoon more appropriate with the times.

LAEMMLE.

THE BRINK (April 12).—The cast: Marjorie Wilson (Myrtle Gonzales); Albert Wilson (Val Paul); Frank Fitzgerald (Fred Church); maid in Wilson home (Miss Perry); chauffeur for Val (Wm. Crinley). Written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Albert Wilson is having a hard struggle to keep his head above financial waters. Several years before, Wilson and his wife had left their country home to go to the city where Wilson expected to become prominent. After the struggle for wealth, Wilson's wife realizes poverty has its good points. She seldom sees her husband except at meal times. At night he is generally worn out and uncommunicative. His wife mildly reminds him of their happy past. Abstracted and planning for the morrow's battle, her husband does not hear her. She is very much hurt and leaves him.

The next day Wilson has all he can do to carry on the fight. His wife visits a friend and while there renews acquaintance with Frank E. Fitzgerald, a man about town. Fitzgerald notes her brooding and offers her sympathy. He entertains her and gets her mind away from her trouble. Fitzgerald suggests that she accompany him to a certain club. She reneges at first, but makes a half-way promise and he agrees to call that night for her. Myrtle reaches home and on second thought realizes how her action would appear should she go, and writes a note of refusal to Fitzgerald. Fitzgerald answers the note and tells her that he will keep the appointment.

In fear lest she finally agree to go with him Myrtle calls her husband up and pleads with him to return home early. He is in the midst of a crisis in his affairs answering her hurriedly. His actions hurt Myrtle the more, and in the reaction that follows she prepares to leave with Fitzgerald when he calls that night.

Wilson, meanwhile, has passed the turning point and his fortune is safe. He realizes how neglectful he has been to his wife and hurries home. As he turns into the long drive home a racing car suddenly cuts across in front of him, and, making the turn too short, is overturned. Wilson hurries to the wrecked car and finds a man underneath. With the assistance of his driver, the man is extricated and they hurry home with him. Myrtle, waiting impatiently, is much alarmed when her husband enters with Fitzgerald and explains about the accident. Wilson notices her agitation but thinks it is only due to excitement.

While she phones for a doctor, Wilson looks through the man's pockets in an effort to identify him. He finds a letter from his wife and realizes the brink to which he has almost driven her. He tears up the note and when his wife returns he tells her that he has turned over a new leaf and that while they will not live in the country they will have a country home in the city. Fitzgerald is pronounced to be only slightly injured and Myrtle, realizing his influence over her, begs to have him removed from the house. Fitzgerald sees the defeat of his plans and leaves the now happy husband and wife together.

PUBLIC APPROVAL (Three arts—April 13).—The cast: Richard Newton (Ray Hanford); Elliott Cook (E. Evers); Steve Aldrich (M. Blevins); Bertha Deverill (Agnes Vernon); Esther Newton (Marguerite Gibson); Alvin Parker (Duke Worne). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Leon D. Kent.

Elliott Cook, a rising young attorney, and Alvin Parker, superintendent of the Dartmouth mills, controlled by Steve Aldrich, political boss of the town, are fast friends and chums. Richard Newton is the banker of the city and is held in high esteem. His motherless daughter, Esther, and Parker have long been sweethearts and the boy's bashfulness has been the only thing which kept them from being engaged. Cook is engaged to Bertha Deveril, a beautiful girl, and they are only waiting to set the day, upon the outcome of Cook's hope of securing a diplomatic post in Europe.

Aldrich is going over the available material to use for a candidate for mayor and decides upon Newton for several reasons, among them being that he is highly esteemed; can contribute liberally to the fund and mainly because Aldrich has met Esther, taken a liking to her and desires to win her for his own.

Alvin proposes to the girl and finally gains her father's consent. Soon afterwards Newton is offered the nomination, which he accepts. From the moment of his entrance into the public eye, Newton's manner changes and he becomes more autocratic, self-satisfied and haughty. Cook receives his appointment and Bertha promises to wait for his return.

Aldrich begins to hound Parker, knowing that he stands in the way of his winning Esther and the boy's bitterness is complete when Newton, urged by Aldrich, forbids him the house. Esther is heartbroken but is forced to consent to her father's wishes. Newton, confident of winning the nomination, looks around for a wife. He has long coveted Bertha, but heretofore his knowledge that Cook held her love has held him in check, becoming arrogant over his popularity, he finally sues for her hand. Her parents, thinking of the bright future the girl will have, exert their persuasion and she is forced to accept.

A year passes and Cook returns from Europe, covered with honors. On his arrival in New York he receives a message from Bertha asking that their engagement be broken. He agrees, not without wondering what is the cause of her change of heart. With a heavy heart he starts homeward.

Aldrich and Newton have become constant companions and the former presses his attentions upon Esther upon every occasion while Newton, being under obligations to Aldrich, constantly impresses upon the girl her duty to him. Newton and his friends are having a big celebration the night of the election and Alvin calls at the house but is thrown out. Later he returns and gets Esther to secretly leave with him and they get married, returning home without any one learning the secret. Newton is elected. The next night a big reception is to be given in celebration of the victory and incidentally to announce the engagement of Aldrich and Esther.

Alvin is discharged from his position the same day that Cook returns and is met by his friends who stage a big demonstration. Cook learns the details of the election and how Bertha is affianced to Newton. Alvin seeks out Cook for comfort, tells him of his troubles and is heartened by his old friend. Cook attends the reception, but persuades Alvin to remain at his (Cook's) apartment, fearing that the boy will get into trouble if he goes.

Cook and Bertha meet at the reception and she begins to feel a desire for Cook and condemns herself for allowing their engagement to be broken, but through her parents' persuasions still lets it be known that she and Newton will be married. Alvin, unable to bear the thought of his wife being alone and fearing Aldrich's influence upon her, secretly comes to the house and, entering from the rear, comes upon Esther and Aldrich alone in a room. The politician is forcing his attentions upon her. Alvin enters, tells of their marriage and is attacked by Aldrich. In the struggle he strangles Aldrich to death. Cook, worrying about Esther being with Aldrich, comes into the room and learns of the murder. He forces Alvin to leave and slips Esther out so that when the body is discovered he is accused of the crime, arrested and taken to jail.

When Bertha sees him in handcuffs she senses a revulsion of feeling. Bertha then tries to comfort Esther and they all believe her wild grief is over the death of Aldrich.

Alvin, left to himself, suffers the torments of the damned. His guilty conscience will not be stilled and like a mad man he hurries to his wife's house where he makes a clean breast of the affair. Newton, fearful of the effects of the affair upon his public reputation, vainly tries to get Alvin to allow Cook to bear the blame, but this is even too much for Bertha and she denounces Alvin for deserting his friend. He in turn accuses her of doing the same, but determines to bear the blame of the murder.

Cook is released. Alvin's trial is sensational but he is released on the plea of self-defense. Newton humbly retires from public life. Cook swings into public favor and is boosted for next mayor and Bertha, repentant, seeks and gains his forgiveness. Alvin and Esther at last happy, settle down very quietly.

RED FEATHER.

BRIGADIER GERARD (Five Parts—April 10).—The cast: Brigadier Gerard (Lewis Waller); Countess de Rocquelauer (Madge Titheradge); Napoleon (A. E. George); Talleyrand (Fernand Mailly); Pierre (Frank Cochrane); Agnes (Blanche Forsythe); Major Olivier (R. F. Symons); General Coulaincourt (A. A. Leigh); Jacques, Gerard's cousin (Philip Ronouff).

Napoleon, realizing that he is tottering to a fall, and knowing Talleyrand and all Paris is against him, is anxious to secure certain papers he concealed some years previously in the Tuileries. A winged messenger is despatched to the Countess de Rocquelaure requesting her, as one who knows where the papers are hidden, to obtain them.

Meanwhile Captain Etienne Gerard succeeds in avoiding an Austrian ambuscade and arrives in camp with the remnant of his troops. Napoleon orders him and his men to attach themselves to the Hussars of Conflans. In the mess-room Gerard tells of his exploits. During his temporary absence, and believing him to be nothing more nor less than an idle braggart, the officer decides to score off him. Returning, Gerard recommences his story, but quickly sees that his listeners are scoffing at him. He resents this and draws his sword ready to take on all comers.

Napoleon, requiring a trustworthy messenger to proceed to the countess for the papers, is recommended to Captain Gerard. General Coulaincourt decides before entrusting him with the mission to test his loyalty. He enters the mess-room just as Gerard and Major Olivier are about to engage in combat. The general requests a word with Gerard in private. As a test of loyalty the general suggests that as Napoleon is near the end, Gerard should throw in his lot with Talleyrand. Gerard, who is one of Napoleon's most loyal followers, immediately draws his sword and would slay the general, but the plot is disclosed to him. Taken before Napoleon, he is given his instructions and proceeds forthwith on his journey to Paris.

The countess has in the meantime been successful in securing the papers from the Tuileries, but her every movement has been watched by Talleyrand's spies, who report to their master what they have witnessed Talleyrand goes to the countess' house and, not being successful in securing the papers by diplomacy, orders his men to obtain them by force. They are successful in doing this, but before Talleyrand can leave the house Gerard arrives. Talleyrand and his followers conceal themselves in the hall. Gerard goes to the countess. Talleyrand arrives back home with the papers in the pocket of his cloak. He orders the return of the presents which have in the past been showered upon him by Napoleon.

At this moment Gerard is announced. By means of a trap he is made a prisoner and placed in one of the presents going back to Napoleon—namely, a wardrobe. The countess decides to appeal to Talleyrand for the return of the papers and is ushered into the room where the captain is prisoner. She opens the wardrobe, discovers Gerard and releases him. Talleyrand is in turn made prisoner by Gerard and forced into Gerard's late place of captivity. Disguising himself in Talleyrand's cloak, in which the papers are, unknown to Gerard, still concealed, he and the countess are successful in making their escape. In removing the wardrobe Talleyrand's secretary, desiring to have a parting jeer at Gerard, opens the door and is astounded to find his master within. Being released, Talleyrand orders the pursuit of Gerard.

At a roadside inn, where Gerard and the countess are resting, the pursuers come up with them, but Gerard outwits them and is successful in escaping. Before doing so he dispatches a message by the maid at the inn to Napoleon, telling him there is something in the wardrobe that will interest him. The wardrobe duly arrives and the anger of Napoleon, on opening it and finding it empty, knows no bounds. Gerard and the countess appear and Gerard places Talleyrand's cloak, which he is still carrying, on a chair. Napoleon vents his wrath on Gerard, and, notwithstanding the countess' pleading, orders him back to quarters. The countess and Gerard have fallen deeply in love and she goes to seek out Gerard. Gerard, sick at heart, is about to end his own life when the rally of Chamberon brings him back. The countess tells him she will make a final appeal to Napoleon and proceeds to see him. Gerard enters the mess-room and resumes the interrupted duel with Major Olivier. The countess pleads with all a woman's skill with Napoleon, but he is adamant and refuses to give away. Seating himself, he throws Talleyrand's cloak on the ground and in doing so the papers fall out of the pocket. In an instant his mood changes and he goes to find Gerard. Entering the mess-room, Napoleon congratulates Gerard on the success he has met with in his mission and creates him a brigadier.

THANHOUSER.

FEAR (Three Parts—March 29).—The cast: A tradesman (Robert Walker); his wife (Peggy Burke); his friend (Howard M. Mitchell); Jasper (Justus D. Barnes).

The story revolves around an ungrateful man who robs his benefactor of his wife and his gold. A gypsy warns the interloper that the man he has wronged will take the woman, the gold and his life. He pays little heed to the words of the gypsy. The woman he ran away with soon tires of him, and plans a second elopement. He surprises his rival and the woman robbing his safe, and during an exchange of shots the woman is killed.

It is then that he is overcome by fear and flees from place to place with the haunting dread of being accused of the murder of the woman. He scans each new face with a close scrutiny, fearful of encountering the man he had wronged. Finally he meets him under peculiar circumstances, and the fear that haunts him causes his death.

THE ROMANCE OF THE HOLLOW TREE (Two Parts—April 11).—The cast: Millionaire inventor (Wayne Arey); his sweetheart (Kathryn Adams); millionaire's friend (Jere Austin); foreign attache (Ernest Howard).

The girl lived in the country and had always believed she was well to do, for her father told her he had a large sum of money which he had "hidden away." He never informed her of the hiding place, and his sudden death prevented him from telling the secret on his deathbed, so the girl continued to live in the country very poor and shabby.

In secret she greatly admired a young man who resided on an adjoining estate. She heard reports that he had invented a wonderful submarine boat, and the general belief was that the government would accept it. The girl often thought of the young man, but he never thought of his shabby little neighbor, and their acquaintance had not progressed beyond the formal bow exchanged when they met in the village streets.

The plans for the young man's submarine were temporarily kept in the safe in his study, and one night these plans and $10,000 in cash, which the inventor had drawn to pay off some of the workers on his boat, were stolen. It did not develop until later that the thief was a house guest of the inventor, a former college mate of his and a man in whom he implicitly trusted. This chap, however, was hard up financially and had listened to the tempting offers by a representative of one of the great European powers so to gain money to pay for his own dissipations he robbed his friend.

The plans he sent in a letter directed to himself, but the money was too bulky to dispose of in that way. There was a possibility that he might be searched so he hid the money in a hollow tree on an estate near his home intending to get it on his way to the station the following day. Unfortunately for the schemer, the girl got the money. Her pet cat was chased by a dog took refuge in this identical tree and while trying to induce the feline to come down the girl discovered the bundle of bank bills. As they were on her own property she naturally believed they had been hidden by her father. She had recently received an invitation to visit a cousin in the city, but had been afraid to accept it because her cousin was wealthy and she herself poor. Now the situation was changed, and part of the strangely discovered cash was spent for up-to-date clothing. At her cousin's house the girl made "quite a hit" and among others she met there was the young inventor, who for the first time took notice of her. The girl learned in time of the robbery and found to her horror that the cash she had been spending so freely really belonged to the young inventor, but her woman's wit enabled her to locate the thief and in a dramatic way she recovered the stolen submarine plans, caused the arrest of the wicked friend, and brought happiness to the young inventor who soon asked her hand and was accepted.

FALSTAFF.

SAPVILLE'S STALWART SON (April 10).—The cast: Son (Frank E. McNish); friend (Claude Cooper).

The man had come from the country determined to make a real city fortune, and he succeeded beyond his fondest expectations. Some luck in "War Bride" stock had put him on easy street, and everything he touched showed a financial profit, but he never forgot the dear little village of Sapville and bored the members of his club by constantly proclaiming the joys and delights of life in the open.

Most unfortunately for him it happened that Sapville was holding a celebration in honor of some anniversary or other and had cordially invited all of its old sons and daughters to revisit the town for a week and renew old acquaintances. The hero of this story read about the celebration in the newspapers, for he had not kept in touch with his old home. He knew, however—or at least believed—that he would receive a royal welcome, and this theory of his was scoffed at. He made a bet with one of his fellow-clubmates that he could go to his old town disguised as a tramp and be received "like a king on his throne."

He went to Sapville, but results were not as he had anticipated. The "loyal hearts" did not respond, nobody was glad to see him; everybody shunned and ill-treated him, and he finally made his escape from the home of his childhood as a dead-head passenger on the rear end of a freight train.

A few days later he dropped into his club, paid his wager and told his friends all about it.

"I was treated like a king," he said, "but not the kind of a king I expected. They treated me as if I were King Charles the First of England, but, thank God, I escaped with my head."

THE OVERCROWDED OVERSEA OVERSEER (April 15).—The cast: Overseer (Claude Cooper); his successor (Frank E. McNish).

The caretaker of an estate well out in the country liked his job because he had practically nothing to do. He spent most of his time at the village tavern and was extremely popular with the loafers who hung out there. But every happeness is short lived, and one day the caretaker learned that he had been superseded. His successor was introduced as "Cecil Skidding-Hansom, late valet to the Duke of Bilgewater," and he was to all appearances an extremely unsophisticated Englishman. He had brought a gun along, expecting to have a wild time in America, and this gave the other caretaker an idea which he thought might redound to his own benefit. He told Cecil that the country was extremely lawless, and kindly pointed out to him where danger existed. For example, in the North there were "bad Indians, who would kill you for a shilling." In the East there were "mad dogs—hundreds of them." In the South "is a camp where they are trying to reform murderers," while indicating the West he said mysteriously: "And that way is the most dangerous of all."

Naturally, Cecil Skidding-Hansom was badly scared, and later developments proved he had reason to be. He saw the "mad dogs" and was much alarmed for he did not know that the dogs were the property of the ex-caretaker and his tavern companions. He met a "reformed murderer," who was out on a rampage and escaped from him after an exciting battle, and then by accident he learned that the old caretaker and his friends had been "spoofing" him.

Cecil Skidding-Hansom was a bad man when he was aroused. The next day the "Indians" came, and he was ready for them. They chased him into the reception room of the mansion, and then to their surprise fell through to the floor beneath where they landed in a large tank of water, from which escape was practically impossible, and Cecil Skidding-Hansom added to their sufferings by dropping a note attached as a sail to a small toy boat, the same note reading: "Dear old chaps: You spoofed me, but I'm a sport. Sail my boat around until I come back with the bobbies. (I think you bounders call them police.) Yours cheerily, Cecil Skidding-Hansom."

Cecil remained as caretaker of the house, for nobody ever tried to play any more jokes on him. They found that despite his unsophisticated cockney ways the Oversea Overseer had a hidden punch waiting for people who made fun of him.

CUB.

ALMOST RIGHT (April 14).—The cast: Luke Sharpe (Billy Armstrong); Jigger (Tommy Hayes); bartender (J. A. Howe); proprietor of cabaret (Allen Williams); pianist (E. Harvey); crook (A. VanAntwerp); drunk (Tom McFarland); woman crook (Grace Gibson); cabaret singers (Mme. D'Orcy and Mlle. Ottawa).

Luke Sharpe, a private detective, and his assistant, Jigger, are very much down on their luck or so represent themselves to Beto, the proprietor of a ten cent lodging house—so they secure accommodations for both for a dime, and turn in. When Jigger sees Luke is asleep, and having a little change in his pocket, he sneaks off to a cabaret. There he notices a crook, one very badly wanted by the police and for whom a handsome reward is offered. He also notes that the crook has designs on the purse of a woman (the woman crook) seated at another table. He returns to the lodging house, wakes up Luke, tells him of his discovery; both return to the cabaret, state their profession to the proprietor, the object of their mission, to capture the crook, and arrange to be engaged in the place. The proprietor helps them to disguise themselves, Luke as a waiter and Jigger as a pianist. Luke thinks more of the bar than the demands of his business as a waiter, and after trying to inflict on the patrons a song and breaking all dishes while waiting on them, he suddenly notices the crook snatch the lady's purse and run. He calms the excited patrons by telling them that he and his associate are detectives, to leave the matter in their hands and they will capture the thief. The statement is received with derision, and the proprietor having had enough of them anyway is ably assisted in ejecting them.

They return to their lodging house, and after accusing and abusing one another for the fiasco at the cabaret they drop into their cots. They have not been asleep very long when the crook arrives and gets into a bed close to them. Luke, who has the habit of sleeping with one eye open, notices the crook, and decides when he is asleep to capture him for the reward, but not to say anything to Jigger about his plan. He goes into another room and proceeds to disguise himself as an old miser. Jigger, however, has also noted the crook, and plans to do the same thing as Luke proposes, but remains in the same room to make up his disguise. The crook wakes and sees Jigger making up and determines to settle him. Luke enters as a miser, goes to his cot and engages in the characteristic pastime of counting his money. Jigger, not knowing his partner through the disguise, thinks he is a real miser, and by a trick gets the money. Luke, to keep up the character, so noisily grieves over his loss that he wakes up all the lodgers. The crook tells him that Jigger is the man who robbed him, and commands the miser to take his (the crook's) knife and kill Jigger. During this Jigger has again gone to bed, but with his feet where his head ought to be. Luke has noted this. He stealthily creeps up to the bed and plunges the knife through the open space between Jigger's feet and into the mattress. Jigger jumps out of bed, giving a scare to the crook, while Luke assumes to be scared. At this instant police, who had been chasing the crook, break into the room. The crook being by the door, escapes as they enter, not noticed by the officers. They approach Jigger about the crook. Jigger, still greatly agitated over the attempt on his life, answers: "He's gone, but arrest that man," pointing to Luke, who snatches the long gray-haired wig off and discloses his identity to Jigger. Jigger also removes his disguise and they embrace. This is not the end, for the officers now recognize the two bum detectives and place them under arrest.

WAYS OF THE WORLD (Two Parts—April 3).—The cast: Mary Morrison (Vivian Rich); William Wentworth (Alfred Vosburgh); Harvey Blake (George Periolat).

After her uncle's death, Mary Morrison learns that through her own extravagance his wealth has dwindled down to $50,000, to which she is the heiress. But Harvey Blake, her lawyer, informs her that there is a codicil to the will, and that this money must be held in trust until she marries.

William Wentworth, a young farmer, needs $1,000 badly. He called at Blake's office and Blake sends him to a broker, but Wentworth is unable to obtain a loan. Returning to Blake's office, Wentworth meets Mary as she is leaving the lawyer's office. She asks him if he is married, and when she learns that he is not, tells him that she will give him a thousand dollars if he will marry her at once. Wentworth, seeing a chance to save his farm, agrees. Immediately after they are married Mary informs Wentworth that their acquaintanceship must end forthwith.

Two crooks set Mary down for their victim. They intend to purchase a cheap tract of land, which will be salted with oil. As they are out in the country looking for a prospective piece of property Wentworth chances to overhear their conversation. He warns Blake of Mary's peril. Both Blake and Mary have come to realize that at the present rate of expenditure her inheritance will soon be dissipated. And it occurs to Blake that it would be the best thing for the girl if she should lose her money and be forced to come in contact with a hard and unsympathetic world. To this effect, he schemes with Wentworth, and Mary finally receives a letter from Blake, in which he states that among some of her uncle's papers he has found a note regarding the purchase of oil property, which when developed, should be worth a fortune.

Mary, worrying over the decrease in her bank account, becomes enthused over the proposition. Having deeded over the tract of land to a friend, Mary purchases it, and in so doing spends practically all her money. A little later, Blake notifies her that a dreadful mistake has been made, and that the land that she has bought is absolutely worthless. With the passing of months, Mary is forced to give up her handsome home and move to humbler quarters. While Blake, with the money that Mary has paid out for the land safely put away, watches developments with interest, intending to refund her money when she is thoroughly cured.

Meantime, Wentworth has gotten into further difficulties with the land sharks, and finally he loses his farm, and is forced to seek employment in the city. Mary also has become reduced to her last cent. Entering a small restaurant one day, Blake chances to look up and behind the cashier's desk he sees Mary. Then he finds that the man waiting on him is Wentworth.

Then one day Mary tells Wentworth that once he said that he wished she was a poor girl—but Wentworth realizes that while they are man and wife, and that he loves her, he can say nothing, knowing that she still has wealth. He decides that it is time that the money should be returned to her, and so advises Blake. In the reception room, at the lawyer's office, Mary overhears the two men talking. She bursts in, learns of the scheme that has been played upon her, and angrily denounces Wentworth, who leaves. But Blake soothes her, stating that it was only done for the best, a deduction that Mary has already formed herself as regards her losing her money. Blake comes to Wentworth and tells him that a friend of his has just purchased a farm, and is looking for a manager. He adds that he thinks that Wentworth can obtain the position, and Wentworth accompanies him—back to his own former farm, which he soon discovers has been purchased by Mary—and that it is she who wants him as a manager.

BONDS OF DECEPTION (Three Parts—April 6).—The cast: Allan Gifford (Edward Coxen); Maria Baring (Winnifred Greenwood); Elizabeth (Virginia Fordyce); Major Baring (Dick La Reno); Will Baring (Jack Farrell); George White (George Field).

Major Baring, retired, a stately old soldier, lives alone in a little town with unhappy memories. His son, Will, whom he sent West under an assumed name, has at last fallen into the gravest difficulty and is in prison, while his young wife, Mara Baring, waits with their little girl, Elizabeth, for his regeneration, not knowing of his final downfall.

The Major summons from the busy managing editor's desk of a big city paper, Allan Gifford, a college friend of his son's, and asks him, for Mara's sake, to include Will's name among the dead in a train wreck. Gifford is reluctant to be a party to the deception, but Mara, coming in, unconsciously helps him with her own happy and loving self, to finally consent to the Major's request.

The following year, Gifford breaks down from overwork and goes, between seasons, to a quiet beach resort, where he finds Mara and Elizabeth and they are thrown much together in the days which follow. Gifford discovers that Mara has a suitor in another man who is staying at the hotel, and is distressed at the possible consequence of the deception concerning her husband. In his endeavor to sidetrack the affair, he falls in love with Mara himself, and she with him. Gifford cannot declare his love, although he reveals it in all but words. Mara, thinking he is only afraid to speak, takes the initiative, but when he

VOGUE.

KNOCKING OUR KNOCKOUT KELLY (April 9).—The cast: Knockout Kelly (Arthur Moon); Dowdy Donnelly (Paddy McGuire); Cock Eye Dugan, Kelly's manager (Jack Gaines); the cashier (Priscilla Dean). Directed by Jack Dillon. Scenario by Robert A. Dillon.

Knockout Kelly, a champion pugilist, steals the cashier of a beanery from her sweetheart, Dowdy Donnelly, a waiter in the same place, who is in love with her. Learning from another waiter in the place that Kelly is winning her attentions he hurriedly visits a saloon, and in the back room pleads with her to return to him.

She agrees to do this on condition that he challenges Kelly, and if he knocks out the Knockout Man she will marry him. Donnelly is aided by Kelly's manager, who, instead of receiving a condition for his services in the champion's behalf, gets a blow on the jaw when he asks what is coming to him.

He trains and schools Donnelly and when the latter has a bad attack of cold feet, owing to unfavorable reports from Kelly's gymnasium, Dugan hits upon the brilliant idea or knocking out Knockout Kelly as follows:

While Donnelly is fighting Kelly, Dugan will stand in an obscure corner of the club, and shoot Kelly in the seat of his tights with an air gun. When Kelly turns to see who shot at him then Donnelly is to knock him out while his attention is distracted from the fight.

The plans works out O. K. after several mishaps, in which Donnelly gets the shot instead of Kelly, and finally when Kelly is floored the cashier incensed at the frame up, exposes Dugan and Donnelly and marries Kelly, while the conspirators have to flee from the ire of the fight fans.

BEAUTY.

PEANUTS AND POWDER (April 12).—The cast: Puff (Rea Reger); Kreemie (Carol Halloway); Arthur (John Sheehan); Grex (John Steppling); Henchwoman (Mary Talbot).

Puff, a fanatical inventor, has invented a peanut of high explosive power. Grex, a foreign agent tries to win Kreemie, Puff's beautiful daughter, for the purpose of gaining possession of Puff's formula. He is foiled in this attempt by Arthur, her brave lover. Puff tries the deadly peanut on a squirrel, which is blown to atoms.

Grex plots to steal the formula by night. Kreemie awakens and they bind and gag her and carry her off. They are chased by Puff and Arthur on motorcycles, following a trail of the stolen peanuts which have been dropped. Kreemie refuses to give up the formula, although Grex threatens to make her eat a loaded peanut. They have also abducted the pet monkey, which proves their undoing, for he eats a peanut which blows up their shack and the villians, while Arthur and Puff escape with the charming Kreemie.

MUSTANG.

TWO BITS (Two Parts—April 7).—The cast: James Hardeman (Frank Borzage); Bess, known as "Two Bits" (Anna Little); Jed Simpson (Jack Richardson); Al Moreley (Mark Thorne).

James Hardeman, United States Marshal, is advised by the chief of the secret service bureau at San Francisco that the counterfeiters for whom they have been long searching, seem to have their headquarters somewhere in the vicinity of the little cattle town of Red Gulch, and Hardeman is ordered to proceed there and investigate.

Selling bouquets of wild flowers at twenty-five cents a bunch, Bess, an orphan, has become known only as "Two Bits." A passenger on the Limited that goes through Red Gulch daily purchases a bouquet from her, but finds that he has only a twenty dollar bill to offer her. Two Bits can't change it, but Jed Simpson, the sheriff, comes to her aid and breaks the bill for her. Hardeman arrives, and is also induced to purchase a bouquet. In his room Hardeman finds a counterfeit dollar bill in his pocketbook, and realizes that the only place he could have obtained it was from the flower girl. He learns that Two Bits lives in a little cabin in Mission Canyon, and subsequently succeeds in forming an acquaintanceship with her.

Jed Simpson, who has long been a suitor for Two Bits, proposes, but is rejected. Hardeman chances to come upon an old shack in a valley, and finds that it contains counterfeiting apparatus. He digs his way into the shack, and in one corner of the room places a camera, concealing it well, and arranging a rubber tubing and bulb under a loose plank on the floor, so that by stepping on this plank the bulb will be squashed, and flash light exposure registered.

Al Morely, the deputy sheriff, notices Jed's state of mind, and tells him that if it is Two Bits that's worrying him, that he knows a way by which he can probably land her. Years ago he allowed her father to build his cabin on his land, and he now proposes that he tell Two Bits that she must either pay up at once or get out. She would then be very glad to have a home offered her. She is later informed of this decision. One night the counterfeiters come to the shack. Suddenly the flashlight brightens up the room, one of the men having stepped on the loose plank. They realize that something is wrong, but are unable to discover just what it is.

Hardeman comes to Two Bits and questions her concerning a counterfeit bill which he received from her at the depot. She tells him that she got it from Jed. Two Bits concludes that Hardeman has been coming to see her in order to discover whether or not she was with this gang, and, deeply hurt, denounces him and leaves. Returning to her cabin, Two Bits sees the daily auto stage passing, and it suggests a plan to her. Hardeman finds that the counterfeiters have fallen into his trap, and hurrying back to town, has the film developed and printed. Now feeling that he has conclusive evidence against his men, he starts out for the shack to waylay them there. But as he comes around a curve on the road, he sees in the distance the auto stage being held up by a masked bandit. He uses his field glasses, and when he sees a braid of hair slip from under the bandit's hat, he realizes that it must be Two Bits. He hurries to the scene, swings the bandit to his saddle, and rides into the underbrush. He pulls the mask from the bandit's face, and finds that his deductions are correct. She tells him that she stands to lose her garden, her home and all and that she had determined to get money to purchase the place at any cost.

Seeing the passengers from the auto stage approaching, Hardeman leads Two Bits back to her cabin, and tells her to change to her own clothes at once. While he is waiting outside, he sees Jed and his deputy approaching. Two Bits now being in her own clothes, he enters—and thinking that the sheriff and deputy want her for the hold up, secludes himself in a loft above the room, intending to save Two Bits at any risk. Jed enters, and informs Two Bits that Morley is outside and that he is going to order her out at once. But Jed states that if she will agree to marry him, he will purchase the plot of land for her. Two Bits refuses, and Jed is about to seize her when he chances to look up and sees Hardeman covering him with a gun. The deputy now enters, and is also covered by Hardeman. The searching party from the auto come to the cabin and find Hardeman holding up the sheriff and his deputy. They demand an explanation, but Hardeman succeeds in satisfying them when he displays a flashlight photograph of the counterfeiters in their den, and the counterfeiters are Jed, the sheriff, and Morely, his deputy. With his two prisoners Hardeman starts back to San Francisco, promising Two Bits that he will soon return and claim still another "prisoner."

SILENT SELBY (Three Parts—April 13).—The cast: Silent Selby (Thomas Chatterton); Helen Whitney, daughter of Ward Whitney (Anna Little); Cliff Merton, Dave Merton, the sheriff, Cliff's brother (Jack Richardson); Ward Whitney (Dick La Reno); Felipe (Wm. Tedmarsh).

Silent Selby is a cowboy on the Whitney ranch and has aroused the interest and admiration of Helen, the daughter of Ward Whitney, owner of the ranch. Selby has incurred the enmity of Cliff Merton, the foreman.

One day Cliff discovers Selby and Helen in a confidential attitude. His evil nature crops out that evening when he takes an undue liberty with Helen by seizing her by the wrist. Selby, who witnesses the indignity, releases and fells Cliff by a blow. The foreman discharges Selby. Cliff intercepts Felipe, a ranch hand, returning after delivering a note from Selby to Helen in which Selby asks Helen to meet him that evening. In the presence of all the cowboys, Felipe vows vengeance on Cliff, and fondles his knife in a menacing way.

Later, drinking heavily in his shack, the thought dawns on Cliff that the note sent by Selby to Helen may have been to arrange for a meeting that evening. He goes to the ranch house and watches until Helen appears. He then trails her to the trysting place. He watches her meet Selby, talk with him, and then depart, leaving Selby sitting under the tree. Cliff waits until Helen reaches a lonely

TO THE TRADE:

We have received from W. Kendall Evans in Mexico some 4,000 feet of scenes of activities with the United States troops along the Mexican Border and in Mexico. After putting it on the screen we are not satisfied with its "amusement value".

As a matter of fact nothing of a sensational character has as yet happened in Mexico, nothing to thrill an audience - nothing to make either of us a reputation.

Every day both shipments and telegrams from Mr. Evans promised better results and we have delayed hoping to get you something really worth while.

We have been too long in the business to try to fool the public with mediocre pictures. We would far rather lose all the money that we have spent in sending Mr. Evans to Mexico than to release to you anything that is not creditable and worth while.

We have received hundreds of letters and telegrams asking about these pictures and we ask you to be a little patient.

In order to secure quick distribution we propose selling these pictures for cash, shipping 1,000 to 2,000 feet weekly releases in serial form as they are received. We will fix the price per foot as soon as they are made up and their value determined. Please accept our assurance that whatever we ship you will be worth what we ask for it.

spot where he seizes her and bears her off to his shack. At dawn she escapes and rushes home to her father. Later Cliff is found strangled in his shack. Felipe, the Mexican ranch hand, is first suspected and arrested. Later Selby is suspected because of his altercation with the Cliff the evening before, and of his subsequent discharge by Cliff. Prior to this, Selby while alone in the shack picks up an object near the body and secretly places it in his pocket.

When placed under arrest, Selby begs to see Helen's father privately. When alone with Whitney, Selby produces the object picked upon the floor which proves to be Whitney's cuff button. Whitney calls in the sheriff and acknowledges that he committed the crime, detailing the indignities suffered by his daughter Helen as the reason. Although the sheriff is a brother of Cliff, the murdered man, he immediately sees the justment of the punishment and drops the case.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME (Chapter 14—"Helen's Race Against Time"—Two Parts—March 27).—Helen is spending a fortnight with her uncle, Amos Rhinelander, at the Hotel Hollywood. Through his gift of a generous interest in the Superstition Mine, she is again restored to her proper social position. Helen notices that he seems to have something on his mind, however, and remarks about it. The mystery is solved when Rhinelander takes her upon an automobile trip to her old home, where she finds all the old servants are again installed there. He informs Helen that the home is now hers.

Later Rhinelander speaks to Helen with regard to Seagrue, explaining that he was his only sister's child and he had promised her on her death bed to look after him and as much as possible to take her place. He tells her he understands all the wrongs Seagrue has done them both, but for his sister's sake he wants to try once more to make a man of him, and asks that Helen invite him to the informal reception that afternoon. Helen grants this request, and Seagrue accepts. George Storm is also a guest and upon arriving proposes marriage to Helen and is accepted. Seagrue insults Storm. Storm resents this and a pitched battle is the result. Helen and her guests arrive upon the scene and Helen is shocked and mortified by Storm's lack of restraint. As a result she ignores Storm the rest of the afternoon and accepts the attentions of Seagrue.

When the guests are leaving Storm, being still stubborn, Helen returns his ring to him. Meanwhile the station agent has received a message to the effect that No 8, the heavy passenger train, would wait at Feeley Junction for the local. In the excitement he had forgotten to deliver this message to the train crew of the local. Helen and Seagrue notice his excitement and the cause of it being explained, they enter Seagrue's car and pursue the train. They attract the attention of the fireman, but he thinks they are merely racing the train and pays no attention to them. They drive desperately ahead, and attempt to attract the engineer's notice, but without success. Helen then recalls that they can make Burnet Bridge ahead of the train. They do so and Helen explains her plan to Seagrue. He says it is certain death and tries to prevent her attempting it. She leaps from the car, however, hangs from the bridge and drops on the top of passenger coach of the local as it passes beneath. She runs along the top of the cars, climbs down between the cars and disconnects the rear two cars from the rest of the train. The heavy passenger train dashes across the junction between the two sections of the local and the wreck is averted. She drops to the ground, and falls unconscious. Storm arrives and takes her in his arms and when she recovers she asks him to take her home. He explains his sorrow for the incident of the afternoon and she forgives him.

THE NET (Thanhouser—Five Parts—April 1).—The cast: The fisherman (Bert Delaney); his sweetheart (Marion Swayne); his mother (Inda Palmer); mysterious girl (Ethel Jewett); her former employer (Arthur Bauer); detective (Morgan Jones).

In the home of the stalwart young son and his mother, the girl rescued from the sea grows strong again after her fearful exposure. Her attractiveness, so different from that of the fisher maidens, has a telling effect on the young man. He asks her, at length, to become his bride, and she accepts.

But a few days before the wedding the affianced bride disappears, sailing away with a strange man from the city, who has suddenly appeared. Thinking that his sweetheart had deserted him for another, the fisherman is heartbroken for a time, but gradually the keen edge of his sorrow wears away, and he succumbs to the attractions of another girl, one who had recently come to the village with her father, and who had lived together and alone at the end of the town.

In reality, the runaway girl had been a thief. In trying to escape with a large amount of money which she had taken from the store in which she was employed, she had sailed on a boat which was wrecked. She was the only surviving passenger. The stranger, for whom she left her stalwart fisherman lover, was a detective, who had hit upon her trail. She bribed him with the money which she had saved, and he did not turn her over to the authorities.

The detective, learning that the young fisherman would some day inherit a vast fortune, insisted that the girl return and persuade the youth to marry her. Between them they would secure possession of his money.

The girl returns to the village, and tells her former lover that it was her brother with whom she had left—that they had hurried away to the deathbed of her dying father. While she talks, the fisherman's real sweetheart and her father surprise the detective in the doorway. At first he stammers in embarrassment. Then he looks searchingly into the face of the older man, and claps a handcuff on his wrists.

The father, it seems, is a fugitive from justice. Seeing a chance to accomplish his ends, the detective promises the daughter that if she will give up all claim to the fisher youth and allow him to marry his earlier love, her father will be set free. She sorrowfully agrees, and the youth, much against his wishes, consents to the sacrifice.

But the wedding is again interfered with. As the bride, ready to start down the stairs looks over the rail, she sees her former employer, the man from whom she had stolen a fortune, talking earnestly with the fisherman. Thinking that her secret has been divulged, she flees down a back stair, jumps into an automobile, and starts off, heading straight for the quicksands.

The unhappy girl who had given up her own happiness for the sake of her father, tries to warn her of her danger, but, thinking it is a plot to stop her escape, she rushes ahead, and is swallowed in the treacherous sands. A letter from headquarters verifies the honesty of the unjustly accused father, and the girl and the fisherman wed and are happy ever after.

THE TRAFFIC COP (Thanhouser—Five Parts—April 6).—The cast: Casey (Howard M. Mitchell); his sweetheart (Gladys Hulett); her father (Ernest Howard) Casey's brother (Theodore Von Eltz); book agent (Burnett Parker).

The financier's niece and ward was riding in the park one day when her horse ran away. Casey, the cop, rescued her. Then they found that they knew each other when they were children. The girl visited her grandmother in the country, and "the cop" was "the little boy next door." They drifted apart, but the incident in the park brought them together again, and Casey became a frequent visitor at the banker's home.

Some time later the banker became involved in speculations. To carry on his market operations he had utilized the funds intrusted to his care. An unexpected visit of the bank examiners precipitated matters, but the banker, aided by his cashier, so arranged matters that the blame fell upon the policeman's brother. The niece overheard arrangements being made for the teller's arrest, and hurried around to his home to give him warning. Before he could escape the police arrive. The teller tried to escape by the roof, but the sleuths were cunning, and had cut off escape that way before entering by the main door.

With escape cut off above and below, the teller was in a dangerous position. The girl was resourceful, however. She bade the man hide in an inner room, saw a book agent in the hall, lured him into the apartment, and when the police dropped in, a few moments later, they arrested the book agent. After they were out of the house the teller escaped. He had explained to the girl that he did not dare surrender, as his own record would be against him, although he swore he was innocent.

After he had gone the girl lingered in the flat a few minutes, attracted by a photo of a certain young man, and was there when Casey returned home. She told him what had happened. Before she could get away her uncle arrived with the police captain, intending to question the girl who had tricked the police. The only person to meet them was Casey. The banker wanted to search the place, but Casey refused to permit this, although he permitted the captain to do so. In the inner room the captain found the girl, who hastily told him her story. Then the captain returned to the others, announced that the suspect was not in the house, and that he had no interest in the girl ("whoever she may be"), for she had not committed any crime.

The banker determined to search the house himself. Casey, by a clever ruse, gave the girl a chance to escape. The banker departed, vowing vengeance. After this happening, the girl decided to leave her uncle's home. He had told her that her fortune had been lost. Casey, in whom she confided, decided to try and wrest a confession from the cashier. He made him a prisoner and took him to a tiny island. The cashier finally confessed.

Casey saw a way to cinch the case. Soon after the banker received word from the cashier's landlady that when the man disappeared he had left a diary. The banker was shown a diary, which contained entries referring to all of his supposedly hidden crimes. In a panic he agreed to buy it, and when the money had been passed over, the room, heretofore in darkness, was brilliantly lighted, the "landlady" threw off her wrapper, revealing Casey; while the niece, the cashier, the policeman's brother and the captain came forward from their hiding places.

One part of the cashier's confession told of how the girl's fortune had been stolen, and after brief legal proceedings she recovered it. Then she married the policeman.

THE LEOPARD'S BRIDE (Centaur—Five Parts—April 15).—The cast: Captain Morey (William Clifford); Major Carr (Brooklyn Keller); Marjorie Lansdown (Nan Christy); Mr. Lansdown (Frederick Montague); Nadje (Margaret Gibson); Nadje's father (Fred Goodwins); Tom Brown, a spy for Major Carr (Edward Gordon); a priest (Paul Machette). Scenario by Theodosia Harris.

Captain Morey and Major Carr are at an English post—Simla, India. They are rivals for the affection of Marjorie Lansdown. The Major discovers that she loves Captain Morey, and, being the superior officer, he sends Morey to a desolate outpost in the jungle district. Morey accepts his fate, but knows the reason of his transfer. He and Marjorie part sadly. On his way to the jungle district he comes across a ceremony of human sacrifice. He saves the young victim, a young native girl, and has her brought to the outpost to protect her in the name of the British Government. The fanatic priest, thus interfered with, and hating the English, follows the girl to the outpost later with the idea of killing the captain and regaining his victim. The girl, at the risk of her own life, stabs the priest, as she is now the abject slave of the young English captain. He does not notice her love, being engrossed in his love for Marjorie, but, of course, is drawn to her in gratitude for her brave deed.

The major, through his spy, carries out his plans to defeat the young captain. The letters that they write to each other are destroyed and never reach their destination. As the months go by, disappointment enters the heart of each. The fever mists of the jungle claim the heart-sick captain as a victim. The adoring native girl nurses him tenderly back to life. She knows the herbs to give him and this, with her nursing, restores him to health.

The first news that he gets of Marjorie is a notice through the newspaper of her engagement to the major. Being tied to the native girl through gratitude and loneliness, he now turns to her and accepts her love. In the meantime the major had poisoned Marjorie's mind by telling her that Morey has taken a morganatic wife.

Fate now steps in and Marjorie and her father accept the major's invitation to witness a leopard hunt in the jungles. Nadje, to wean the captain of his growing love for native wines and to strengthen him, persuades him to go on a hunt with her into the forest.

In the jungle hunt, Marjorie becomes separated from her party and is thrown from her horse and about to be killed by a leopard when Nadje saves her life. Marjorie is hurt and Nadje gets her to the camp, where Morey is resting. Here the girl, Nadje, witnesses the meeting of the lovers, hears their explanations, witnesses their despair at the unkindness of fate. Death enters her own soul. That night the two hunting parties camp together. The natives keep close watch, as they know death stalks in the jungle as a result of the day's killing. Nadje, too, knows this, and, as she realizes that she is not the love of Morey and sees the struggle that goes on in the hearts of the two, she commends her soul to her idols, goes into the lair of the leopards, binds herself to a tree and embraces death. The natives find her after she has been almost killed, and carry her to the camp. There Morey and Marjorie read her sacrifice in her dying eyes and grief and repentance enters their soul. She tells them that her fate was hung about her neck. The young officer returns to Simla after six months and again the harp of love is struck, but the minor of memories lends a sadness to its consummation.

FEATHERTOP (Five Parts—Gaumont—April 17).—The cast: Elsie Green and Polly Goodkin (Marguerite Courtot); Tom Green (James Levering); Capt. Dick Green (Gerald Griffin); Sarah (Mathilde Baring); Henry Green (Charles Graham); Ward Roberts (Sidney Mason); Percy Morleigh and Feathertop (John Reinhard). Written by Paul M. Bryan.

Once upon a time there were three brothers. One longed for riches, another declared that the life of a sailor be his, while the third only wanted to grow beautiful flowers. As the boys matured into men, each followed his bent. Tom, the eldest, became owner of nurseries, also the father of a lovely girl, Elsie. Henry, the youngest, won a fortune, but not contentment. Dick found happiness in a South Sea home and a good wife, Sarah.

Henry decided to pay his older brother, Tom, a visit, taking with him Grace Lawton, a society girl and a husband-seeker, and Percy Morleigh, an affected fop of to-day. The two young people with their fashionable clothes and affected manners made a deep impression upon simple-hearted Elsie; Percy was attracted to Elsie and flattered her until her young head was completely turned.

Shortly after the visit, Elsie went to the city to spend some time with her wealthy uncle. Here she became completely inoculated with the froth and glitter of the social world. Under the guidance of Grace Lawton she developed into an ultra-society butterfly. In the meantime, Percy has made a wager that he will kiss Elsie. Elsie sent a photograph of herself in one of her most daring gowns to her gentle old father. The knowledge of what Elsie has changed into breaks her father's heart and he dies.

After her father's death, Elsie becomes discontented with this simple life among the flowers. She also decides that she cannot marry Ward Roberts, who has been in charge of the nurseries for her father. Elsie's glimpse of the high life has soured her good sense. She returns to reside with her wealthy uncle and is again completely carried away with the glitter and glamor of society. The wealthy uncle dies. He has previously grown disgusted with Elsie's conduct and the girl finds that instead of inheriting her uncle's millions, her Uncle Dick has inherited the money. Elsie has been willed only a copy of the story, "Feathertop." Uncle Dick is given the money on the promise that he and his wife come to New York to live.

Uncle Dick and Sarah deck themselves in wondrous array and come to New York. There Elsie takes them in hand and her own chance of inheriting some money, regains for her a social position which she has all but lost. Uncle Dick is not happy in his new environment. He makes a trip to Elsie's old home and from Ward finds out the cause of his brother Tom's death. Meantime the uncle reads the story of "Feathertop." When Elsie and her aunt return from the opera, he insists that the girl read the legacy her uncle has left her, as Dick feels that it may do more good than his has done him, for he missed the sea and the good salt air.

Elsie reads the story of "Feathertop" and in her mind's eye she sees in the man of straw the pumpkin head, the social fop, Percy. Later she learns of his wager to kiss her. Completely disgusted with society and its garishness, Elsie accompanies her aunt and uncle on a trip on the schooner. There she discovers that the old people have invited Ward to be of the party and in a romantic love scene, the girl returns once more to the protection of the true man.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 6 ("The Spotted Warning"—Two Parts—April 3).—Enoch Golden receives a mysterious letter, saying that unless he hands over the map which Legar is after, his daughter Margery will become a victim of the spotted warning. Davy, his secretary, urges Mr. Golden to comply with the request, but the latter refuses, and orders Margery to proceed at once to her grandmother's. The chauffeur, he orders not to stop for any one, and to go at full speed. But a henchman of the Iron Claw in the Golden house sends word of the plans to his chief, and Legar makes ready to capture the girl. The machine in which he goes to meet her crashes into Margery's car, and is wrecked. The Laughing Mask, following in his roadster, takes up the girl, and carries her to the home of her mother. Golden receives word that his daughter has fallen into Legar's hands and that she will be restored at 10 o'clock, if he hands over the map. He goes to the appointed place, the very top of a high building, and is handing over the paper when Davy arrives in an aeroplane. A terrific struggle between Davy and the henchman ensues, and the map falls unnoticed to the street many feet below. The man also falls and is killed.

SKYLIGHT SLEEP (Phunphilms—April 5). Heine and Louie read that Professor Waldemar Flubdub of London is on his way to this country with "Skylight Sleep," a new anaesthetic. It is then determined in council assembled that they will board the steamer down the bay and relieve the Professor of his medicine. This is accomplished in due time, and they then set about administering the drug to anyone who shows the slightest inclination for it. They are reaping a harvest and are on the high road to wealth when their well-laid plans go astray.

And only because the Honorable Flubdub is rescued from the unusual position in which he is found in his stateroom—tied hand and foot. Irate Prof. makes his way ashore and soon runs into the two heroes with his most cherished discovery, which they are using with the greatest abandon. A call for the police soon puts them in their right place, and the last seen of the two noted "surgeons" is when they are being lugged off with little ceremony to the nearest lockup.

IDAHO'S WATERFALLS (Pathe—April 8). Besides being a State of scenic wonders, Idaho possesses almost unlimited possibilities in its tremendous water power. This subject depicts many of these natural aids to commerce. Irrigation has been aided by these conditions and the wonderful irrigation project at Salmon Falls gives an idea of the vastness of the possibilities. At Milner Falls a great dam and irrigation canal have been constructed from which three million acres of land are irrigated. Various power plants are also installed in advantageous spots and one can see the benefits to be derived by commerce from these natural means of power.

THE COAL MINES OF HONGAY (Pathe—On the same reel as foregoing).—This educational release shows the manner of mining coal in the northeastern part of French Indo-China contrary to general belief, the most modern methods are used in this part of the world. Coolies are employed almost exclusively to do the actual mining, but machinery of the latest type is used in the complicated sifting process and in loading the coal.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 7 ("The Hooded Helper"—Two Parts—April 10).—The mysterious stranger returns Margery's parrot to its mistress, and the housekeeper puts it in the chicken coop for the night.

Meanwhile, Jemima Washington, a portly negro matron, on her rounds of the local ash-barrels, finds the map that Davy dropped from the roof of the Central Tower Building, and brings it home to her husband. The latter then goes out in search of some fowls in a neighboring coop and steals the parrot, but the bird makes such a noise that Legar's men, who are near at hand, come forward. The Laughing Mask is in the neighborhood and rushes to the negro's house to learn the trouble. He sends Jemima for the sheriff and then makes haste for Mrs. Golden's, taking the map, which is on the table, with him.

and offers it to Legar in exchange for Margery's freedom, when the Iron Claw comes to the house in search of the girl. This the criminal agrees to, but after the barter is made, discovers that it is a decoy, and that Laughing Mask's chauffeur has made the deal. Later, Mrs. Golden and her daughter go to the home of the millionaire, and a reconciliation follows. Golden is entertaining his friend Espares at the time, and when a suit of armor attempts to stab Margery, suspicion points to the guest; but he makes his escape after a battle.

THEN I'LL COME BACK TO YOU (Frohman Amusement Co.—Five Parts—April 3).—The cast: Barbara Allison (Alice Brady); Steve O'Mara (Jack Sherrill); Caleb Hunter (Eric Blind); Archie Wickersham (Leo Gordon); Harrigan (George Kline); Miriam (Marie Edith Wells); Little Steve (Ted Dean). Directed by George Irving. Scenario by Larry Evans.

Little Steve O'Mara had been taken care of by an old woodsman who protected the child until his twelfth year. Steve's father, a brilliant lawyer, died from an over strenuous life, but the boy, brought up in the forest among the woods and streams of the woodland, retained his father's traits and seemed to combine, in one, the intelligence of the city and the breath of the woods. Upon the death of old Tom, who had cared for little Steve, the boy started out to find the world. After three days of wandering he arrived in the lumber town of Morrison, where he was befriended by an old bachelor named Caleb Hunter, who lived with his sister, Sarah, in a fine Colonial home.

There Steve was initiated to the refined side of life and fell into it naturally. He met the daughter of the lumber king, Dexter Allison, and fell in love with little Barbara on first sight. One of her playmates had an argument with him one day which resulted in a fight, in which little Archie Wickersham received a trouncing. Barbara scolded Steve and sided with Archie. Steve, turning to her, said: "So I ain't good enough for you, but I am goin' to be, and when I am, then I'll come back to you."

Ten years elapse, Steve has now become an engineer in charge of the construction of the lumber pier of the East Coast R. R. Company. He is sent for by the president to meet Dexter Allison, one of the stockholders of the road, who has obtained a loan from the now grown-up Archie Wickersham, the financier of this road.

Allison and Archie plot to gain control of the road by inserting a clause in the contract that unless the road is finished by May 1, the road must be repaid and the contract to move Wickersham's timber will be withdrawn. Steve tells the president that he will have the road ready to haul the timber by May 1, and the contract is signed.

Steve meets Barbara, his childhood sweetheart, and the love he has patiently nursed all these years becomes even stronger when he sees her a grown woman. Barbara has, in the meantime, become engaged to Archie, and while she has always kept very warm the remembrance of little Steve, she does not know in her heart that she really loves him. Wickersham has a double purpose in crossing Steve, first, because of the railroad, and then because of Barbara, who seems to grow fonder of Steve as she is thrown more in contact with him. Archie tries in every way to break Steve as the road is progressing better than expected and he is forced to use more strenuous means. He employs a fighting bully named Harrigan, first to steal the plans, then get the man to quit and finally try to break down Steve's bridge by starting a log grab down the river. All these are unsuccessful so Harrison decides to finish the boy engineer with his fists. He has a fight, but he had not reckoned with his host. Steve had the better of the argument.

Barbara witnessed the fight and was so horrified at the sight of blood that she sought solitude in the forest. Here she became lost. A searching party was formed and Steve found her. After caring for her during the night, he took her to her father the next morning, and returned to his work. Barbara realized that she now loved him and that she despised Archie for his underhanded methods. She started off on horseback to overtake Steve. When she reached him, a shot rang out from the nearby bushes. Steve was wounded. As she stooped to assist him, she heard Harrigan shout, "Now I will finish him." Quick as a flash, Barbara drew Steve's pistol, and with a lucky shot, brought down Harrigan. She then tells Steve that she can now love only him the way he would expect a woman to love, and the picture fades out with the two in each other's arms.

THE REAPERS (Triumph Film Corporation—Five Parts—April 3).—The cast: Albert Jordan (John Mason); Rita Jordan (Clara Whipple); James Shaw (Werner Oland); Edna Jordan (John Mason); Rita Jordan (Clara Whip-LeMay). Scenario by Eve Unsell. Directed by Burton King.

Albert Jordan, publishing house manager, lavishes his salary on his adored wife, Rita, and little daughter Edna. She is a church-going woman, while his home and his family is his religion. While returning home one day, Jordan sees his little daughter in the path of an auto. He runs to snatch her from instant death. He saves her but is seriously injured himself. As a result, he becomes a half paralytic. His wife becomes the bread-winner of the family.

She frets against this and is tempted by a former lover, Jim Shaw, a race-track follower, and leaves with him. Jordan becomes an embittered blasphemer. He is compelled to sell newspapers and pencils at an elevated station. Here a splendid woman with a deathless faith finds the hopeless Jordan and teaches him her creed of life. Jordan begins to pray. At last, in response to his prayers and more hopeful state, Jordan is healed and learns that God's way is not always the ways of men.

The years pass. Jordan with health, new strength, new friends, becomes successful in business. His daughter, Edna, now a beautiful young woman, marries Frank Rollins, of aristocratic family, and assistant district attorney. Jordan makes his home with the young couple.

On the other hand, Rita, who first lived in luxury, has gradually gone down the ladder of life and now reaps the harvest of her sin and selfishness. Shaw is drinking heavily and beats her. They return from Paris and start a flashy tango hall. A few months later, after his daughter's marriage, Jordan is asked by Rollins to accompany him on a vice crusade. While in a dance place, there is a quarrel between a man and a woman. Jordan goes to intervene and comes face to face with his wife.

After a night of anguish Jordan goes to Rita, telling her of himself and of Edna. He teaches her to see the "light," as he calls it, as he has seen it. Rita is touched by Jordan's willingness to forgive and forget and the latent good in Rita's nature rises to meet the good in Jordan. How Rita repays his wish to reclaim her is unfolded in the climax.

THE FOLLY OF REVENGE (Five Parts—March).—Antonio Bordiga, a young sculptor, living in the Latin quarter of New Orleans, is commissioned by William Baker, a rich, but degenerate, clubman, to carve a statue for him. Antonio is unable to secure a woman sufficiently beautiful in body and soul to pose for the statue and loses interest in his work. He is gazing out of his studio window one sunny afternoon when his attention is attracted to a young man forcibly kissing a girl. He rushes to her aid. She is so beautiful that he begs her to pose for him. She acquiesces.

From now on his work is a labor of love. He falls in love with his model and she returns his affection. One day William Baker visits Antonio's studio to learn how the statue is progressing. The model tells Antonio that Baker is the man who embraced her the afternoon he came to her rescue; whereupon Antonio refuses to sell the statue to Baker.

Antonio marries his model and a little girl blesses their union. Baker, incensed and jealous, uses his wealth to spirit the model away. He locks her in a garret in his apartment and after many weeks pass wins her over to himself. Meanwhile Antonio has given up hope of ever finding his wife and places their little daughter in a convent. From now on he becomes a wanderer and joins a band of gypsies. His wife writes him a note telling him that she is going to kill herself and explaining what Baker has done. Antonio makes efforts to save his wife from the suicide's grave but fails.

Years later Antonio and Baker meet accidentally in the mountains, and in a fierce fight, Baker throws Antonio down a rocky cliff and almost kills him. The gypsies see the fight and rush to Antonio's aid. Antonio's rage against Baker becomes greater than ever, and in a frenzy he conspires with the gypsy chief to kidnap Baker's wife, swearing revenge in kind—wife for wife.

The gypsy chief finds Antonio's daughter at the same house party as Baker's wife. She is now a girl of seventeen. The chief kidnaps the daughter instead of the wife, and brings her to a hut at the gypsy camp. Antonio poisons wine that he thinks Baker's wife will drink. At the last moment he learns that it is his own daughter that he is about to kill. Frenzied, he breaks into the gypsy hut and saves her in time. He meets Baker outside the hut and begins to strangle him. His daughter begs him to leave vengeance in the hands of God. Finally he accedes to her wishes. Antonio's daughter marries a young captain of the military force, who was sent to search gypsy camps and all ends happily.

AN OLD SCOUNDREL (Keystone—Two Parts—March 26).—The cast: Fred Mace, Dale Fuller, Louella Maxam, Earl Rodney, Charles Arling and Hugh Fay.

Fred Mace, a railroad station agent in a small town, learns that he has fallen heir to a large fortune. In his enthusiasm he is unable to keep the news to himself and the local paper publishes a story about it. Charles Arling, head of a gang of crooks, reads the story and determines to get possession of the fortune. The simple-minded Mace is approached with a proposition to invest in an oil well. The station agent is an easy mark and buys the land, using the railroad's money temporarily for the purpose.

A visit to his property convinces Mace that it is worthless, but as he throws away his shovel in disgust it taps a gusher and the agent is carried skyward by its force. Back again on terra firma he hears that the railroad inspector is coming to inspect his books. In terror he hurries to town to collect his inheritance. The crooks pursue him and when his daughter, Louella Maxam, tries to stop them they bind her to the track. They hide in a nearby building as an engine which Mace has commandeered to return with his inheritance approaches at full speed. Just as the engine is about to run over Louella, her sweetheart, Earl Rodney, throws a switch and the locomotive runs off on a siding and crashes into the building where the crooks are hiding.

Arling and Fay, the swindlers, flee from the ruins and Mace reaches home with the money before the inspector arrives. Then he withdraws his opposition to the marriage of Louella and Earl.

JOHN NEEDHAM'S DOUBLE (Five Parts—April 10).—The cast: Lord John Needham and Joseph Norbury (Tyrone Power); Ellen Norbury (Marie Walcamp); Aunt Kate (Agnes Emerson); Parks (Frank Elliott); Dobbins (Walter Belasco); Cruet (Frank Lanning); Thos. Creighton (Buster Emmons). Founded on Joseph Hatton's play of same title introduced by the late E. S. Willard. Scenario by Olga Printzlau. Directed by the Smalleys.

John Needham is the last of a long line of profligate Englishmen and just in the nick of time to save him from beggary, comes word that he has been appointed guardian of Thomas Creighton, and placed in charge of the millions which have been left as the heritage of the boy. Packing young Creighton off to a boarding school, Needham takes possession of the Creighton estate and begins a life of riotous dissipation. Several years elapse, until one morning Needham receives a letter from America stating that young Creighton is coming home to demand possession of his estate and will require an accounting for every penny.

Joseph Norbury lives in a quiet English village and reads the news that Needham has been appointed executor of the Creighton estate. Norbury's wife remarks that with his mustache off, Norbury could easily be taken for Needham. In after years Norbury moves to London, where he and Needham met at the same club and become fast friends.

When Needham learns that he is to be called to account for his stewardship, he realizes that imprisonment faces him and to avoid disgrace, he undertakes to devise measures to commit murder. Having sent to the Creighton country seat the servants from the Creighton town house, he invites Norbury to visit him. During the evening, Needham contrives to drop poison into the wine which Norbury drinks and after Norbury falls dead upon the floor, Needham changes clothes with the corpse.

The murderer then goes to Norbury's home and undertakes to pass himself off as Norbury. The papers next morning relate how John Needham has been found a suicide in the Creighton mansion. Upon discovery of the corpse, Parks, who has been Needham's valet, refuses to believe that the dead man was his master, and through this suspicion and some good detective work by Parks, Needham is subsequently accused of the crime. Taking advantage of momentary opportunity, Needham drinks some of the same poison which he had given to Norbury and dies.

GEORGE KLEINE.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER NO. 7 ("Bells and Belles"—April 12).—Musty holds down a job as bell-boy at the Outside Inn. No guest calls for anything that Musty cannot supply. When one gentleman complains that the gas is leaking, Musty hangs a kettle on the fixture to catch it; for another, whose bed is too narrow, he provides first a saddle, and when this does not solve the problem, he has an inspiration and delivers a balancing pole to the discomforted patron. When a tragedian arrives after all the rooms are filled, Musty takes matters into his own hands and gives him the hall room on the second floor, previously occupied by the proprietor's favorite horse.

Of course bell-boys are merely human and thus prone to make occasional mistakes. Among Musty's errors was that of getting interested in a flirtation with an actress-guest and inadvertently stepping backward into the elevator shaft. The fall does not effect his efficiency, however, and when the tragedian complains that there is no steam in his room, Musty brings him ten cents worth in a paper bag. He and the proprietor also figure out a novel way of conveying liquid refreshments to the tragedian's room via telephone.

The tragedian and the actress finally start a rehearsal of a murder scene in the latter's room. Musty sees the struggle through the keyhole and summons the police and fire departments, to say nothing of ambulances, taxicabs, etc. As a result the guests come sliding down the trick staircase just in time to meet the entering police and firemen. When the situation is explained by the two ambitious thespians, Musty finds himself in wrong with all the world.

DOLLARS AND THE WOMAN (Six Parts—Lubin—March 20).—The cast: Dan Hilyer (Tom Moore); Madge (Ethel Clayton); Arthur Crewe (Crauford Kent); General Boynton (Bartley McCullum); Colonel Bernard (Herbert Fortier).

Dan Hilyer won his wife, Madge, after a hard fight with a rival, Arthur Crewe. After marriage Dan and Madge had hard luck and slid down the social scale, until they were obliged to live in a two-room tenement. Dan, however, kept fighting, and got a chance to go to San Francisco to market a smelter patent which would make him rich. During his absence, Madge gives birth to a son. Owing to the fact that she is without funds, she is cared for during this period by Crewe, although she does not know it. When Dan returns he finds his wife changed from a cheerful normal woman to a miser, this being the effect on her of the horrible poverty she has undergone before the birth of her child.

Although he now has money, she refuses to dress decently, live in a decent home, or part with her hoarded pennies. In trying to understand the cause of this change, Dan stumbles on the fact that Crewe not only supported Madge at the hospital, but that she had paid him back money he had lent her. This leads to suspicion and eventually to a quarrel, and a parting between husband and wife. Their happiness, however, is saved by Crewe coming forward and confessing his part in their affairs.

THE VITAL QUESTION (Vitagraph—Five Parts—April 3).—The cast: Charles Kent (Randolph King); George Cooper (Richard King); Virginia Pearson (Beatrice King); Anders Randolf (Peter Worden); Leo Delaney (Adrian Scarsdale); George Lawrence (Fenton Bale). Scenario by Joseph L. Norris. Directed by S. Rankin Drew.

King, a business man has reason to believe that an investigating committee has been appointed to inquire into the workings of certain shady deals with which his name has been connected. While he is brooding over the matter, Worden comes in and King tells him of his trouble and is advised to consult a clever lawyer. Worden recommends Scarsdale for the job. King looks hopefully upon this advice for Scarsdale is engaged to his daughter Beatrice. When King finally reveals his true motive, Scarsdale is greatly perturbed.

The proposition as it stands reads King's salvation or the loss of Beatrice. Scarsdale turns down the case and bids Beatrice farewell. King's creditors get after him and King commits suicide. Beatrice holds Scarsdale morally responsible for her father's death. She refuses to see him.

The small amount of money Mr. King left is soon exhausted, for Dick, Beatrice's brother, speedily gets rid of it by dissipation. Beatrice, facing a financial crisis, appeals to Warden for assistance. When Dick returns in a maudlin condition his sister remonstrates with him for his action, and Worden, who is standing nearby, suggests that Beatrice marry him, and thus obtain a protector for her brother. Deep down in her heart Beatrice still cherishes a regard for her former lover, Scarsdale, and she refuses Worden's offer.

When Dick comes out of a drunken stupor, he finds himself penniless. To obtain money for further dissipation, he forges Worden's name to a check. The forgery discovered, Dick is just about to be sent to prison. Beatrice appeals to Worden to withdraw the charge. Worden refuses to intervene. Beatrice makes a final plea. Her distress arouses the brute feeling to Worden's mind, and he tells her he will drop the charge if Beatrice will repay him by becoming his wife.

Beatrice sobbingly consents. Scarsdale has gradually climbed the ladder of success. After years of earnest endeavor he is made district attorney. His first campaign is against the Beef Trust. It happens that Worden is head of the Trust. Later, through a trick, Scarsdale and Dick are brought to Worden's home where together with a henchman, he hopes to get certain damaging evidence on the district attorney.

A fight follows and the four men upset an electric library lamp, leaving the room in darkness. A revolver shot rings out and silence follows. It is discovered that Worden has been killed by the man he had hired and the latter is captured by the police in his attempt to escape. With Worden out of the way, Scarsdale and Beatrice renew their old love and look with promise on the future.

Experience!!

EXPERIENCE

according to Webster, is to "know or prove by trial," and that's exactly what we have been doing in the handling of projection apparatus FOR MORE THAN TWENTY YEARS!

Is easily the biggest word in the English language. It is the answer to success or failure—efficiency or incompetence!

EXPERIENCE

has neither LENGTH, BREADTH nor DEPTH yet it can be seen—and seen quickly, too, in your purchases of projection apparatus!

Don't regard projection equipment as a mere collection of gears, cast iron, glass and sheet metal. Insist upon service—reliability—dependability—three essentials to be found only in the stable, substantial character of the house that executes your order.

Representative exhibitors of the better class everywhere confine their purchases to us—and the older, wiser and more experienced they are the more certain are we to please them.

THE CYCLE OF FATE (Selig—Five Parts—April 3).—The cast: First Episode—Aaron Strong (Wm. Machin); Maybelle (Edith Johnson); Sandy Hodge (Frank Clark). Second Episode—Maybelle Strong (Bessie Eyton); Joe Strong, alias "Red Hand" (Wheeler Oakman); Boss Kipper (Al W. Filson); Sid Aldrich (Lewis Cody); Mame O'Malley (Marion Warner); Dr. Burton (Marshal Neilan); Detective Treem (Fred Hearn). Written and directed by Marshal Neilan.

Aaron Strong is a seafaring man. Not only has he won an honest living as the captain of a sailing vessel, but he is unusually happy in the love of his young wife, Maybelle. When Aaron Strong embarks on his voyages, Sandy Hodge, his wife's father, an old sea salt of Scottish descent, cares for Maybelle.

A terrific storm occurs at sea and Aaron's frail craft is smashed to pieces. He tries to save himself by escaping in a dory, but he finally succumbs after scrawling a note to his wife. Later the little boat is washed ashore with his lifeless body. It is found by some fisherman, and when Maybelle is informed of her husband's death she falls unconscious to the floor knocking a lamp over which burns her hand. Months following when her two children are born—a boy and a girl—each bears a red mark on his hand—similar to the one on their mother's hand which was caused by the falling lamp. Maybelle never recovers from the shock of her husband's death, and she soon dies.

The two children are left to the care of old Sandy. Although he secretly loves the little chap who so resembles Sandy's beloved daughter, yet when the boy runs away from home, old Sandy is not at all conscience stricken. The boy falls in with a gang of toughs and has become known as "Red Hand" leader of a gang of crooks. Fourteen years later, Maybelle Strong, Joe's twin sister, teaches a little school in Oceancove. Old Sandy never talks to her of her brother, whom she has almost forgotten, but the old Scotch grandfather insists that Maybelle bring home to him her pay envelope, for Sandy is thrifty.

In the city there is a rivalry among the "gun men" and Sid Aldrich, gang leader, gambler and crook flees the city. He arrives at Oceancove, seeking seclusion. There he meets Maybelle Strong, who learns to love the stranger. Aldrich plots to entice Maybelle to the city. Chided by the irate Sandy because she has expended a small amount of her earnings for a new hat, Maybelle promises to go with Aldrich upon his agreement to marry her when they reach the city.

"Boss" Kipper, a ward politician, is introduced to Maybelle by Aldrich, who poses as Kipper's nephew. Kipper is immediately attracted to the girl. Summoned hurriedly from the room, through the instrumentality of Fate, Kipper places the now unconscious Maybelle into the keeping of Joe Strong, alias "Red Hand," who is one of "Boss" Kipper's strongest followers.

While watching over the girl, "Red Hand" espies the birthmark on her hand; he also glances at the birthmark on his own hand. He has a vague memory of a little sister, marked like himself through a mother's suffering. His better nature comes to the front, and he resolves to save the girl at any cost.

"Boss" Kipper returns to the room. He finds the door locked and barred. He orders his henchmen to shatter it. In the meantime Joe Strong runs to the telephone, summons the police and the girl is rescued just in time. The "Boss" vows revenge on Joe Strong. Strong has been endeavoring to live straight since he rescued Maybelle, and his girl friend, Mame of the tenements, in ill health, has received all of Joe's attention. He is informed that the girl must be sent to a sanitarium for treatment if her life would be saved.

Kipper plots with Aldrich, the gambler. Joe is tempted to rob a home. He finds there Aldrich confronting Maybelle, whom Joe had so recently saved. Joe takes the life of the unscrupulous gambler, and tells Maybelle to claim that she shot the man in self-defense. Joe escapes the house and joins the girl of the tenements whom he loves, and who is awaiting him at the boat landing. As he buys his transportation, Joe comes face to face with Detective Treem. Joe believes all is lost. The detective, however, believing that the death of Aldrich was for the good of mankind, and appreciating that Joe has been the victim of a frame-up, tells him to "beat it," and Joe Strong and his girl sail away from the city and all its wickedness.

MR. JACK, A DOCTOR BY PROXY (No. 7—Vitagraph—April 3).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Frank Daniels); Mrs. Jack (Mrs. Pillsbury); the widow (Rose E. Tapley); Doctor Gallagher (William Cameron); Mrs. Gallagher (Ida Williams). Author, Rudolph Block. Produced by C. Jay Williams.

Mr. Jack is a gay dog. In Doctor Gallagher he has a friend after his own heart. The fact that they are married means nothing in their lives. They start out with their wives for an evening's entertainment. They start—that's all. As soon as their better halves get interested in the opera they give them the "slip." Then things happen rapidly. Doctor Gallagher gets into trouble with a chauffeur who tries to overcharge them. He is arrested and put under a big fine.

Mr. Jack, through mixed identities, succeeds in getting a politician, whom he has cured of ailments, while posing as Gallagher, to use his influence in getting the Doctor out. Mr. Jack is not much of an M. D., but he is a considerable "fixer." He relieves a charming widow of a headache and all he uses is champagne. He is later made to realize that the delightful lady is somewhat of a "reliever" herself—his watch and diamond scarf pin being among the missing. Needless to say, he is suddenly attacked with one of the worst headaches of his gay career.

MR. JACK'S HAT AND THE CAT (No. 8—Vitagraph—April 10).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Frank Daniels); Mrs. Jack (Rose E. Tapley). Produced by C. Jay Williams. Written by Ross D. Whytock.

Feline love is nothing in the life of Mr. Jack, who pronounces the death sentence upon his wife's pet cat. Mr. Jack meets some of the boys and after dallying with gambrinus for an hour or so in his favorite cafe, sets sail for home. En route everybody, including the police, pick on him, but after a stormy voyage, he finally arrives. Mrs. Jack greets him with a hard-luck story about the disappearing cat and he is shaking hands with himself for having put one over on the wife when she asks him about a hat, that he has been bringing home for a week. "What's the idea of the third degree?" he asks and drags out a sketchy looking hat box. The lid is pried off and out tumbles a flock of cat and kittens. Mr. Jack has a "village cut-up" friend who has changed a hat into a cat—plus an armful of kittens. Mr. Jack is "out" for eight minutes.

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK For MANAGERS and OPERATORS is off the press and we are making huge shipments of them each day. The size of the edition was thought to be large enough for a demand twice as great as for the last Handbook, but we are staggered. At the present rate the new and better Handbook will soon be gone.

Send in your order now!

Over 700 pages and over 300 illustrations help to make a book that will be a lasting monument to its author's knowledge, ability and diligence. No such work on Projection has ever been attempted nor is it likely to be for many years to come. Price is $4.00 per copy, postpaid.

TransVerteR

Better Light Under Perfect Control
Better Pictures With Less Current

The Transverter is a compact, upright motor generator unit, that furnishes a superior controlled direct current, for motion picture projection.

At the will of the operator the amperage can be regulated as required for light or dark films, while the voltage automatically adjusts itself to the resistance of the arc.

The Transverter maintains a steady, perfect arc without waste of current, and furnishes a brilliant, white light, four times the candle power of alternating current.

It leaves the operator free to watch the screen and film, and makes possible more artistic projection of pictures with clear, sharp focus and true color values.

Simple to operate. Easy to install in any booth. Takes up little space.

There is a Transverter equipment, either for single or double arc for any power circuit.

Construction and efficiency guaranteed throughout.

Write today for folder "The Perfect Arc."

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS AND DEALERS NOTICE

On and after May 1st we will be located in our new building, 1023-25-27 Race Street. We will have the largest supply house of its kind in the world. Our new facilities for manufacturing of supplies will excel all others. Our new machine will be on demonstration at our new quarters shortly.

We are now testing our projector on the hardest possible methods. When we are satisfied that it is without defects, will issue a descriptive catalogue on it, a machine that will be better than the highest price machine in use, at a price that will be within the reach of all exhibitors.

We have a number of bargains on hand and a large supply of parts and accessories that you need. Let us quote you and answer your questions.

Health Board Finds Only 77 Properly Ventilated.

March 27

The Department of Health announced to-day that 334 motion picture houses out of a total of 518 in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx were so improperly ventilated as to be a menace to the public health. The proprietors of these houses, economically employing bad air as far as possible in place of heat have stopped the fans, which most of them have installed and, by keeping the outlets and exits tightly closed, even warming fresh air. The expelled air from an afternoon and evening of breathing of adults gives a degree of warmth and in many houses disinfectants are being used to disguise the smell of the air.

Only seventy-seven of the houses in the three boroughs were found to be ventilated properly. One hundred and seven were not in operation. The proprietors of the 334 remaining will be obliged to appear before License Commissioner Bell this week and explain why they also should not either ventilate or close.

The report of the Health Department is the result of a systematic investigation made March 18. The date was chosen because the weather was cold and the problem of getting fresh air correspondingly simpler. Previously Health Commissioner Emerson and License Commissioner Bell had visited several theatres together and reached the conclusion that every motion picture house in the city should be inspected by agents of the Department of Health the same night.

It was found that almost all the theatres had the facilities with which to comply with the law, but that they did not operate them on account of the cost.

Particularly unhealthful in the opinion of the Department is the use of disinfectants to disguise the smell. This practice was discovered in many places.

The health code provides that every theatre is required to supply 500 cubic feet an hour to each person, and that necessitates artificial means for circulating the air. The code requires also that the temperature in theatres must be kept between 62 and 70 degrees. The heating up to the temperature of air brought in through the wall fans therefore becomes requisite.

If these means are employed—as in seventy-seven of the places inspected—it is possible to keep the air both warm and fresh at the same time. The Department of Health and Bureau of Licenses desire that motion picture patrons shall cooperate with them by reporting any infringements of the code that come under their observation.

Authorities Investigated New York Theatres

Your Turn May Come Any Time

Investigations have been carried on recently in a great many towns to determine whether or not theatres are properly ventilated.

In many places ventilation is necessary to meet the requirements of the law. It will, however, do more for you than merely "get you by" as regards the law. It will make your theatre cool and comfortable and patronage will increase.

Modern audiences refuse to sit in hot, ill-ventilated theatres. Fresh air pays actual dividends and Sturtevant Fans will supply fresh air cheaper than any others.

Send us details of your theatre. Seating capacity, size, height, balcony, if any, location of doors and windows, and draw a rough floor plan if possible.

G-E Fans

Yes—G-E Fans are a big feature on hot days as far as box office receipts go. The cool house is the big house.

When buying Fans look for those with the G-E monogram in the center; there is over twenty years' experience in Fan Building behind it. Insist on G-E Fans—those that will be just as good five or six years hence as they are today—the quiet-running fans that need no more attention than oiling once a year.

To See The Incomparable

PAVLOWA

$52,000.00 in ONE week That's over $7,000.00 per day for 7 straight days. Compare this record-breaking accomplishment with any money-getting attraction you've ever heard of in your life. And remember that PAVLOWA had none of the extraordinary sets-props and huge ensemble you will see in "The Dumb Girl of Portici." On opening night, Monday, April 3rd, at the Globe Theatre, the house was packed to suffocation with a capacity crowd to see this marvelous masterpiece, pronounced the most lavish, most spectacular and most wonderful of ALL huge moving picture productions.

Read what New York Theatrical Critics said about PAVLOWA in "The Dumb Girl of Portici"

"The highest pinnacle of moving picture prowess."—New York Evening Journal.

"Nothing approaching its lavishness of detail has ever been shown upon the screen."
—(Another writer) in the New York Eve. Journal.

"The picture shows her to be still the incomparable."—New York American.

A stirring spectacle."—New York Herald.

"Pavlowa in film is equally the artist she has been in Opera."
—New York Journal of Commerce.

"The scenic effects in the play are remarkable and the architecture and general atmosphere of the seventeenth century are reproduced with artistry and fidelity."—New York Evening World.

THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

NOT only is the Universal Program the greatest program on earth in point of variety, class, and in being kept up to the very highest standard—but it has the largest following of movie fans by a majority of millions. It is the one most popular program, and as such it is the basis of success of thousands upon thousands of Exhibitors who were wise enough to arrange for its sterling service. Week after week the greatest stars, the best plays, the most thrilling punches, the most magnificent sets, the very finest achievement in program releases are presented to millions who are as loyal to their Universal favorites as to make their patronage assured to the Exhibitor with the least effort on his part. If you CAN get the Universal Program, grab it quick. If you cannot, watch for the first opportunity to tie up to this sure winner WHEN YOU CAN.

Hobart Bosworth in "Dr. Neighbor." With Dorothy Davenport and an exceptional cast. Fourteenth Red Feather Release. A most unusual problem play. Directed by Lloyd Carleton. Released May 1. The wonderful Scriptural story of the good Samaritan is first told to us in a most beautiful prologue, and brought down to the present, linked to the dramatic story of "Dr. Neighbor" in the most telling manner. As the story unfolds we are brought face to face with the problem which at some time confronts every sympathetic physician, "Shall I mercifully end the life of this hopeless sufferer and end her agony of pain?" No less an actor than Hobart Bosworth could have essayed the part of the doctor. No producer other than the Universal could have produced this remarkable picture with the sincerity and sympathy, the realistic detail and the general all-round bigness that marks this superb Red Feather production.

"The Purple Maze." With Stella Razeto, Juan De La Cruz, and Gladys Brockwell. Two Reel Gold Seal Emotional Drama. Directed by Ed. J. Le Saint. Released May 2. Two beautiful girls, fond of fun, of fluffy ruffles and other feminine fripperies, are introduced in this "easiest way" story in a manner to grip the interest from the first flash on the screen. How one chooses the broad and gayly lighted road that leads to destruction, and the other is saved by a great love makes an unusual and intensely dramatic photo play.

Mary Fuller in "The Girl Who Feared Daylight." With a Brilliant Supporting Cast. Two Reel Victor Romantic Drama. Directed by Lucius Henderson. Released May 3. Mary's uncle wishes to get control of her fortune. Part of his plot was to make Mary believe that if she exposed her eyes to the light of day she would be stricken blind. Yet, while Love is said to be blind, it was little Dan Cupid who opened her eyes to the truth. This fine play is further evidence of the superiority of Universal Program features.

"The Beloved Liar." With Thomas Jefferson and Zoe Bech. Three Reel Laemmle Heart Interest Drama. Directed by George Cochrane. Released May 4. Surely the spirit of the beloved Joe Jefferson still lives in the quaint and lovable characterizations of his talented son who plays the lead in this heart-throbbing drama. As an old violinist who loses the script of an opera he has written, to come into fame and fortune when it is found and produced without his knowledge, this marvelous character actor in this beautiful production adds lustre to the incomparable Universal Program. A photo drama that will please all your patrons.

"Lem's College Career." With Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compton. Two Reel Nestor Comedy. Directed by Al. Christie. Released May 5. When this bunch of Nestor comedians get together look out for the cleanest, most wholesome and funniest comedy stuff that you can possibly hand to your patrons. Eddie had a cinch on Betty's affections until Lee, the giddy college boy, appeared. After that, he had to take a college course to win her—for keeps. And the amount of fun these clever people extract from the story will set your audiences roaring with laughter.

"The Leap." With Lee Hill and Rene Rogers. Two Reel 101-Bison Railroad Drama. Directed by Henry McRae. Released May 6. Another smashing big railroad picture with a splendid plot, swift action, novel situations, tremendous scenes and a most unusual climax. Two lovers, the son and daughter of rival railroad presidents, baffle their father's enemies, and bring about a true friendship between their parents, who have been fighting each other for years. Lee leaves home after a quarrel with his father and becomes an engineer on a western railroad. He saves a runaway express train and the lives of its passengers by a daring leap from telegraph wires to the top of the flying cars. One of the most spectacular scenes ever shown in pictures. More evidence of the bigness of the Universal Program on which this great picture appears as a regular release.

"The Marriage of Arthur." With Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson. Two Reel Laemmle Society Drama. Directed by Rupert Julian. Released May 7. Arthur thought pretty well of himself and when his uncle left him a fortune on condition that he marry Agatha, he believed it a terrible sacrifice. He neglected her for other charmers, and it wasn't until she began playing the same game that he realized that she was attractive to him as she proved to be to other men. There's a snap and go to this picture, and some very handsome sets that mark it as unusual even for the mighty Universal Program.

All These Features Are Released on the Regular Universal Program.

RED FEATHER PHOTOPLAYS

Frank Keenan with Mary Boland in The Stepping Stone

How many loving wives struggle from morning till night, scrimp and save or go without even bare necessities for the sake of an unappreciative husband?

What is their reward in the end, luxury and happiness or wealth and mere glamor?

Does the man appreciate all that the woman is sacrificing?

These questions and many others form the keynote of the latest TRIANGLE-Ince Picture released for the week of April 16th.

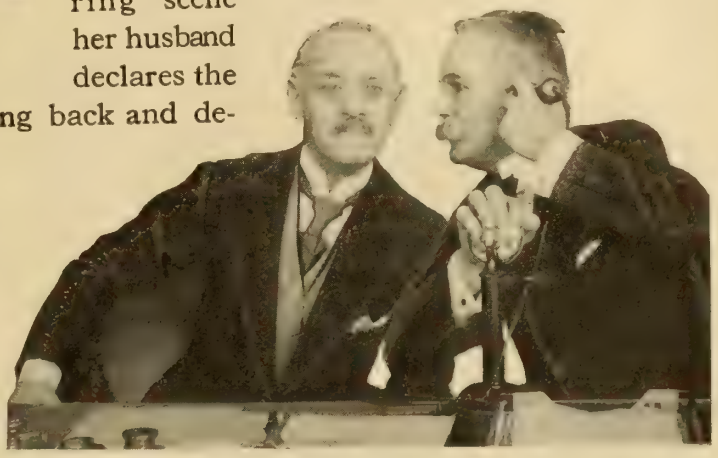
This is the kind of a picture that is bound to strike a responsive cord in the hearts of every woman. Perhaps it will awaken the conscience of some careless men, blessed with loving wives unapppreciated.

Seldom has there been a play which strikes home so forcibly—which touches a point so vitally interesting to the happiness of so many people.

Frank Keenan, who made such a reputation in "The Coward" so ably portrays the leading masculine role that your heart goes out to him in his sorrow.

Mary Boland, the popular actress, plays the leading feminine role, while Robert McKim takes the part of the husband

In "The Stepping Stone" the young wife greatly assists in the hard struggle to make both ends meet and uncomplainingly aids her unappreciative husband in every possible way. Success starts to come and the husband begins to tire of his faithful wife. This situation is observed by a great power in the financial world who decided that he wants just such a woman for his wife. At last in a stirring scene her husband declares the wife is interfering with his career, holding back and delaying success.



The outcome of this story is handled in a manner different from the usual method—the play ends in a way that will make your patrons feel that "this is one of the best pictures I have ever seen."

Are You a Triangle Exhibitor?

BLUEBIRD
PHOTOPLAYS (INC)

JUDGED by comparative values, BLUEBIRD Photoplays have established a new and higher standard for screen dramas than has ever before been considered possible. Not alone in fine photography, (the first moving picture essential), but in settings and locations, in the selection of stars and supporting casts, in artistic and masterly direction and in the current interest and timeliness of the subjects presented. No production is considered worthy of the BLUEBIRD brand unless in the opinion of a jury of Exhibitors and expert film critics it is found to be 100% perfect.

This policy is firmly and definitely established. The unlimited capital back of all BLUEBIRD progress is the Exhibitors' assurance that in booking BLUEBIRD releases he is in a position to offer his patrons the very best that is to be had in moving picture productions; raise the standard of his house and beyond all question add appreciably to his profits. BLUEBIRD Releases previously announced include:

WM. A. BRADY
DIRECTOR-GENERAL
WORLD FILM CORPORATION
130 W. 46TH STREET
NEW YORK CITY

April 10th, 1916.

TO THE EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA:-

Hereafter my name appears on no picture-play which I do not supervise personally.

From start to finish what you see from now on in World Pictures is mine.

For sometime past, I have loaned my stage plays to others for production, and my name went with them. But this has been a vast mistake. I commence to see that it was undermining my work of the past twenty-five years.

You have seen picture-plays which bore my name. Undoubtedly many of them made money for you. But henceforth when my name is on a picture, it means that I have chosen the scenario and supervised the production myself clear to the release.

Mr. Lee Shubert, Vice-President of the World Film Corporation, has brought about many changes which I insisted upon before I consented to give my own time and efforts to World Pictures. It is now possible for me to produce picture-plays of a higher standard - plays which I believe will mean a new day in Filmland.

We are announcing all our plans in an advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post, a copy of which you will see on the next pages. This announcement affects you personally, because we tell frankly just what has happened and just what it will mean to the motion picture industry.

I hope you will read this advertisement carefully so that you may be posted and know what to expect.

Then read about our great line-up of stars and our coming releases.

Yours truly,

William A. Brady

Director-General,
World Film Corporation.

EVENING POST ON MAY 6TH

This two-page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post is the first big announcement in the World Advertising Campaign.

WORLD PICTURES

Wm A. BRADY
Announces—
To Theatre Goers

Six weeks ago today I became Director-General of the World Film Corporation. And on that date all the talent and all the resources of two great organizations—the World and the Equitable—were combined.

From now on, I supervise PERSONALLY every World Picture Play from start to finish. Please do not think that I am lending my name—I am giving myself. I bring to motion pictures the experience I acquired in the past twenty-five years in the dramatic world.

This means to me a new ambition—I believe a new career. I am here to establish new standards.

"We must leave the beaten path", I said to Mr. Shubert. "Our prestige, our futures, are at stake. Here is our supreme chance for a greater place than ever."

When I consented to enter personally into the production of feature pictures, I demanded in exchange many conditions which are bound to create new artistic values.

I am convinced that there has been and still is an over-production of mediocre pictures. Quantity, not quality, has been the custom. Over-strain has robbed Art.

Scenario writers, directors, actors and photographers, everywhere must have more time, so as to put better craftsmanship into their work.

For this is truly an Art, not an industry. And creative art of any sort cannot be put on purely manufacturing basis.

Now the most talented actors and directors of two great companies have been united—giving me, I believe, a most remarkable opportunity to express, in every detail, what I consider the utmost in this art.

I shall now produce but one picture a week. To do this, I have at my command the artistic and financial resources formerly used by two leading companies which made two good pictures a week. As in my stage plays, I will now be able to put into World Pictures nice handling, unusual treatment, infinite pains.

Around me are gathered such master players as Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Carlyle Blackwell, Gail Kane, Ethel Clayton, House Peters, Frances Nelson, Holbrook Blinn, Muriel Ostriche, Clara Whipple and Mollie King.

To assist me are directors of the highest calibre, such as Maurice Tourneur, Albert Cappallani, Frank Crane, Emile Chautard, John Ince, Barry O'Neill, Edwin August, S. E. V. Taylor. I do not know of any group where so much dramatic experience is combined as in this one. Each man has great successes to his credit. Every World Picture is bound to be a study in technique.

So now I am surrounded by one organization which permits me to carry out my most cherished plans on a large scale and establish those standards which I feel must finally prevail throughout the realm of silent drama.

The World Pictures now being released are the first of my new-day productions. These plays typify those standards which have led me to success. They are clean plays and gripping, heart-touching and real. In them and in their presentations you'll find my highest conception of real dramatic art.

Thousands of theatres are showing my new productions. Go and see them. On your verdict I will either rise or fall.

WORLD PICTURES

LEE SHUBERT Announces— To Exhibitors

Mr. Wm. A. Brady, in producing World Pictures, opens up a new Photo-Play epoch.

He now brings to the screen all of his high ideals, all of his ability as a director and all his ambition to win the friendship of a larger audience.

This means for the silent drama the same high standards he attained in spoken drama. It brings to the picture plays new interest, new respect. World Pictures, from this time on, will occupy a plane of their own.

Famous names have heretofore been loaned to screen productions. But now for the first time a producer of first magnitude takes personal charge.

When Mr. Brady consented to become Director-General of World Pictures, his first aim was for fewer pictures, because fewer pictures means better pictures. He demanded the following conditions:

(1) Concentrated efforts. He rebelled at over-production and spreading out artistic and financial resources. Mr. Brady insisted that we temporarily discontinue Equitable Pictures and trasfer all their resources to World Pictures—thus uniting for the present two great companies.

(2) More artistic talent. Mr. Brady exacted that, without losing any of their own artists and experts, World Pictures should gain all the famous actors, all the wealth of plays, all the seasoned directors, and all the photographic genius formerly belonging to Equitable Pictures.

(3) Plenty of time. Mr. Brady maintained that it was artistically impossible to produce master-plays under forced schedules. World and Equitable formerly produced 104 picture plays yearly. Now the united forces work with less strain and more time thus giving time for real creative work.

(4) Unlimited finances. Mr. Brady has been given free rein. Every dollar necessary for unhampered productions is available. His artistic resources are unlimited.

Mr. Brady now predicts the very summit in histrionic art, and I, appreciating the changes which have taken place, stake my own dramatic place on that prediction.

This is but the initial announcement of our new policy. There will soon be a universal desire to see plays produced by Mr. Brady. The public will quickly awake to these new standards and the theatre world will applaud them.

Several new Brady-made plays are now ready for release. These plays are certain to popularize the theatres which show them.

May I urge those progressive exhibitors controlling the better-class theatres who wish to please their patrons at once with the new Brady-made productions, to telegraph me immediately or fill out the coupon below and mail it in a special delivery envelope to me personally.

Of course in every community we will have to adopt the rule—"First come, first served" That is why I suggest telegraphing so that one of my representatives may be sent to you without delay.

Wm. A. BRADY Director General

What Mr. Brady's Letter and Our Advertisement Means To You

We want to take you behind the scenes and talk to you frankly.

First let us say that, as a direct result of the recent re-organization of the World Film Corporation, remarkable changes have taken place which will interest and affect every exhibitor. Maybe you have heard rumors. Here are the facts.

The advertisement just shown announces but the first of a number of important happenings which have occurred, and others which will take place. They will be unfolded to you from time to time. Our new policy does not permit us to feed you promises.

Now Comes the Show-Down

So we come to you now as man to man and lay our cards on the table.

That two-page advertisement shown to the right, when stripped of the language necessary in an advertisement appearing in a general publication, means simply this:

(1) Wm. A. Brady has become Director-General of World Pictures.

(2) The World Film Corporation has absorbed the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation—the program of the latter being discontinued temporarily

(3) Without losing any of its own stars, directors or resources, World Pictures have gained all the stars, directors and resources of Equitable Pictures.

(4) In uniting these great forces under Mr. Brady's personal supervision, the World Film Corporation can safely predict pictures of a higher standard—not merely compared with its own past productions, but compared with any program.

(5) Exhibitors who have longed for a dependable program may now obtain it by contracting for World Pictures.

Performances Instead of Promises

Since the reorganization of the World Film Corporation, you know that we have not given a single promise that has not been fulfilled. And this concern will make no future promises—but actually perform first. Mr. Brady has convinced us all that the whole industry must be placed on a firm, substantial basis. We are going to do our part.

WORLD PICTURES

Wm. A. BRADY Director General

The reorganization of the World Film Corporation was brought about because we realized that some one company would have to strike out and do away with the conditions that have existed. The directors and officers of the World Film Corporation have anticipated the revolution which is certain to come quickly throughout the industry.

Our goods speak for themselves. We are marketing a standardized product and we are perfectly willing to let the merit of this product either make or break us. And this is the only way that any true success can be attained by any concern. You know that.

Old Methods Must Go

We are perfectly willing and anxious to be the first ones to confess that the reason you have not been getting better pictures is because motion picture plays have been produced on a wrong basis. Real acting cannot be put on a fast time schedule. Plays cannot be manufactured like automobiles.

We have called a halt in our organization by doing away with over-production. If others would do the same the whole art of the silent drama would be greatly improved and all of us would make more money, at the same time giving the people greater satisfaction.

We Cut Our Schedule in Two

The World Film Corporation has been scheduling 104 World and Equitable Pictures a year. But now we see that it was a wrong policy and we have stopped it. For the stage, Mr. Brady says that it is artistically impossible for him or any other producer to create yearly 104 dramatic successes. And likewise he says that it is utterly foolish to attempt 104 film successes a year. You have seen the result, you know what you have been getting. Common sense tells you that a breakneck pace kills quality.

Standardization Will Win

It is now possible for us to create a new average of excellence. And we can hold this average of excellence at a place where we can safely say that every World Picture is a dependable picture. We mean by this a picture which you, Mr. Exhibitor, can rely upon to please a larger number of your patrons.

Mr. Brady shares with you and your patrons supreme disgust for poor picture plays. He is working for that same sort of revolution which signalized his advent into the stage world. For twenty-five years Mr. Brady has studied the public and he knows just what appeals to folks.

12 Great Stars of First Magnitude Now Featured in World Pictures

Supported by the Entire Staff of Film Favorites of Two Great Companies

After Mr. Brady now decides on a scenario, and desires to select the cast, he has a wealth of artistic ability on hand He can pick and choose. He can select from twelve great stars instead of six, as is the usual case. Without losing any of its own stars, World gains all the stars which belonged to Equitable

Permanent Stars on the World Program

And the best of it all is that the stars shown here are on long-time contracts with the World Film Corporation and each will appear regularly at intervals. You will not have any of these stars for only one picture. A system of rotation is in effect so that in every fifth or sixth picture a star will appear again.

Your patrons will come to know and like Mr. Brady's casts. In a way, Mr. Brady has a stock company of players and in many pictures he will use more than one star

Complete Cast Carefully Selected

You have seen many pictures which were "star-heavy"—with a great star and a cheap company. You won't see this in World Pictures under Mr. Brady's supervision. He has long been noted in the stage world as one who insists on excellent casts, from the star to the smallest parts.

With twice as much ability at hand, Mr. Brady is able to select for each picture play a splendid group of actors who can interpret his ideas sympathetically. Straight into pictures will be brought all the fine acting of the better stage plays. And every one of the World stars has a tremendous following. Look them over and think how it will increase your attendance when you can offer such favorites regularly.

WORLD PICTURES

Wm A BRADY Director General

The First of the Brady-made Pictures Are Now Ready for Release

Greater Satisfaction for Your Patrons

All the art of the drama is now brought into pictures by Mr. Brady. He has twice as many plays to choose from, twice as many actors, twice as many directors, twice as many photographers, and in fact throughout the production of World Pictures, there is now doubled equipment. There is more time to think out details, more time for rehearsals, more time to arrange settings, more time for finer acting.

The moving picture public wants most of all dependable pictures. People want to be assured, when they make up their minds to go to the theatre, that they will not see an inferior production. They want the average to be higher than it has been in the past.

You Can Steadily Increase the Attendance

Because of better dramas, more great stars and our national advertising campaign, people will want to see World Pictures produced by Mr. Brady.

From now on a contract for World Pictures gives you positive assurance of a highly dependable program, with an unmatchable average of excellence. You can face your patrons with more confidence.

You can now be assured of pictures which will appeal to the greatest number of people. Read what Mr. Shubert says on the back page. He knows how to win the public.

Added Profits Will Be the Final Proof

Your good business judgment tells you that these changes in policy mean that World Pictures are destined to take first rank. Your good business judgment also tells you that your greatest earning power would be possible only by hooking up with the leader.

You are entitled to some insurance against risky pictures. Yet in the past you have never been able to control the quality of your program.

Don't wait. Get World Pictures now.

WORLD PICTURES

Wm. A. BRADY Director General

From One Showman to Another

A Message from Lee Shubert

You know, as well as I do, that your and my success depends on winning the public.

Through all my years of experience I have realized that what money I make depends on how great a following I can get. To get a greater following, one has to give people something a little bit better than that offered by the other fellow.

Great show successes always depend on the ability of some one man to read the public's mind and to touch the hearts of the masses and the classes alike. This also makes him a great business man.

You cannot dispute the fact that Mr. Brady has been successful. Mr. Brady never put on a stage play in his life without the sort of human interest that reaches all classes.

So I bank on his selecting for World Pictures the kind of plays which will appeal to the largest number of people. And he is staging these plays properly and including favorite stars.

Mr. Brady brought startling innovations into the Stage World, and I know that he will do the same in Filmland.

I am firmly convinced that Brady-made pictures will draw the biggest crowds. They are neither cheap thrillers nor too highbrow—neither one extreme nor the other. This means the greatest possible pulling power for you.

As one showman to another—both of us being interested in making more money and safeguarding our investments—my advice to you is this: Do not run the risk of losing this great opportunity to secure Brady-made pictures. Don't hesitate. Don't wait. You will win out if you act at once.

Sign that blank today and mail it to me personally so that we can get in touch with you at once. Remember, "first come, first served."

Facts and Comments

ROCHESTER, N. Y., is suffering from a local epidemic of censorship. One of the old friends and readers of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, an exhibitor of many years experience and a pillar of the Rochester organization writes to us enclosing many newspaper accounts of the local censorship movement. This exhibitor urges us to arouse the manufacturers to the need of clean films and alludes in plain terms to certain makers who specialize in undesirable features. It is a pity that the many decent producers are made to suffer for the deliberate sins of one or two. Here is a problem which seems to invite the best activities of the new Board of Trade. A strong producers' organization ought to be able to set certain tsandards and to enforce adherence thereto.

A WELL-KNOWN director overwhelms us with this sudden question: "What is the matter with the American-born motion picture director in these perilous times? Why is it you see employed a preponderance of foreign born directors making or trying to make films portraying every day American life and a startling number of United States born men, sober, reliable, industrious, directors of standing who have a long list of successes to their credit walking about looking for jobs and unable to find them?" We are sure we don't know. The screen is a distinctly international institution and a director's birthplace is in itself neither an advantage nor a disadvantage. It does seem, however, that portrayals of American life are best handled by American directors. Perhaps there are some readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD who can answer our friend's question more satisfactorily than we are able.

THE local authorities in an official report speak of the decay of the "small house" and hasten to add that the removal of these houses removes likewise a menace to health. Somehow when we draw upon our own observation we cannot follow this indiscriminate condemnation of the small house. The writer has traveled a little among exhibitors and he knows that many a small house is conducted irreproachably while many a large house reminds one of an animated barn. It's not a matter of size. When it comes to the specific complaint of bad ventilation with which the above mentioned official report deals the same principle holds true. Size does not matter at all. It all depends on the individuality of the exhibitor

ACCORDING to the latest reliable reports another European country has decided to prohibit the importation of foreign made films. It is Germany which is now following the example of England. There has, of course, been no film trade between this country and Germany and our producers cannot at this time be hurt by the edict of the German government. With the doors of Europe gradually closing against American-made films the Latin-American market looms up promisingly. In the general growth of Pan-American sentiment the film business ought to be second to none.

WE NOTE with considerable satisfaction the defeat in the New York Assembly of the Ahern censorship bill. This bill was fought before the codes committee by the representatives of the entire industry. We pointed out its many vicious provisions. Though some of our objections were afterward met by amendments to the bill the measure as a whole remained as bad as ever. The exhibitors throughout the state appealed to the assemblymen to vote against the bill and this, no doubt, had its effect. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD helped the good fight along by printing for many weeks a complete list of the names and addresses of the Assembly. This made it very convenient for the exhibitors to register their protest with their assemblymen. A callow legislator made himself very conspicuous on the floor of the assembly in championing the Ahern Bill. This man was Frank Aronow representing the 20th Manhattan District. We hope the local exhibitors league will do its best to defeat this man if he ever seeks another office at the hands of the people.

Caterpillar to Butterfly*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

TO MIRROR the classics is delightful, but the mind of man, even when it is not cracked, or even when it is not warped in the making, may reflect from varied angles and many different viewpoints, hence the mere adaptation of classic stories for screen use rarely adjusts the old fabric to new circumstances without a loss of the original spirit and no compensating new spirit in the readjustment. It thus happens, in spite of elaborate expenditure on the part of producers, that our Carmens, Cinderellas, Camilles and Cleopatras are about as impressive as so many paste diamonds.

No amount careful polishing and costly setting can make up for the lack of native brilliancy. We have only to study history to know that the best examples of story expression have not been improved by conscientious reflection of old plots, but by the imaginative grasp of character and situation on the part of men who knew how to formulate from the materials in hand some entirely new and beautiful structure. If any one of the many producers who have studied literary history will sit back in his chair and reflect, if he will recall the most successful representations of well-known myth and legend, he will realize that it requires present-day creative ability to transform the old work to suit the rapidly-changing and progressive tastes of the people for whom the new production is specifically intended.

We may examine the methods of modern playwrights, certain noted examples of D'Annunzio, Granville Barker, Maeterlinck, Rostand, and others, or we may go back to the Immortal Bard, or we may browse among the writers of Greek tragedy and we will find that the same theme has been treated by many different dramatists in almost as many different periods and by quite as many different methods.

The German legend known as "Faust" found matrical transformation at the hands of the Bishop of London, then in a German rimed version, then in a French one by Cayet, then through a Dutch production then Marlowe's play appeared. This play started another by Lessing, and still another version by Muller, all these nearly two centuries before Goethe's tragedy was published, with a number of intervening efforts. Yet practically all are unknown except the one masterly handling of the subject with which we are familiar.

The same kind of mental grasp, power of concentration, fertility of imagination and correctness of constructive method used in original effort are required to transform the caterpillar into a butterfly. It is the effort of an artist, not of a hired man, though there may be artists among those working for hire among producers, because it is difficult for a true artist to otherwise obtain recognition and anything like an adequate compensation for the quality of effort required. That is possibly because the scenario, unlike the novel, may be classed with raw material, and it is a rare producer who can pass judgment until he sees the finished product, if then.

Read the stories of Boccaccio and point out which furnished the love story in Cymbeline, which supplied the plot of "All's Well That Ends Well," and what part of "Merchant of Venice" came from the same source. Little Shakespeare cared about following the original structure. There was not a question of fidelity to original involved. The idea was to utilize everything of merit in the older production in an entirely new and original story suited to the tastes of the people addressed at a later period.

If the first purpose of a screen story is to interest those who go to see it, why reflect anything that is stupid in a novel or a stage production. Why not eliminate much that requires explantion, as well as all that is dull, and replace the rejected material, particularly if it is outworn, with new structure suited to screen portrayal and incidents tending to enliven the old theme. If the story can be made more interesting to the modern audience by a change in its general character, why not replace adaptation with complete transformation?

One of the most delightful features of motion-picture composition is a sense of freedom from convention. An author may well familiarize himself with all the rules and regulations that impose a restraint upon him in the older arts of expression for the sake of studying all points of view, but he is then wholly at liberty so far as the new art is concerned. By way of illustration, consider the idea of "planting" in advance some sign posts of preparation so that people may not be taken by surprise when some surprising things happen. Do our plans in real life turn out as we expected?

There are times when preparation is absolutely necessary, particularly to make an unusual event a plausible one, but writers acquire the habit of laborious preparation in novel and stage drama to an extent that is destructive of sustained interest in the screen story. This old suspense-eliminating habit is preserved in the average adapation from works of fiction and stage production with an effect not unlike that of going over the same road twice when there exists a hope, if not an anticipation of seeing something entirely new. Some such plays are about as absorbing as is looking out into one's own back yard.

Common human experience is that of gazing around from the front door-step for a grand opportunity to rise in the world, while some little unassuming opportunity is humbly knocking at the kitchen door. Scarcely one of our plans is fulfilled in accord with our hopes, and it is not at all unusual when we do make a hit that the "unexpected has happened." Surprise, often of a staggering sort, is the rule, or is a weighty exception, in everyday existence, yet one of the strictest of dramatic rules is that nothing of that kind must be sprung on an audience.

Due attention must be given to this authoritative maxim in almost any consistent adaptation. "The dramatist must never keep a secret from his audience." But there is going to be no butterfly if that rule is indiscriminately applied to motion-picture composition. Most of us don't want to know what is coming on the screen. Bang goes an opening act that mystifies and holds us enthralled until the crisis is reached. Dramtic construction often requires that the audience shall be made aware of all antecedent causes before any effects are shown, but that rule does not apply to screen visualization.

Such is the case with a long list of stage traditions and fictional methods. They may be suited to the older means of telling the story, to the intermediaries of print and utterance, but the screen presentation is without tradition, and its methods may easily be the more delightful that they partake of the author's originality and the director's added taste in treatment. Better far select wisely from old materials, as did Goethe and Shakespeare, and develop and marshall these materials so as to portray human motive and human character as the people in front know them to be.

An Example to be Followed

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE public meeting recently held under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Screen Club for the purpose of protesting against the censorship of motion pictures ought to receive the most earnest consideration of all friends of a free screen. The members of the club acting in cooperation with the Exhibitors League made their appeal to the public. One of the best theaters in the city was donated for the purpose. A series of splendid pictures was shown including a cartoon illustrating in entertaining fashion the absurdities of censorship. Speeches were made from the stage explaining to the audience wherein the censorship of motion pictures was not only an injustice to the industry, but likewise a dangerous menace to the freedom of expression. The press of the city acted in hearty accord with the moving picture men and promised its future support.

It seems to us that such intelligent and organized activity on the part of film men ought to win for them the hearty support of every branch of the industry. The best way to beat censorship is to enlighten the public. The public is willing to listen. Any thing that touches their favorite entertainment is sure to interest them. I can testify from personal experience that motion picture audiences can easily be put on record as opposed to censorship. They resent very promptly any attempt to interfere with their enjoyment of the motion picture. They have proved quite responsive to the argument that censorship cannot be trusted to impose its own standards upon millions and millions of other people. There is something in the average American which instinctively rebels against unfairness and oppression.

The Moving Picture World would gladly see the agitation against censorship become state-wide in Pennsylvania. The example set by Pittsburgh ought to be followed in every other part of the state. In order to do this effectively and to keep it up vigorously until the next legislature meets it will be necessary to have funds. The men interested in the abolition of censorship must know that it costs money to enlighten public opinion and public sentiment cannot be aroused until it is properly enlightened.

The Pan-American Screen

By W. Stephen Bush.

ON DARK and dreary days—there were many of them this unblessed winter—I often go into the archives of my transatlantic travels and cheer myself by reading some of the amusing literature I gathered in European hotels and resorts. It's all intended to be in English, and it is funnier than Ollendorf ever was or could be. These good men of Italy and France and Germany, etc., want to give the stranger from America something to make him feel happy and they succeed beyond their fondest hopes. This "English" hotel and guide literature is put together with the combined aid of a crowbar and a dictionary and it's the greatest cure for the blues.

Just now I have finished reading an article in one of the great New York dailies taking the American business man to task for his funny Spanish. The Moving Picture World is interested in Latin-America and believes that Pan-Americanism has no more powerful ally than the screen. So far the great barrier between the two continents has been the difference in the two languages. Of course there are other differences as well, but they are in the last analysis founded upon this one fundamental difference. Break down this one barrier and the other obstacles to a more intimate social and commercial relationship will disappear of themselves. Nothing will bring this about more quickly and more easily than the screen. Ever since we have had motion pictures the nations have seen and learned more of each other. Racial prejudice is dying. The intimate views we get of each other's social customs and of each other's ambitions and difficulties make us more tolerant and less critical.

Of course we know by this time that the present moment is the psychological moment for getting an unshakable foothold in the Latin-American market. This is especially true of the film business. England may shut out foreign-made films at any moment and other European countries will probably follow suit. The two Americas will have to get into better touch with each other.

The Moving Picture World in establishing a Spanish edition has in all respects followed the counsel of experts and has avoided the mistakes frequently made by Americans who want to export to South-America. "Cine-Mundial" is edited by natives of Spanish-speaking countries. These men have a wide and intimate knowledge of conditions in our Latin sister-republics. They speak the real language of these countries, not a poor imitation. The columns of Cine-Mundial appeal to the Latin-American in his own tongue and from his own viewpoint. Hence they are sure of notice by the readers. Cine-Mundial smoothes the way of the American film producer into the Latin-American market. It will carry your advertisement in the language which these countries understand and appreciate, but it does more than that. It aids and advises you in an expert way. Each issue is its own testimonials of excellence. Cine-Mundial has a real circulation; there is nothing cryptic about it.

The Pan-American screen will in time give the American producer a needed outlet for his films. He who goes at the present moment will reap the advantage of the first comer. If you are interested the first thing for you to do is to write in and ask for a sample copy of Cine-Mundial.

Tact is a Wonderful Thing

By W. Stephen Bush.

LOUIS MANN an actor of some note recently expressed himself in somewhat cutting fashion on the subject of motion pictures. An old friend of the Moving Picture World writes to us enclosing a report from a newspaper of Altoona Pa. Mr. Mann is reported as saying: "Over every moving picture house I would place the sign 'the home of non-intellectuals.'" All this was said in the course of an address delivered to the Altoona Chamber of Commerce. We quote from the account of his speech: "Motion pictures are purely mechanical without the red blood of life. The camera in no wise can depict the emotions and no mentality is required to make a successful motion picture actor." The speaker after dwelling with a proper degree of indignation on the evil effect of motion pictures on the children informs us that "he has been offered vast sums, so large that they would seem staggering to give up the 'legitimate' and become a screen actor but that his inherent love for the spoken drama is so great that he has burned his bridges behind him and if any one wants to see Louis Mann play he will have to attend the real theater for he will never appear in the moving pictures."

We have always admired Mann's acting abilities but we never suspected him of so much tact and delicacy as he has shown in this address. At the time when the motion picture industry is making a most unselfish and a most heroic effort to raise money for the Actor's Fund the speech of Mr. Mann is particularly appropriate. The gentleman should forthwith be drafted for the diplomatic service.

World Film Absorbs Equitable

Producing Forces of the Two Companies to Be Combined Under the Direction of William A. Brady—Output Cut in Half.

ANNOUNCING the disappearance of one great film organization, the elimination of no less than fifty-four features from the market and the concentration of all the energies of two film producing concerns, with capacity of one hundred and four features a year, into the production of but fifty-two subjects per year, the World Film Corporation, under the guidance now of William A. Brady and Lee Shubert, makes the series of statements herein that required ten pages of advertising space to fully explain.

Of William A. Brady, little in the way of introduction is required. His universe of activities during the past twenty-five years in every field of popular entertainment has elevated him to that stage in American amusements where his name at the head of an announcement means as much to the box offices throughout the country as the names of stars and great plays. Evidently his ambitions in film production may parallel his efforts in the legitimate field, for with the blending of the Equitable Company's production department with that of the World and the retirement of Equitable from the producing field Mr. Brady makes the broad statement that never again will he permit the use of his name upon any film production which he has not personally supervised from the selection of the scenario to the very end. His own words better tell his determination:

"From now on I supervise every World Film pictureplay from start to finish. Please do not think I am lending my name; I am giving myself. I bring to motion pictures the experience I acquired in the past twenty-five years in the dramatic world. This means to me a new ambition—I believe a new career. I am here to establish new standards. I am convinced there has been and still is an overproduction of mediocre pictures. Quantity and not quality has been the custom. Overstrain has robbed the art. Scenario writers, directors, actors, photographers, everybody must have more time so as to put better craftsmanship into their work."

This is the nucleus of Mr. Brady's belief. That his ideas were concurred in by the executives of World and Equitable is seen by reason of the fact that the entire equipment of both the World and Equitable corporations have been united. World Film, beginning May 15, will release but one picture a week, and to do this William A. Brady will have at his command the artistic and financial resources formerly employed by two companies producing two pictures a week. The opportunity for nice handling, unusual treatment and infinite pains is doubled; the equipment and time allowance to achieve artistic results increased one hundred per cent.

Lee Shubert, representing the Shubert Theatrical Enterprises, whose plays and great reserves of Broadway successes are at the disposal of World Film, in a few well-chosen words tells of the long standing ambition of Mr. Brady to concentrate the resources of World and Equitable into the one producing unit:

"Mr. Brady rebelled at overproduction and insisted that we discontinue Equitable pictures and transfer all their resources to World pictures. He asked that, without sacrificing any of World's artists and experts, the World should gain all the famous actors, all the wealth of plays, all the seasoned directors and all the photographic genius of Equitable. He maintained that it was artistically impossible to produce master plays under forced schedule. World and Equitable formerly produced one hundred and four pictures a year; now the two forces united will produce fifty-two pictures, thus halving the strain of production and giving time for real creative work. Thus he is given every means, every dollar necessary for unhampered production. His resources are unlimited."

Thus the difficulty that has so long been affecting the industry—more features than the trade could assimilate, more features than could be properly played, more productions than even a rising market could absorb—is on the road to adjustment.

And with the announcement of the absorption of the Equitable by World Film comes the announcement of the most widespread and far-reaching advertising campaign instituted by any film concern and which will have its inception May 6 when a double-page display will open the campaign throughout the United States in the foremost magazines and periodicals of the calibre of the Saturday Evening Post. The first announcement in the Saturday Evening Post is in the form of a confidential chat with the public at large by William A. Brady and Lee Shubert, with a key coupon for the exhibitor attracted by the announcement.

The stars and directors whose affiliation with World Film in the past have helped establish World Film and themselves remain. Equitable will bring to World Film's roster and equipment such noted players as Gail Kane, who since her becoming associated with the camera has established herself admirably in the hearts of film patrons; Clara Whipple, Jane Grey, Gerda Holmes, Carlyle Blackwell, Ethel Clayton, Muriel Ostriche, Bruce McRae, Frank Sheridan, Edna Wallace Hopper, Arthur Ashley and such noted directors as John Ince, S. E. V. Taylor, Harley Knoles and others who will be associated with the famous World stars, Alice Brady, Robert Warwick, Holbrook Blinn, Kitty Gordon, Mollie King, Edwin August, Frances Nelson, June Elvidge, Doris Kenyon, Clara Kimball Young, House Peters and the noted directorial geniuses: Maurice Tourneur, Emile Chautard, Albert Capellani, Travers Vale, Edwin August, Barry O'Neill, Frank Crane, George Lederer, James Durkin, Frank Thornby and Ray Physioc.

With the first broadside in the great advertising campaign, starting May 6, will begin the wide dissemination of news matter and exhibitors' helps from the newly established department at World Film headquarters in New York.

C. R. Seelye With Pathe

Advertising and Sales Expert Is Engaged by J. A. Berst for a Special Survey of the Industry.

THE announcement that J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Company, has secured the services of C. R. Seelye, the well-known sales and advertising expert, is another indication of the tendency among the foremost producers to adopt progressive business methods that have been found profitable in other lines and adapted to the needs of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Seelye first became prominent in film circles when he introduced modern merchandising into the World Film Corporation. Later, as assistant general manager of V-L-S-E, he applied the same policies on a yet more elaborate scale and with such marked success that Mr. Berst, general manager of the Selig Company at the time, recognized and remembered their value.

Commenting on Pathe's acquisition of Mr. Seelye, Mr. Berst said: "We have engaged Mr. Seelye because Pathe wants that quality of talent that will mutually benefit the exhibitor and ourselves. Mr. Seelye is a scientist, a sales scientist, who has studied the situation from the logical standpoint of adequate revenue from legitimate source. He has plotted out the country much as a general plots out a battlefield. His theories have proven practical wherever they have been applied and while the problems that must be solved by Pathe are in a way different to those of the other film companies they involve the same basic principles.

"Mr. Seelye will visit our exchanges and make a careful study of conditions in the various territories. He will secure the co-operation of the local newspapers with our exhibitors, advise the branch managers of ideas that will increase box-office receipts and suggest such changes as will benefit the service."

Mr. Seelye's history is well known to Moving Picture World readers. Before entering the film business he had gained a national reputation as an authority on merchandising, especially as applied to advertising and selling. He lays special stress on the fact that the greatest efficiency can be gained by teaching and promoting present employees rather than by engaging new men; for that reason it is not expected that he will recommend many changes in the present Pathe sales force, but will devote his energies to developing the efficiency of the organization as it now stands.

The outstanding feature of the Seelye sales system is the cultivation of business for the exhibitor. He reverses the usual methods and secures increased business for the manufacturer by first increasing the business of the exhibitor. In other words, as Mr. Berst says, he secures "adequate revenue from the legitimate source."

Asked regarding his plans for the promotion of Pathe business, Mr. Seelye said he had been employed merely to study the present methods and after investigation to work out, if possible, certain advanced ideas suggested by Mr. Berst.

MARGUERITE CLARK RUMOR DENIED.

The rumor printed in a theatrical paper last week that Marguerite Clark was to leave the Famous Players for the Eastern Film Corporation is denied on all sides. Miss Clark will continue with the Famous Players.

Screen Club Aids Actor's Fund

Screener Daniel Frohman, Fund President, is Guest of Honor at Dinner Where Over $2,000 Is Raised.

DANIEL-FROHMAN was guest of honor at the Screen Club on the evening of Saturday, April 8. The occasion was a dinner for the benefit of the Actors' Fund. It was a memorable night for the Screen Club. Mr. Frohman was moved to remark as he was leaving the clubhouse at the end of the dinner that the action of the club in contributing over $2,000 toward the fund would start a movement that would spread over all the country. He said it was the most splendid thing in the history of the campaign. Seated at the left hand of President Quirk was Nat Goodwin, who contributed to the hilarity of the evening by one of his characteristic speeches. There were talks and stories by members of the club and songs by professional entertainers.

Mr. Frohman, who is a member of the Screen Club, in his opening remarks, referred to the mistake of the man who put Daniel of old in the fiery furnace instead of in the lion's den, adding that "for my part I too would much rather be lionized than roasted." The veteran producer told of the formation of the Actors' Fund thirty-five years ago on the stage of Wallack's theater, by among others Lester Wallack, Joseph Jefferson and William Florence. The impelling motive was to do away with the many relief subscriptions continually being posted at the theaters.

"Being perhaps the youngest man connected with the theater in New York, I was named as secretary of the meeting," said Mr. Frohman. "There was no treasurer or any treasury, and for the first few weeks I dispensed charity out of my vest pocket. Seventy thousand dollars is spent annually now for the relief of the sick and destitute. No call is unheeded in any part of the United States. We give relief first and investigate later. We now care for an average of 600 destitute persons every week. At the Home we care for thirty-six old actors and actresses. We are anxious this year to raise an endowment fund of a million dollars, so that we may not be dependent on benefits to replenish our treasury."

At the conclusion of the dinner President Quirk started the ball rolling. Stanner E. V. Taylor and Tefft Johnson were the leaders in the work, the former contributing $350 and the latter over $200. Each took life memberships in the fund at $50 and also for their respective wives, known to photoplaygoers as Marion Leonard and Mabel Kelley. Among others who laid down their checks—and this by no means represents their total contributions for the evening were David Horsley, $100; Oscar Eagle, $100, for himself and Esther Lyon Eagle; Harry Sheldon, $115; Earl Metcalfe, Creighton Hale, William J. Rathbun, Charles Brandt, James Kirkwood, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Arthur Ashley, King Baggot, John G. Adolphi, E. K. Lincoln, Frank Beresford and "Doc" Willat, $50 each.

Mr. Goodwin, in opening, referred to the silent hours he had recently experienced in Jacksonville when engaged "in holding the Mirror up to nature." "It affords me great pleasure once more to hear the sound of my voice," he went on. "I have been so long screening I am almost ashamed to hear it. I am glad to meet and to take part in the welcome to Mr. Frohman, the president of the Actors' Fund. You know I have been trying for several years to break into the Actors' Fund Home. After ten years spent among the Naked Sons of California I feel the time has arrived.

"I remember one day wandering through Santa Monica and seeing a couple of hundred people with painted faces and funny make-ups lying by the roadside. Looking on them with pity, I discovered they were moving picture actors. I condoled with them and walked on. Little did I know they were waiting for me.

"A few years later I walked into a studio and was engaged. I tried to comprehend the two or three dialects of the managers who engaged me. I failed. I produced a picture. They told me it was very good. I didn't agree with them—because I discovered that the screen is the only thing in thirty years that has been on the level with me. I never before knew I looked so awful. My only regret is that I didn't enter upon the screen actors' profession thirty years ago. I am convinced that several of the ladies who have worn my name would have reneged—and saved me a lot of money.

"After I had perpetrated this picture I strolled around looking at vacancy. Everybody on the lot shook me by the hand. My last wife said, 'Yes' and 'No.' Still, the fact remained that I had made a hit on the screen that time. I waited around after the making of the picture. Nobody came near me. I was the loneliest man in California. I had expected they were going to break into my house and abduct me for another picture.

"I returned to the stage and they faded me out of Auburn and panorammed me back to Utica. After a few weeks of fluctuating business and losing my voice two or three times so I could not play, I went back to the screen. Thank God! The result is I am still screening."

"The sum contributed by the Screen Club will go far to help the destitute and the sick," said Mr. Frohman. "No officer of the Actors' Fund draws any salary. Remuneration goes only to clerks and investigators. The fund is the greatest charity in the world. Statistics show that it costs us only from 10 to 11 cents to take care of every case. In other organizations it costs from 40 to 60 cents to spend $1."

Among those who also spoke were Marc MacDermott, James Lackaye, George Richards, Albert Roccardi and Maurice Costello. William McKenna, Burt Grant, Joe Young and Jimmie Flynn sang and William Cahill told stories.

Beefsteak Dinner at Screen Club in Aid of Actors' Fund at Which $2,000 Was Contributed.

Fund Swelled by Players

Actors in Many Studios Assist in Raising $500,000 for Permanent Endowment.

THEDA BARA, Pearl White and Marguerite Clark are the stars of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund of America to date. They have made the largest personal contributions so far in the great movement inaugurated by the heads of the film industry to raise $500,000 of the permanent $1,000,000 endowment of the fund.

Miss Bara has drawn a check for $200 to J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer of the Motion Picture Campaign, and Miss White and Miss Clark have given $100 each. The largest contribution was Mary Pickford's $2,000, representing her share of the Hippodrome tribute performance at which she appeared in person. But the Misses Bara, White and Clark gave out of their own little pin money.

Only preliminary reports have been received at the main office of the Motion Picture Campaign in this city from the studios East and West, but they indicate big things to come.

These personal contributions of the people of the films are proving most gratifying to Chairman Goldfish of the National Committee. Although six weeks of the campaign remain, the actors and actresses are already showing that they regard this movement to provide permanently for the welfare of the retired members of their profession as very much of a family affair. By their own gifts they are giving the appeal to the public the strongest kind of endorsement. Unlike most campaigns of this kind, the public is not being asked to do it all, or anywhere near all.

Here is a partial list of the personal contributions already made by the actors and actresses of the screen:

Mary Pickford (Famous Players), Share of Hippodrome Tribute Performance, $2,000. Pearl White (Pathe), $100.

Fox Studio. Theda Bara, $200; Carlos Linden, $5.

STARS GIVE SERVICES.

Prominent Players Appear in Person at Eighty-first Street Theater for Benefit of Actors' Fund.

One of the most unusual tributes to the cause, given thus far in the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund of America, took place at the Eighty-first Street Theater on April 3. A goodly sum was realized for the fund and A. L. Shakman, president and managing director of the theater, offered his patrons an unusual treat.

No less than nineteen well-known favorites of the screen appeared on the stage in person and were introduced to the audience. Later the film stars passed out into the house and sold autographed photographs in the aisles. The price of these was supposed to be only 25 cents, but dollar bills and in several instances five-dollar notes were offered by enthusiastic fans.

The screen actors and actresses who appeared were Anita Stewart and James Morrison of Vitagraph, Virginia Norden of Balboa, Mabel Normand of Ince, Kathryn Adams, Gladys Hullette and Betty Lawson of Thanhouser, Nicholas Duneaw of World, Violet Mersereau and Billy Garwood of Universal, Christine Mayo and Mary Miles Minter of Metro, Bliss Milford of Pathe, Teddy Sampson (Mrs. Ford Sterling) and Alice Lake of Keystone, Jane Grey and Charles Backus of Triangle, and Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore of Arrow.

Frank Powell introduced the screen stars and even persuaded Mr. Shakman to show himself for a moment. The manner in which the latter was greeted clearly showed the popularity of "The House Beautiful" on the upper West Side.

GERALDINE FARRAR AIDS FUND CAMPAIGN.

Geraldine Farrar is the latest recruit among the active workers in the motion picture campaign for the Actors Fund of America. She has volunteered her services in the Grand Tribute Matinee, which is to be held at the Metropolitan Opera House on May 16.

This is designed to be the biggest performance ever given for any cause anywhere. It comes the day after National Tribute Day, May 15, on which a portion of the receipts of every theater in the land where films are shown is to be poured into the fund. This mammoth performance will thus be the grand final fireworks of the campaign in which the heads of the motion picture industry contracted to raise $500,000 in fifteen weeks, half of the $1,000,000 permanent endowment of the Actors' Fund of America.

Miss Farrar, through her double notable association with both the films and the opera, will be the bright particular star of the proceedings and the committee in charge promises that she will be backed by the greatest collection of artists ever gathered together on one program.

MARY PICKFORD SENDS CHECK FOR ACTORS' FUND.

With the receipt of a check for $2,000 recently at the executive offices of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund, the largest individual contribution so far received was recorded. This check was from Mary Pickford and represented her share of the gross receipts of the Sunday night's program at the New York Hippodrome when she appeared in a stage sketch as a speaking actress with James J. Corbett and Donald Brian in principal parts and her director and studio company in the cast.

"THE IRON CLAW" COMPANY AIDS ACTORS' FUND.

The "Iron Claw" company has contributed liberally to the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund. Edward Jose, who is producing the big Pathe serial, collected $100 from his players, cameramen and assistants. Mr. Jose gave $20 of this, Sheldon Lewis, $25; Creighton Hale, $10; Miss Carey Lee, $10, and John Dunn, 5. Pearl White put another $10 into this collection, which brings her total up to $110.

BEN S. COHEN JOINS SELZNICK FORCES.

Ben S. Cohen, East Central district manager of the World Film Corporation, resigned from that post this week to join the forces of Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., which will distribute the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation features and those of other noted stars. Mr. Cohen's resignation took effect immediately and he has already launched his preliminary sales campaign.

By the acquisition of Ben Cohen, Mr. Selznick has taken the first step toward the fulfillment of his promise to make his business staff one of the strongest in the industry. From coast to coast Mr. Cohen is known personally to every exhibitor of prominence and his knowledge of the exhibitors needs, as well as his general ability and engaging personality, has made him one of the best liked men in the distributing end of the business.

Mr. Cohen entered the film industry in Omaha, Neb., where he had been practising law. Within a few months he became the Pacific Coast district manager of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation. After a year with that company, he accepted a flattering offer from the World Film Corporation to take charge of its East Central district. His duties with the Thanhouser and World Film Corporations brought him in close touch with all the big exhibitors of the West, an acquaintance that was extended to embrace the Atlantic States when he came east to take charge of the New York World film exchange for several months.

Southern Trade Exposition

Highly Successful Three-Day Motion Picture Show Held at Atlanta, Ga.

THE Southern Motion Picture Trades Exposition, the first gathering of the allied lines of the motion picture business ever held in the South was opened Thursday night, March 30, at the Auditorium by Mayor James Woodward; assisting were Chas. Kessnich, manager of the Mutual Company; R. Savini, manager of the United Film Service, and Wm. Oldknow, of the Universal Film Company. Mayor Woodward in a short talk welcomed the exposition to Atlanta and reviewed the history of the motion picture industry. Dressed in bunting and colors, the mammoth auditorium presented a splendid picture. Hundreds of pretty girls and women added much to the scene.

Every available booth space was taken by exhibitors. The following firms were represented: Nicholas Power Company, New York City, N. Y.; Minusa Cine Products Company, St. Louis, Mo.; Consolidated Film & Supply Company, Power motion picture machines, Edison motion picture machines, Blue Bird photoplays, Red Feather photoplays; Automatic Player Piano Company, Atlanta, Ga., Seeburg Pipe Organ Orchestra de Luxe, and latest photo players; Lucas Supply Company, Atlanta, Ga., Simplex motion picture machine, Mirror screens, theater chairs; Mutual Film Corporation, Baird motion picture machines, Mutual Master Pictures; Scenic Film Corporation, Atlanta, Ga., trick advertising films, advertising slides; World Film Corporation, Equitable and World Features; New Film Corporation, feature films; Triangle Film Corporation, Fine Arts, Kay-Bee, Keystone Comedies; United Film Service Company; Motion Picture News, New York, N. Y.; Motion Picture Journal, Dallas, Texas; Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company, Chicago, Ill., exhibiting the latest model motiograph.

Many distinguished guests were in attendance, including moving picture players, writers, producers, directors and executives. Exhibitors from over the South began to arrive early on the opening day; exchange men were kept busy looking to the comfort of the visitors, and booking orders before the social features began.

One of the attractive social events of the exposition was the ball given Friday night, following the program at the auditorium, when the exposition officials gave a banquet to visitors in the Hotel Ansley. The banquet was held in the ballroom of the Hotel Ansley. Film men from all parts of the South were in attendance and many from the big Northern and Eastern picture centers. As a social event it was pronounced the most distinctive feature of the exposition.

Wm. Oldknow, director of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, served as toastmaster. Addresses were delivered by many of the South's most conspicuous film people.

One of the most impressive addresses was that by Nat I. Brown, of St. Louis, a picture screen dealer, and a close student of film progress, who emphasized the development of the motion picture, pronouncing it the third and last stage of thought transmission.

Exhibitors and producers were given opportunities to display their talents on the Ansley stage during the banquet. Elocutionists, singers, dancers and musicians were selected from the guest list to deliver performances on the program.

Universal Beauty Contest.

Pretty girls from Southern towns, winners of local contests, arrived early, and Atlanta girls, who rarely know defeat, began to realize that the beauty contest was not to be a walk-away. Promptly at 8 o'clock Saturday night the Universal beauty contest began. A committee of prominent Atlanta business and newspaper men were selected judges.

Over a hundred contestants were on the floor. These were finally shifted to seven, then to three, and Mrs. Louise Everett of Bainbridge, Ga., was selected as the winner.

Mrs. Everett will be given transportation to New York and a year's contract in the Universal studios. She will accept the offer and leaves for New York within the next few days.

The huge Auditorium was crowded to the second tier of seats. The grand march was led by William Oldknow and Irving Cummings. It was carried in front of a battery of motion picture cameras, which will convey it to all animated news weeklies.

When the grand march started, numerous reservoirs containing golden confetti and red feathers were opened in the ceiling, sending a shower of red and gold to the floor that blended beautifully in the dazzling rays of the many lights. Society and film people danced. When the march strains broke into a fox-trot, the dancers resembled a whirling, swirling mid-sea tempest rather than a floor full of human beings.

A farewell fete in honor of Fred W. Young, the man behind the 1916 exposition was held after the ball. Mr. Young was awarded the palm for having staged such a remarkable meeting, and elaborate credit was given him for the success of the affair.

Gaumont Finds Conditions Good

French Producer Leaves America, After a Three-Weeks' Visit, Confident of the Success of His Pictures.

LEON GAUMONT, head of the great firm of Societe des Establissements Gaumont, who has been visiting in America since March 15, sailed for Europe on the American liner New York, April 5. Although Mr. Gaumont spent only three weeks in New York, it is safe to say that he gained a thorough understanding of present conditions in the film industry.

"My stay in America has not been as prolonged as I might wish," said Mr. Gaumont, just before sailing, "but having transacted my business here and after having had several conferences with President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation, through which Gaumont photodramas are released, I thought it best to return immediately to France. I came to America somewhat influenced by what I had read of unsettled conditions here. I am going home thoroughly satisfied with conditions as they apply to my own interests and the Mutual Film Corporation, and highly optimistic for the future.

"Present conditions are natural, inevitable. My own companies, however, are in excellent condition to meet any changed circumstances brought about by economic demands. In addition to the Gaumont photodrama work done in America, at the Gaumont laboratories, Flushing, N. Y., we also edit and manufacture the Mutual Weekly and the interesting split-reel which contains the scenic series, See America First, and the Kartoon Komics animated by Cartoonist Harry Palmer.

"This is my first trip since the war started. I hope that it will be possible for me to get over again next season, as I am interested in seeing the changes which I believe will take place. As I said before, I am in harmony with the work that has been done and well pleased with the prospects for the coming year."

Pathe Dramas

Three Short Productions on the Program for April Release.

THE Pathe Exchange, Inc., whose late releases have been confined to five-reel features, serials, one-reel comedies, the Pathe News and split reel educationals and scenics, now announce three short dramas for release at an early date.

On Saturday, April 8, "The Girl Who Won," a three-reeler featuring Miss Jackie Saunders, "The Maude Adams of the Screen," and produced by Balboa, will be released. Miss Saunders has in "The Girl Who Won," a part well suited to her delectable wistfulness, viz., a derelict street urchin who makes her woeful raiment picturesque and charming.

Saturday, April 15, sees the release of "The Girl That Didn't Matter," a two-reeler made by Balboa, featuring Miss Margaret Landis and the famous Andrew Arbuckle, brother of the equally famous Macklyn. "The Girl That Didn't Matter" is the story of a "no-account" girl who arrives and a senator who almost doesn't. But the senator is saved by the girl just before his "scuthcheon" is discolored, and all ends happily. Margaret Lanais plays the girl with delicate feminine charm, and Andrew Arbuckle makes a breezy "diamond-in-the-rough" hick senator.

Emmy Wehlen and Howard Estabrook are featured in a two-reel drama slated for release on April 29—"Dross and Diamonds." This picture was made by the Arrow Film Corporation, and is remarkable for a two-reeler in that it features two of the screen's headliners. The story is an unusual one of a young man of a highly sensitive nature, whose father, a police captain, by his lack of sympathy and understanding has a great deal to do with the lad's final landing "outside the pale." Emmy Wehlen (who appears by courtesy of the Rolfe Photo-Plays, Inc.), as the girl who prefers diamonds to love and deserts her sweetheart at a crucial point in his life gets a great deal of realism into her work, and Howard Estabrook as the unfortunate youth will get plenty of sympathy for his earnest and artistic protrayal.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

BROOKLYN ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS MEET.

At the Second of Two Lively Gatherings the New Organization Is Granted a State Charter.

THE Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn held a meeting on the evening of Monday, April 3, at the Regent theater, Fulton street, Brooklyn. Present were seventy exhibitors from all parts of the borough. Also attending was a delegation of Brooklyn men who are members of the New York City local. The meeting was called at 11 o'clock and it was nearly 2 o'clock before it adjourned. There were lively discussions following talks by some of the visitors from the Manhattan organization. A bit of feeling was at times manifested as a result, although before adjournment a committee of five was named to meet a similar number from the smaller organization alleged to hold a charter in Brooklyn from the state league.

Chairman William Brandt called the meeting to order and briefly outlined some of the reasons why the Brooklyn exhibitors should organize. He advocated backing the bill introduced at Albany amending the law relating to the admission of children to theaters under certain circumstances. He denounced the bills about to be introduced in the legislature by the same Assemblyman who introduced the censorship measure, and remarked that it behooved the exhibitors of Brooklyn to get on the job. One of these bills, Mr. Brandt said, would compel exhibitors at all times to keep two operators in the projection room.

Samuel H. Trigger said he had come twenty miles with one purpose in view and that was for harmony and for the benefit of the exhibitor at large. "Three days ago I received notification that the Brooklyn exhibitors were with the Board of Trade," Mr. Trigger continued. "The Board of Trade is absolutely against the exhibitors' welfare. I don't know who it was that so notified the Board of Trade, but I want to tell you he was absolutely in the wrong. Let me give you an instance of the Board of Trade. A few weeks ago we asked the Board of Trade whether it would co-operate with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association."

"Mr. Trigger will please come to order," declared Chairman Brandt. "This meeting was not called for the purpose of discussing the Board of Trade. You must confine yourself to the subject of how we can further our organization."

Mr. Trigger, after a parting shot, shifted to a discussion of the recent upheaval on the ventilation question, saying that if there were adequate organization in the greater city 137 exhibitors would not have been served with summonses to appear before the License Bureau. "You can't have your fans going on a cold winter day because the public won't stand for it," declared Mr. Trigger. "It is detrimental to health. I am going to tell you what one of the officials told me this evening—that the motion picture exhibitors are the biggest suckers in the world, that you can do to them what you like and there is no comeback. Why? Because we are not combined, because we are fighting among ourselves. I don't know, I don't want to know, what my next door neighbor is running. Don't watch your neighbor. Let Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn combine and then all the manufacturers and exchanges will have to do what we tell them."

Herbert L. Carpenter, prominently identified in the automobile industry, told of the experiences of the automobile men and gave much valuable advice as to methods of organizing protests. He pointed out that the automobile dealers with their customers were in some respects similar to the exhibitors and their patrons. He said there was work to be done in the boroughs, in the city and in the state, and that the exhibitors through their borough and state organizations, if strong, could with their patrons do much in a large way. He also impressed on those present the necessity for the employment of the best legal talent procurable.

During the evening there were several additions to the roster of the new organization. The committee named to meet a committee of the other organization in Brooklyn were Messrs. Mannheimer, Loeb, Levine, Title, Glynn and Brandt.

New Organization Is Granted State Charter.

At the meeting in the Sumner theater on the evening of April 10 a charter was received from the New York State League. This effectually refuted the claims of speakers at the previous meeting that a chartered organization already existed in Brooklyn. There were nearly 150 exhibitors present. Permanent officers were elected as follows: President, Mr. Mannheimer, of the Park theater; first vice-president, L. Levine, of the Regent, Fulton street; second vice-president, Ben Title, T. N. F. theater; recording secretary, David Lesselbaum, Miller theater; executive secretary, William Brandt, New Albany theater; treasurer, Julian Loeb, Sumner theater; sergeant-at-arms, A. Stockhammer, Parkway theater.

There was a material addition to the membership, among the houses being the Triangle, Williamsburgh and Powell.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS HOLD MEETING.

Northeastern Ohio Association Hears President Sawyer's Reply to Rev. Dr. Birney.

THE biggest meeting the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has had since it opened headquarters in the Republic Building, Cleveland, O., was held April 4, when Benjamin J. Sawyer, president, delivered a reply to the sermon criticism of Rev. Dr. George H. Birney, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Methodist Church. Dr. Birney was present as a special guest and Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, national president of the Exhibitors' League of America, was another speaker.

Mr. Sawyer called Dr. Birney's sermons on the motion picture business "misrepresentation," and declared the preacher is "trying to build up a reputation for himself by sensational speeches." At the close of Mr. Sawyer's address, Dr. Birney declared he would have a counter-reply to make from his pulpit in the near future. He has been delivering attacks on the motion picture business since he addressed the exhibitors as their guest, several weeks ago.

President Sawyer's address in part was: "Dr. Birney, your criticism is unsupported by facts. It is an exaggeration that casts reflection upon your brother that should cause you to blush with shame. It is true the pictures show vice, and it is equally true that a great many preachers spend a good part of their time hunting up and showing up vice. Where is the difference? Do they claim the right to monopolize all the good and take full charge of all that is bad?

"How can a man tell what is going on in a world he does not live in? The picture men live among the people. They are of them. They know each other. And they resent as false the conclusions of Dr. Birney.

"The picture men know that pictures are not perfect and know that some are bad, just as they know some preachers are good men and some are not good. The picture men believe they have as good a right to exercise their right of moral judgment as has Dr. Birney, and if they are mistaken they want it proven before a jury of their peers so that all mankind will be benefited.

"In future, when you think you have anything to criticise, come to us. We are not criminals. We do not merit public pillories. We will be only too glad to lend you a receptive ear."

Mr. Herrington, in a brief address at the conclusion of Mr. Sawyer's remarks, criticised all forms of political censorship and declared there should be censors for censors. "The American public will be the censors of pictures in the last analysis," he asserted.

Samuel Bullock, Cleveland exhibitor, who has several times taken his fight against the Ohio censors into the courts, declared he is disregarding orders of the censor board every day in the week and is still out of jail.

Miss Kate Davis, president of the International People's Association, also spoke briefly. She commended the film, "Ben Blair," which she said she recently saw, as a model for producers and exhibitors.

SAN FRANCISCO LEAGUE COMPLETES RE-ORGANIZATION.

The exhibitors of San Francisco and vicinity held a meeting in the assembly hall of the Pacific Building on March 29, and a permanent organization was affected, completing the work commenced at the gathering held during the previous week. Officers of the Exhibitors' League of San Francisco were chosen as follows: President, T. F. McCullough; vice-president, H. J. Gosliner; secretary, F. Friedberg; treasurer, I. Oppenheimer; directors, Joe Huff, Louis Greenfield, M. E. Cory, Edward Stark and H. C. Schmidt. Following the election of officers the plan of the local film exchanges to collect payment in advance for film service was discussed and a decided opposition developed. A committee was appointed to confer with film exchange interests and a meeting was held in the afternoon, but the latter refused to recede from the stand they had taken.

The re-organized league will accept as members any exhibitors in the territory served by San Francisco film exchanges. The Alameda County League, which for a time was the only active one in the State, will be maintained as a separate organization, at least until the new league has shown its permanency.

SPACE IN DEMAND AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Booth space for the fifth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, May 2, 3, 4 and 5, continues to go rapidly and it will be only a short time when it will be at a premium if obtainable at all. Bert Goldman, manager of the Princess and Majestic theaters, in St. Paul, has been delegated to arrange for the big midnight entertainment which is to take place at a downtown theater immediately after the close of the convention in the Armory.

Walter W. Evans, Jr., special representative of the Precision Machine Company of New York, who handles the Simplex projector, dropped in on the meeting of the convention boosters at the West Hotel the other day and promised that his company will spring something real as well as reel in its booth space. Mr. Evans picqued the curiosity of his hearers by refusing to go into detail on his plan after announcing he would have on display a feature which never has been outside of the company's permanent display at Los Angeles.

PITTSBURGH LOCAL INCORPORATION.

Pittsburgh League Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania is making application at Harrisburg, Pa., for a charter of incorporation under the laws of the state to buy and rent motion picture films, to buy and sell supplies and accessories to the trade, and to buy, sell and conduct motion picture theaters. The capital stock of the proposed corporation is $5,000. The applicants and stockholders are as follows: James Delves, J. W. Shearer, F. J. Herrington, William Fritz, W. W. Artzburger, H. C. Kliehm and Henry Polk, all of Pittsburgh; A. H. Barthell, of Wilkinsburg; Solomon Oppenheimer of Tarentum; Christ Vollmer of Dormont. The league is represented by Attorney W. H. Pratt.

WHAT THE EXHIBITORS PROMISE.

"With the usual ability to provide interesting events as well as a thorough trade show in every way, the Motion Picture Exhibitors League are rapidly completing their third annual exposition to be held at Grand Central Palace, May 1 to 6.

"The idea is to bring at one time and under one roof all of the various branches of the motion picture industry, which the exhibitor at large supports. This exposition will, without doubt, be the most complete trade show of any kind ever held.

"It, of course, is well understood that it is the exhibitor who buys film service, chairs, screens, machines, carbons, musical instruments and everything that goes to make the motion picture business what it is and one can readily realize the hearty endorsement which the exhibitors will give to the show, not because of the fact that they are giving this show, but of the fact that they will be in a position to purchase anything and everything needed in the daily operation of their business.

"There are a great many interesting events arranged for the public at large as well. A separate day will be given over entirely to the German side of the war question, and another day to the Allies side. Still another day will be set aside for the Actors' Fund and a percentage of the gross receipts will be donated to these various bodies.

"Local consuls will be in direct charge of the distribution of the funds and also lend their aid to bring together the various societies to attend, as well as bands from the interned liners and their officers who will attend the body in full regalia.

"One has but to visit the offices of the league to understand the elegant manner in which the operation of this trade show has been organized. Contracts already in hand assure the unqualified success of the show, the most interesting fact being that most of these contracts have been obtained unsolicited."

Death of Arthur H. Spiegel

Head of Equitable and World Film Passes Away at Plaza Hotel—Funeral at Chicago.

ARTHUR H. SPIEGEL, President of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and General Manager of the World Film Corporation, died Friday morning April 7, in his apartments at the Hotel Plaza. His wife and two children and older brother, Sidney M. Spiegel, were at his bedside. From a slight cold, which he neglected for his business, Mr. Spiegel contracted pneumonia and after a courageous battle against the dread disease, and racked with a severe attack of la grippe at the same time, passed away at 5 o'clock. His office at the film organization has been assumed by William A. Brady.

Arthur H. Spiegel.

Mr. Spiegel, although but a few days over thirty-one years of age, was one of the country's great business men. A few years ago in the back room of his father's furniture store at 126 S. Wabash avenue, Chicago, he began selling furniture and house furnishings by mail order. He conceived the advantages of selling by mail order and allowing for payment on the period plan. His success is best seen in the immense plants of the Spiegel May Stern Company, Martha Lane Adams Company, the Clement Company and American Ladies' Tailoring Company, located at 1061 West 35th street, Chicago, where the various enterprises are located. The plants occupy six city blocks and employ permanently three thousand people. His genius for organization and his grasp on the immensities of great businesses, established him as a foremost commercial figure in the western metropolis and his grasp upon the new industry, motion pictures, was being recognized in the industry as the surest means of eventually bringing order out of the chaos at present existing in that field.

The gigantic merchandizing qualities of the Spiegel enterprises can be understood when it is known that they have over two million customers a year on their books.

Burial of Mr. Spiegel will take place at Chicago, the body having been sent there Friday on the Twentieth Century.

The funeral services of the late Arthur H. Spiegel were held on Sunday, April 9, at the home of the parents of the deceased, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Spiegel, 410 Sheridan Road, Minetka, Ill., and burial was made at Rosehill cemetery. The active pallbearers were H. E. Landis, E. D. Goldsmith, A. J. Bald, C. W. Cuddy, C. J. Folger, D. B. Folger, E. Swikart and W. A. Harris. The honorary pallbearers were A. S. Alshuler, A. G. Becker, E. J. Block, Edgar Born, W. M. Cahn, Harold Foreman, Richard Frank, G. S. Freudenthal, S. M. Karger, Edgar Kirschberger, A. D. Lasker, Carl Meyer, Abraham Meyer, Walter Oberfelder, J. A. Rothschild, M. E. Rothschild, M. S. Rosenwald, C. B. Stumes and L. Stern, A. K. Selz, R. C. Shaffner, O. B. Sommers and Aaron Waldheim.

Many Features at Trade Board Show

Contracts In for Twenty Thousand Feet of Space—Prominent Players Will Enact Scenes.

ARRANGEMENTS for the Motion Picture Board of Trade's exposition are proceeding rapidly and smoothly to completion. The dates are from May 6 to 14, and the place is Madison Square Garden. Already manufacturers of films and accessories, as well as trade journals, and two chambers of commerce have contracted for approximately 20,000 feet of space. The two municipal boards named are those of Los Angeles and St. Petersburg, Fla. Two distributing groups—Mutual and Paramount—have each taken 1,500 feet for their respective companies.

Others who have contracted for exhibiting space are the Eastman Kodak Company, Universal, Vitagraph, Bluebird, Fox, International Film Service, Nicholas Power, J. H. Hallberg, Cooper-Hewitt Company, Bell & Howell, Novelty Slide, Typhoon Fan, Motion Picture Apparatus Company, Searchlight Library, Motion Picture Directory, Morning Telegraph, Moving Picture World, Motion Picture News, Motography, Motion Picture Magazine, National Cash Register and Estey Organ Company.

In active charge of the forces making for the success of the show is J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Board of Trade. Associated with Mr. Binder is Harry Cochrane, general manager of the Madison Square Garden, which means that the exposition will have at its command the entire facilities of the famous Garden.

"Go early in the week; you 'sure are' going often," is one of the slogans of the board. And it is intended to make the show so interesting that there will be no question about the coming-back part. S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Knickerbocker theater, will have full scope for the working out of his ideas in decorative treatment and in musical entertainment. Green, white and gold will dominate the color scheme. Streamers and pennants will be hung inside and outside of the Garden.

One of the greater attractions for the public will be a big studio stage, to be erected at the Fourth avenue end of the building. In front will be a screen that for size and quality will be a record-breaker. Two thousand comfortable opera chairs will be placed advantageously. Each day a star of the silent drama will be seen before the camera enacting a scene that as soon as possible, probably on the day following, will be projected on the screen in the Garden. When pictures are not being taken, they will be exhibited; and it is to be expected as a matter of course that these will be the best representatives of the product of the contributing companies. The film to be shown will be as it is taken, without cutting or alteration.

The management has allotted the big center of the arena to the dancers. It is said the space will be sufficient to accommodate 3,000 couples. Music, by a first-class band, will be continuous from the opening of the Garden to the closing.

Each day of the exposition will have a designated name, such as "Bankers' Day," "Exhibitors' Day," "Board of Trade Day," "Fire Insurance Day," "Distributors' Day," "Projection Day" and "Fashion Day." Each will have its own set of features. For instance, on Bankers' Day leading members of the American Bankers' Association will deliver addresses on the relation of capital to the industry, while on Fire Insurance Day the exhibitor will be spoken to on fire, its cause and its prevention.

Fashion Day means that all the well-known gown, hat and shoe shops will have their manikins in attendance to show the latest fads of the day. This will be especially attractive, as New York has set the world's fashions in women's wear for the last year.

A reception committee, composed of prominent motion picture actors and actresses, will be present at the Garden each day. The committee will include practically every screen favorite in the East.

A daily newspaper will make its appearance for the eight days of the exposition. It will have the distinction of being the first daily in the world to be illustrated by means of motion pictures. The publication will be of standard size and will be composed of eight pages, each of which will be filled with motion picture news. The name will be the Motion Picture Daily Trade Show Bulletin. Thomas A. Edison will write a signed editorial for the issue of May 7. In his article Mr. Edison will deal with the motion picture industry from its birth up to its present development. This will be an authoritative expression, as the screen owes many of its inventions to the genius of Mr. Edison. Other editorials written by men high in the motion picture industry will be printed in each issue.

Cartoonists, headed by Hy Mayer and Winsor McCay, of national reputation, will have drawings on both humorous and serious subjects. The news department will be looked after by an editorial board composed of men who write about pictures and nothing else. Fashion and society will not be forgotten, as a page will be devoted to the gowns of the day and the women who wear them. Photographs of men and women prominent in the motion picture world will be used to illustrate the paper. The Bulletin will be sent broadcast throughout the country and will not only reach the hands of the persons in the trade, but will be distributed so that the theatergoer may also obtain copies. The Bulletin will be conducted along the established lines of a metropolitan daily.

Arrow Elects New Officers

John F. Shallenberger Becomes Vice-President and Warren H. Small, Secretary—Larger Quarters Occupied.

AT THE semi-annual meeting of the directors of the Arrow Film Corporation, which produces pictures for release through the Pathe exchanges, held last week, two new officers were elected to fill vacancies. John F. Shallenberger of Chicago, a brother of W. E. Shallenberger —who has been the president of the Arrow Company since its organization and is one of the big figures in the motion picture industry—was elected vice-president. Warren H. Small was elected secretary. Both Messrs. Shallenberger and Small became, ex officio, members of the board of directors.

John F. Shallenberger is one of the three brothers whose money financed the late Charles J. Hite in the acquisition of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. He is also financially interested as is W. E. Shallenberger in the Mutual, American, North American and other motion picture organizations. He never has been as active as W. E. Shallenberger in the industry, but he intends to devote more of his time to the supervision of his already large holdings.

Warren H. Small is a member of the law firm of Prindle, Wright & Small, of 111 Broadway, New York. They are counsel to the Du Pont Powder Company and other large manufacturing concerns. Mr. Small was for several years the legal representative of the Motion Picture Patents Company, and had charge of the preparation of its organization and general business affairs from its inception. He also was attorney of the General Film Company during the presidency of Frank L. Dyer.

Owing to the growth of the Arrow Film Corporation new office space became necessary, and the directors voted to move the offices uptown. Accordingly the Arrow Film Corporation now is quartered in a suite in the Times Building, where all the executive departments are grouped. At the same time Albert S. LeVino, who was secretary and treasurer of the Arrow Film Corporation from its organization and has been closely associated with W. E. Shallenberger for some time, was appointed assistant to the president.

President Shallenberger now divides his time between the Arrow studios in Yonkers and the New York office. He has taken personal charge of all Arrow productions, including "The Woman's Law," in which Florence Reed is starred and which recently was released through the Pathe exchanges, and the new "Who's Guilty?" series for Pathe.

At the directors' meeting it was determined to continue President Shallenberger's policy of original scenarios for Arrow productions except in the rare cases where good picture material may be found in a novel or play. Edfrid A. Bingham, who had been scenario editor of the Metro producing companies for a year, was put in charge of the Arrow scenario department, co-operating with Mr. LeVino in the creation and arrangement of Arrow scripts. Mr. Bingham is the author of several best sellers, his most recent publication being "The Heart of Thunder Mountain."

The publicity and advertising departments were placed under the direct supervision of Mr. LeVino, who is charged also with the Arrow's editing of all its productions through the Pathe exchanges. In collaboration with Mr. Bingham the "Who's Guilty?" scripts have been revised and edited.

With the completion of the tenth "Who's Guilty?" chapter the Arrow will resume its production of five-reel Gold Rooster features for Pathe. Mr. Shallenberger now has four completed scenarios ahead for these Arrow-Pathe features, and these four will be added to from time to time against the resumption of Gold Rooster production.

Trade Board Holds Regular Meeting

Discusses Pending Censorship Legislation and Sends Committee to Maryland to Attend Hearing.

THE Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America met in regular session on Thursday, April 6, the most important matter for consideration being the report of officers and counsel on pending legislation affecting the motion picture industry. Executive Secretary Binder said the death of the Ahern bill in the Assembly at Albany proved conclusively that the censorship efforts of the political reformers and placeholders in this state had failed. The Cristman-Wheeler bill, which was jockeyed through the Senate for the purpose of giving local capital to some of the members of that body, will soon come up in the Assembly. One amendment to this measure has been killed already which, according to William M. Seabury, general counsel of the board, indicates that the popular branch of the legislature will not take snap judgment on a proposition which is held by many to be unconstitutional and is admittedly undemocratic and un-American.

While Governor Whitman has made no official expression it is believed he is opposed by principle to any prepublicity censorship in this State whether of motion pictures, the newspaper press or the public rostrum.

The Maryland censorship bill, which was slipped through the Senate on the closing night, is now on the desk of Governor Harrington. The motion picture industry was represented at a hearing April 10 by P. A. Powers, J. W. Binder and William M. Seabury of the Board of Trade, Guy L. Wonders of Baltimore, and the full force of the Maryland Exhibitors' League. Speakers from the American Federation of Labor and the Maryland labor organizations were also present. Constitutional points against the bill are now before the Governor.

The Board of Directors decided on a tentative program for the First National Motion Picture Exposition to be held at Madison Square Garden, May 6-14, inclusive. Letters were read from exhibitors' leagues of six states wherein it was stated that these leagues would be fully represented at the exposition.

Arrangements were made for participation by the Board of Trade in the meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs in New York here next month at which 75,000 women from all parts of the country will be present. Samuel L. Rothapfel, one of the exhibitors' directors of the board, will provide at his Rialto theater a model entertainment for the visitors on the morning of the opening of the convention. This entertainment will be followed by others on several mornings during the progress of the great meeting. For the showing of pictures in the convention hall Director Nicholas Power of the board will supply a projecting machine of the newest pattern as one of the industry's contributions.

The proposed ball of the Buffalo Screen Club was approved.

D. F. Featherston, general organizer of the American Federation of Labor, in company with two representatives of the New York carpenters' union, appeared before the board for a discussion of the general proposition to unionize the carpenters employed in the motion picture industry. Nothing in the form of an ultimatum was presented and the conference was entirely friendly in character. The discussion was adjourned until a later date when Samuel Gompers and Mr. Featherston will bring forward data in reference to the wage situation in New York, California and Florida.

HERRINGTON DECLINES OFFER OF BOARD OF TRADE.

In a letter addressed to The Moving Picture World, Frederick J. Herrington, president of the National League of Exhibitors, declares that the Board of Trade had submitted a proposition offering the National League for the use of its name a share of 25 per cent. of the net profits of the Exposition to be held by the Board of Trade. He says the offer was made to him both orally and in writing. After consulting the National Executive Committee and the National Secretary, Mr. Herrington has decided to decline the offer of the Board of Trade. As between the two local expositions the National League unqualifiedly favors the Exhibitors' Exposition, which will be held in the first week of May at the Grand Central Palace.

Bearing closely upon the foregoing is a declaration by Mr. Herrington as president of the National League, reported by the Chicago representative of the Moving Picture World in the following news item:

At a meeting held at the Hotel Sherman, on April 3, by the members of the convention committee of the Sixth National Exposition and Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in honor of Fred J. Herrington, national president, a discussion as to the official locality of the exposition was brought to President Herrington's attention. His reply, which was signed by him and Sidney Smith, secretary of the Illinois state branch, was as follows:

"I, Fred J. Herrington, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, do hereby certify that the Sixth National Convention and Exposition to be held in Chicago, in the second week of July, is the only officially authorized National Convention and Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America."

Biograph Advance Showing

Gus Mohme Starts on Three Weeks' Tour of General Film Exchanges in the West.

IN line with the Biograph Company's new policy of showing their releases at least six weeks in advance, Gus Mohme left for Boston on April 9 with the complete program of June releases and gave an advance showing at the General Film Company exchange of that city on the following day.

This exhibition will be followed by similar exhibitions in Buffalo, April 11; Cleveland, April 12; Detroit, April 13; Chicago, April 14; Milwaukee, April 15; Minneapolis, April 17; Des Moines, April 18; Omaha, April 19; Kansas City, April 20; St. Louis, April 21; Indianapolis, April 22; Cincinnati, April 24; Pittsburgh, April 25; Wilkes-Barre, April 26; Philadelphia, April 27; Washington, April 28.

"The purpose of these exhibitions," explained Mr. Mohme, "is to give the exhibitors and exchange managers the opportunity of booking their programs first hand, taking only those releases which fit their requirements. This can only be accomplished if the exchange manager sees the films far enough in advance to make arrangements to take care of them.

"For the present, time does not permit a visit to all the General Film Company exchanges, although those exchanges not visited by me personally will be supplied with a complete program which they may exhibit at their convenience. We have already arranged to supply New York (23rd street branch) General Film Company with advance copies of our releases, which they will keep on exhibition for one week, changing the entire program weekly.

"Considering the quality of the subjects we have scheduled for release during the months of May, June, July, August and September, we feel safe in saying that it will be to the exhibitor's advantage to attend these various exhibitions; especially those exhibitors who are not taking service from the General Film Company at the present time, but who are anxious to book exceptionally strong one and two reel subjects to complete their feature programs."

NEW PRODUCING COMPANY AT CORPUS CHRISTI.

Howard H. Temple, as president and general manager of the Sun Film Corporation, announces that he will locate his studios at Corpus Christi, Texas, making a specialty of "water stuff." Other officers of the company are H. C. Gibler, vice president and director general, who will stage and direct all productions. Harry Cobern is the cameraman and Elsie Bond will be the leading woman. The first production is promised about July 1.

NEW GENNERT CATALOG.

The G. Gennert lists of motion picture cameras, apparatus and supplies are neatly presented in a new catalog of 48 pages and cover which has just come from the press. Almost everything needed by the motion picture manufacturer can be found within its contents. It also contains a few styles of theater chairs. The Gennert concern is one of the oldest in the business of supplying motion picture necessities and has established a splendid reputation for quality of goods handled and for service rendered its patrons.

METRO NEW YORK EXCHANGE IN NEW OFFICES.

The offices of the New York Metro Film Service has moved to the twelfth floor of the Godfrey Building, Seventh avenue and 49th street. The new offices are perfectly equipped and arranged to suit the convenience of patrons. E. M. Saunders is in charge.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

"A Crown of Asses' Ears."

THE Ohio State Censorship Board was not content to give a sop to politics and disgrace the intelligence of the state when it barred "The Birth of a Nation," but the members must needs give further evidence of assininity by prohibiting the showing of a recent news film, because it had views—or close-up views—of Villa, the Mexican bandit! But I prefer to submit an editorial of the Chicago Tribune, under the heading of this article, which treats of the latest inspired effort of the Ohio censors:

The following is from a Columbus, O., newspaper:

State "movie" censors on Thursday barred close-up views of Villa, shown in the General Film Company's news weekly.

"Villa is a murderer and bandit. Showing of his picture in Ohio 'movie' houses during the present crisis would tend to arouse bitter feeling," Chairman C. G. Williams of the "movie" board said.

It could go without comment. Nothing that we can say will add to its magnificence. Nothing that any one could say could make more apparent the all too apparent "one" which solidly constitutes the whole head of censorship.

It might have been Mr. Williams' opinion that showing the picture of Gen. Funston during the present crisis would flutter the emotions of the spectators. If such had been his opinion Ohio moving picture houses could not have shown the general.

Moving picture reviews are now a visualization of news. If it is contrary to public policy to show the pictures of persons who are in the news, it is contrary to public policy to print the news about them. Censorship of the "movies" in this respect is censorship of the press, against which every instinct of liberty in our people rebels. But why argue?

Ohio may not look at Villa in the "movies" because he is a bandit. Censorship has indeed crowned itself with asses' ears.

The Ridiculousness of Film Censorship.

The clash between Mayor William Hale Thompson and Second Deputy Funkhouser on the matter of the exhibition by the latter of reels of cut-outs from films censored by the Chicago Censors, which was reported in preceding letters by me, brought out an editorial from the Chicago American which shows the utter ridiculousness of film censorship. Coming in the wake of the assinine ruling recently made by Chairman Williams, of the Ohio State Censor Board, and the criticism of that ruling by the Chicago Tribune, the editorial of the Chicago American should be carefully read and made use of, when occasion requires, by everyone interested in the future welfare of the film business. It follows here:

Apparently the recent clash between Mayor Thompson and Major Funkhouser has ended and silence, if not peace, reigns. Nobody has been seriously injured. Yet the collision may prove to be of considerable value to the public.

In calling Major Funkhouser, chief "movie" censor, onto the mat for allowing a handful of aldermen and civic reformers to see some of the objectionable "cut-out" films stored in the censor's office the mayor, quite unconsciously, was showing the public just how absurd the whole censorship business is.

No doubt the mayor was perfectly logical in maintaining the position that which the censorship board declares that a film is immoral, or obscene the judgment should bar an exhibition to aldermen and civic reformers as well as one to the general public.

The mayor, however, should have pursued his line of logic a little farther. If the pictures are unfit for exhibition to a small audience of aldermen and reformers they must be equally unfit to be seen by the board of censors themselves. The exhibition might taint their morals.

Without attempting to follow out the subtle ramifications of this issue, it is plain to us that the film censorship, if followed far enough, will produce problems much graver than that which lately disturbed the City Hall.

The new censor practice presents the solecism of a small bureau practically making laws; and, worse yet making special laws, instantly, for special cases, for that is what the censor actually does. He establishes a standard of propriety out of his own head and applies it without giving an opportunity for defense or a chance of appeal!

We have also the strange and un-American example of a sort of court that follows no written code of law, has no jury, administers no oath and hears no evidence beyond what the censor sees—or thinks he sees!

Yet in this manner the censor proceeds to pass upon valuable property rights, controlled by no authority except his own taste and ethical notions.

Inevitably a go-as-you-please court of this sort will, sooner or later, become despotic or corrupt. Only a month ago, for instance, a censor bureau in Philadelphia "cut out" seventy-five feet of costly film because it presented pictures of Kaiser Wilhelm and Field Marshal von Hindenburg! What next?

If the censor-ship principle shall remain and grow, almost certainly it will soon extend its jurisdiction to include pictures in books, magazines and newspapers. Then encouraged by its success, it will go on to regulate paintings, statuary, photographs and even the ladies' costumes! The censorship idea would apply to all these. Why not?

The Chicago American believes that the official censor belongs away back in Roman days.

At least he doesn't belong in America. In America the root idea with which our government began was liberty under law. Under that principle, whenever anything becomes injurious to the public welfare laws directly defining and proscribing the offense are applied and the wrongdoer is brought to answer by due course of law. But the practice of a bureaucrat determining, once for all, just what is good and what is bad for the public is, we say, quite Russian—not American!

And there is not the slightest occasion for this Russian innovation. There are now among our statutes and ordinances provisions amply sufficient to punish and prevent the exhibition of obscene and immoral pictures. And we have courts and juries quite capable of hearing and determining such matters in a lawful American way!

The Chicago American does not say that there are no pictures that should be forbidden. It merely says that the censor remedy is contradictory to the fundamental principles of our government, and in the long run is likely to create greater abuses than those which it pretends to cure.

Look Out for These Stolen Films!

About one o'clock Wednesday morning, April 5, the wagon of the H. & H. branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, in front of the office at 117 North Dearborn street, this city, was robbed of films costing about $4,000.

The wagon was being loaded, and the driver had gone up to the second floor of the building to get more packages when the robbery took place. When he returned to the street, the horse and wagon with the films already loaded had disappeared. The police were immediately notified, and some hours afterwards the horse and wagon were discovered about a mile away, but the films were gone.

At the time the wagon was stolen, the driver was loading it for the delivery of films at several railroad depots, the shipments being intended for out-of-town exhibitors. L. A. Getzler, the wide-awake branch manager of the Mutual, arranged that these exhibitors were not deprived of their shows, as other films were shipped to them in time.

Detectives are hard at work trying to trace the stolen films, and exhibitors everywhere, as well as small exchange concerns, are warned to look out for any person or persons who may try to dispose of them. The list of the stolen films follows:

"A Necklace of Pearls," Thanhouser; "Jerry's Revenge," Cub; "The Optimistic Oriental Occults," Falstaff; "Sammy's Dough-Full Romance," Vogue; "Lucky Larry's Lady Love," Falstaff; "The Conductor's Classy Champion," Falstaff; "Fickle Madge," Vogue—all the foregoing are of one-reel length; "In the Name of the Law" (three reels), Thanhouser; "Their Last Performance" (three reels), Thanhouses; "The Extra Man and the Milk-Fed Lion" (three reels), Mustang; "The Gamble" (two reels), American; "Mill on the Floss" (five reels), Thanhouser; "Up from the Depths" (five reels), Reliance, and "Snow Stuff" (three reels), American.

Chicago Film Brevities.

J. G. Ries, of Chicago, one of the staff cameramen of the Selig-Tribune, recently wed the Chicago girl of his choice and then hastened to the Mexican border line. But he did not go alone, for after the wedding Mrs. Ries concluded to accompany him. Mr. Ries is given some of the most important assignments by Editor "Jack" Wheeler, of the Selig-Tribune, because of his long career of adventure. He was decorated with the coveted iron cross by the General Staff of the German army during the invasion of Russia last year, when he took pictures of surrounding territory and fortifications from an aeroplane. Mr. Ries was with Von Hindenburgh's army for seven months and was present at the taking of Warsaw. He is just one of a corps of capable cameramen and special correspondents stationed in Mexico and along the border by the Selig-Tribune.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Co., arrived in the city Friday, April 7, from New York City, and stopped over to familiarize himself with film conditions here. Mr. Zukor is on a tour of all the principal cities in the interests of his company.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V-L-S-E, Inc., arrived in the city Saturday, April 1, and remained over until Monday evening, when he left for Minneapolis. Before returning to New York he visited, in turn, Kansas City and St. Louis. Mr. Irwin expressed himself as well satisfied with the excellent condition of business connected with his company in Chicago.

Robert R. Levy, president of the Revelry Theater Co. and proprietor of the Forty-Seventh Street Drug Co., this city, is a candidate for Republican committeeman in the Third Ward. The presidential primary will be held Tuesday, April 11. Mr. Levy is a prominent business man and one of our most intelligent exhibitors. It is only his due that brother exhibitors in the Third Ward should give him all the support possible.

Minneapolis has now its Screen Club. Preliminary steps were taken recently for its organization, the moving spirits being D. W. Chamberlain, B. Barnett, J. A. Van Meter, E. J. Wescott, Fred S. Meyer, Ralph Bradford, Julius Bornheim, Lee Horn, Harry Muer, C. W. Sawin, J. Margoles, Benjamin Goldman, G. D. Strong, Harry Rothner, P. H. Carey and Tohmas J. Hamlin, the last-named being the editor of "Amusements." Messrs. Chamberlain, Sawin and Wescott were appointed to make arrangements for the next meeting, which was held at the West Hotel, Monday afternoon, April 3. Everyone connected with the film business, including exhibitors, the managers of exchanges, etc., is invited to become a member. Any one in the film business desiring to become a member of the club can do so at the special initiation rate of $5 any time within forty days from Tuesday, March 28. After that the initiation fee will be doubled. The dues are 50 cents a month.

The first reel of the Athletic series, produced at the Selig studios, will be released Monday, April 17, and, thereafter, releases will be made on the first and third Mondays of each month. Contracts have been signed for some time with several of the "Loop" theaters in Chicago. These Athletic films were produced under the personal supervision of J. H. Herman, the widely-known promoter of athletic events. The first reel presents Yamada and Cutler, expert billiardists, in a match game and exhibition shots. Mike Gibbons, the well-known middleweight, gives a boxing exhibition and also shows his training methods. His speed in the ring is seen in a spirited three-round bout. In the first reel of this athletic series, Fred Dalkus, the heavyweight champion wrestler, and Dr. B. F. Roller appear in a finish match. Bookings can be made by applying direct to the Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago.

The following bills have been announced at the prominent "Loop" theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday or Monday, April 9 and 10:

Colonial: The Kay-Bee feature, "Civilization's Child," featuring W. H. Thompson and Anna Lehr; "The Oily Scoundrel," a Keystone comedy, and the customary Colonial educational film and vocal soloists.

Studebaker: Mary Pickford in "The Eternal Grind;" Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in the Metro comedy, "Going Up," and the Hearst-Vitagraph Weekly.

Ziegfeld: "The Havoc," a V-L-S-E feature by Essanay, with Gladys Hanson, Lewis Stone and Bryant Washburn in the cast, and Ethel Barrymore in Metro's photoplay of Russian life, "The Kiss of Hate," supported by Robert Elliott, Victor De Linsky and Niles Welch.

Strand: The Ince feature, "The Beggar of Cawnpore," with H. B. Warner in the lead; Roscoe Arbuckle in "His Wife's Mistake," a Keystone comedy; George Kleine's Travel Films and the Strand Topical Review.

La Salle: "The Race," by Lasky, featuring Victor Moore; a Harry Watson, Jr., comedy by George Kleine; Bray's Cartoons and a Paramount Pictograph.

The Fine Arts theater was reopened Saturday, April 8, by Alfred Hamburger, with Selig's "The Ne'er Do Well," which is being released through V-L-S-E, Inc., by Sol Lesser. This is the third photoplay season at the Fine Arts under the direction of Mr. Hamburger, and he believes that he has in "The Ne'er Do Well" a subject that will set a new record for the house. "Neptune's Daughter" with Annette Kellermann, ran for twenty-six successive weeks at this theater, during Mr. Hamburger's first season.

Early Sunday morning, April 2, two more Chicago theaters suffered from bomb outrages, which are believed to be connected with the warring factions of moving picture operators. The Famous theater, 3644 West Chicago avenue, and the Vision theater, 2652-58 West Division street, were the scenes of the explosions. A police investigation of both outrages resulted in the opinion that the warfare between moving picture operators, which resulted in the murder of Hugh Coogan about a week ago and an explosion at another theater, is responsible for the recent explosions. Nathan Wolf, manager of the Vision theater, is outspoken in his belief that the outrages are due to a labor war, and William Muller, owner of the Famous theater, though not desirous of being quoted, intimates that he holds Manager Wolf's belief.

About the middle of April the General Film Company's branch office at 17-19 South Wabash avenue will be consolidated with the City Hall Square branch, in the City Hall Square Building, on North Clark street, near Randolph. The offices in the latter building will occupy the entire space on the fifth floor. W. R. Scates manages both branches at the present time, and will be sole manager when both branch offices are merged.

W. C. Overstreet, director of a school out in Edgewater, a village near Denver, for the education of those eager to learn the art of acting before a camera; C. E. Miller, an associate, who posed as the magnate who was to furnish funds for the production of "The Queen of the Cowboys," and Carl Alfredson, cameraman of the organization, vamoosed one day last week and left behind them a number of sorrowing pupils, who mourn a loss of about $1,200 which they had paid for their experience. Mrs. Overstreet and her infant baby have also been left behind to mourn a husband and father, according to a Denver paper. The matter has been placed in the hands of Samuel W. Johnson, district attorney of Jefferson County, in which Edgewater is located.

Chas. Chaplin in "Carmen" has been booked by Jones, Linick & Schaefer for the Studebaker, La Salle and Bijou Dream theaters, and will be seen concurrently at these houses beginning Saturday, April 15, for a run of two weeks. No other house in the "Loop" can show this subject during that time.

The first pre-service booking of Billie Burke in the Chicago "Loop" has been made by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, for the Studebaker theater, the opening presentation being fixed for Monday, May 8. Ralph Kettering, director of publicity for the firm, considers the booking of this series of features for a run of 20 weeks one of the most important that has yet been made in this thriving firm's history.

$40,000 THEATER FOR ANTIGO.

Contract for the erection of the new Palace theater, Antigo, Wis., was awarded recently and work has already been started. The structure will be completed by the end of June and will represent an expenditure of $40,000. The plans for the new theater embody the newest ideas in motion picture theater construction.

The foundation of the theater, which is 44 x 185 feet, was completed sime time ago. The theater will be slighly longer, the stage extending to the rear of the foundation. In front of the building proper will be placed the ticket office booth. This will prevent any obstruction of the main exits as the front will be a solid mass of doors which will open automatically when pressure is exerted on the inside. The front will be of terra cotta and ornamental brick and a large canopy will overhang the sidewalk. There will be one balcony and box seats on each side. There will be a "garage" for baby carriages. Heating and ventilation will be by a forced hot air system and two furnaces will be used. The seating capacity of the new theater will be 1,200. The seats will be wide, and there will be plenty of space between the rows. A pipe organ is to furnish music. The plans for the new Palace have received the approval of the authorities. H. E. Hanson is to be the manager of the house.

A CONFUSION OF NAMES.

Because of the similarity of their names, two prominent motion picture men frequently are confused in the trade. They are Joseph F. Lee, representative of a number of out-of-town exchanges, and Joe Lee, of the Merit Film Company, 126 West 46th street. Joseph F. Lee suggests that mail directed to him should carry his full name that confusion may be avoided.

SHAKESPEARIAN PAGEANT PROGRESSING.

Work Started on Stadium—Lillian Gish and Mayor Sebastian Turned the First Shovel.

WITH a galaxy of motion picture stars as the audience, Lillian Gish and Mayor Sebastian this week turned the first spadeful of earth for the stadium to be built in Beechwood Canyon, Hollywood.

Capt. Louis R. Ball will be in charge of the work and the stadium will be completed in time for the production of "Julius Caesar" for the benefit of the Actors' Fund on May 19.

Last Friday afternoon city and county officials, heads of civic bodies, noted actors and hundreds of citizens gathered to witness and take part in the first work of preparing the great amphitheater. Under the direction of a United States army engineer they undertook to hew out a trail from the main stage up to the spot on the hillside, where the capitol is to be erected. It was a labor of love and they accomplished much. And it was not only the presence of the battery of moving picture and newspaper cameras that spurred them on to their work. Long after the cameramen had ceased cranking and the crowd of onlookers had dispersed, the workers toiled along—regardless of blistered hands and fleeting breath, and when evening came the trail was in such shape that a horse and wagon made the trip with the first load of lumber.

Lillian Gish and Mayor Sebastian Breaking Ground for Stadium.

Raymond Wells, who is directing the production, realizes that there is a wonderful opportunity to introduce pageantry in a perfectly legitimate manner and at the very outset the great street scene will be a most imposing sight. Preceding the entrance of Caesar there will be the gladiatorial contests. In these the contestants will be athletes whose names are famous. In the street a series of wildly barbaric dances will take place with little Mae Murray as the central figure.

The entrance of Caesar will be a gorgeous sight. He will be preceded by hundreds of young women, a host of little flower girls strewing blossoms in his path and more than two hundred dancing girls. Later in the play when the nations of the world send their representatives to do honor to Caesar, the most gorgeous spectacle of all takes place.

The committee is overwhelmed with volunteers. The double incentive of helping the Actors Fund and appearing in the celebration of Shakespeare's tercentenary makes everyone anxious to take part.

The central stage on which the main action of the drama will take place is to be six hundred feet wide. The settings throughout will be correspondingly massive. For the lighting effect over twenty thousand electric units will be used. There are to be more than 120 pieces in the orchestra. The entrance to the amphitheater will be through a massive Roman gate, and along the walls of the canyon statuary and effects will create the atmosphere of a Roman City.

A great amount of detail work has already been accomplished. Costumes and settings will be absolutely authentic. The "armies" which take part in the battle scenes will be drilled by an officer of the United States army.

Contracts have already been let for the first eight thousand seats. It is possible to seat thirty-five thousand people comfortably in the natural amphitheater with the hills forming "bleachers" for thousands more—and every available foot of space will be needed when the public realizes what is in store for them.

POLLARD PLAYERS MAROONED.

Actors Spend Exciting Moments on Desert Isle, Suffering Cold and Hunger.

Harry Pollard and his company of players while taking scenes on board a boat in the channel between Santa Cruz and Santa Rosa Islands one day last week were caught in a terrific wind storm.

The ship's anchors failed to hold and the boat was forced to put out to sea. The lifeboats were carried away and a huge steel oil drum, which had been lashed to the deck, broke its lashings and rolled about the deck, injuring some of the players. The ship was forced to stand out from shore more than twenty hours.

The company of about thirty members were found encamped on the wild shores of the island on short rations and recuperating from the terrible experience at sea.

Mr. Pollard, who is personally directing the production of "The Pearl of Paradise," in which Margarita Fischer is being featured, in order to obtain some of the marvelous scenery around the Santa Barbara channel islands chartered the schooner Ida A from San Diego and established quarters on the island.

The rescuing party that put out from Santa Barbara for the relief of the company found that the players had passed through a most harrowing experience during the violent storm.

Miss Fischer displayed great nerve and bravery. "In my several years of starring in motion picture drama," said she, "I have been called upon to perform many nerve-testing feats and have passed through many adventurous experiences, but in the face of what we have just passed through all my other experiences seem mild. We had nothing to eat for over thirty-six hours, but I think every one was too frightened to be hungry, excepting our parrot. He apparently had had the benefit of foreign travel and certainly has the gift of tongues, for during all that awful night, when some of us, I am sure, were praying, the brazen bird sat in the cabin and swore in at least seven different languages."

With the exception of a nervous shock and the results of hardships, Miss Fischer experienced no ill effects from the experience.

The members of the company left ashore when the Ida A was carried out to sea, being forced to return to camp afoot, were lost, and when rescued were half starved and in a deplorable condition.

LOS ANGELES TO SEE "CIVILIZATION."

Ince Peace Picture to Open Here April 17.

A film production which has been in preparation for nearly a year and which Thomas H. Ince expects will have a beneficial effect in the movement for universal peace, will be shown to the public for the first time in Los Angeles. A deal was consummated by which the production will enter on its world-wide mission at the Majestic theater on the night of April 17.

At the same conference it was decided that the subject will be known as "Civilization" instead of "He Who Returned," the title originally accorded it. The change was made because the original title was deemed ambiguous and "Civilization" more clearly conveys the thought behind the production.

Mr. Ince's decision to give Los Angeles the opportunity of viewing what he declares to be his master work before New York, follows the precedent set with his other multiple-reel works, "Peggy" and "The Alien." Both these works were shown here first.

Unusual interest attaches to "Civilization," because for a period of approximately ten months a veil of the utmost secrecy enshrouded its making. Upon its completion, however, Ince announced that its basic note is a plea for universal peace. And in endeavoring graphically to depict the utter fallacy of war the producer has resorted throughout the production to the vizualization of spiritual life. Depiction of the Christ on the screen is a task that has been generally avoided, but Ince has accomplished it with adroitness and charm.

The production is not an arraignment of any particular nation or people. It is, as C. Gardner Sullivan, its author states in the dedicatory prelude, "an allegorical story of a war that has laughed at the world's flaunting boast of a higher progress. It does not concern itself as to which side is in the right or wrong, but deals with those who are paying the grim penalty."

With the completion of arrangements for the showing of the big spectacle, preparations were begun to give it a most pretentious and impressive presentation. The long and complicated musical score, written by Victor L. Schertzinger, is being rehearsed daily by an orchestra of thirty-five pieces and a chorus of some two hundred voices is being trained for the rendition of an offertory appropos of the spirit of the story.

During the entire run of the production only two performances will be given daily—one at 2.30, the other at 8.30 p. m.

AUTO JUMPS OPEN BRIDGE.

American Makes Thriller with Daring Leap Across Gap.

There are some stunts that would stop an auto racer or an aviator, and Elmer Thompson, of the Flying "A", did it for the latest picture, "The Secret Submarine." People for miles around came to witness the stunt.

The spot chosen was the gap in the state highway where the bridge went out, about a mile east of Camarillo. This is 27 feet wide. That the car might make the proper leap the approach was elevated a few inches.

Thompson used a small car. He had with him two men. He got a good start and was traveling fast when he hit the approach and bounded into the air.

It was a thrilling moment for the large crowd. Would the car make it? Or would it go down into the water? If the latter, the chances of the men within were slight.

Amidst the breathless interest and the clicking of the cameras the car landed on its front wheels, with the rear ones up in the air. For a second it seemed as if it would turn a somersault. But it righted itself and kept on going as if it had never made an aerial flight, and the picture was pronounced a success by the director. Thompson received $100 for performing the feat. The jump was filmed by three motion picture cameras and as many still ones.

Thompson has made quite a name for himself as a man who is willing to risk his life for the sake of the profession. Recently he made a dash in front of a train which nearly cost him his life. The rear fender of his car was struck by the train and the car turned over several times, bruising him badly and frightening the engineer so that he was relieved from duty and sent to Santa Barbara on a week's vacation to recuperate.

Sturgeon Starts Blue Ribbon Film.

The Western Vitagraph director general, Rollin S. Sturgeon, has finally decided upon the cast of his next Blue Ribbon feature, the Cleveland Moffett detective novel. The leading parts will be taken by George Holt, William Duncan, Nell Shipman, Webster Campbell and Corinne Griffith. The first three are the featured people who did exceptional work in Mr. Sturgeon's current eight-reel feature, "God's Country and the Woman." Miss Shipman will portray the leading feminine role; William Duncan will enact the part of a great detective, and George Holt will be the "master criminal," who appears in several guises, while the others will make an excellent support.

There are two new cars at this studio. Mary Anderson has just bought one, and William Wolbert, between scenes, drives his players to the locations in his new machine. Bill had a dandy car when he first came to the Vitagraph, but those awful roads that lead to the studio "shot it all to pieces," and now he claims that he has had this one especially prepared to stand the various bumps, dips and slides in the streets hereabouts.

Change in Ownership of the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company.

The business of the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company, manufacturers of studio equipment and motion picture machinery was recently purchased by H. Paulis, who has been general manager for this concern for the past three years. The former name of the concern will be retained and Mr. Paulis will remain in active charge.

The main plant and general office of the company is at 215-17-19 East Washington street, occupying a modern up-to-date factory building. The products of the company include the well known "Angelus Brand" of motion picture cameras, printing machines and tripods, as well as a large line of studio accessories and supplies.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Mfg. Company, has returned to New York this week after an extended visit to the Pacific Coast.

Samuel Goldfish, vice-president and treasurer of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, arrived from New York City this week to confer with Mr. Lasky with regard to some important doings at the Lasky studios.

By courtesy of E. D. Horkheimer, a cabaret entertainment was staged last week at the annual banquet of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce at the Virginia Hotel, under the direction of Norman Manning, business manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company.

A sketch entitled, "How Movies Are Made," was staged and a typical studio set was reproduced in the center of the banquet hall. Jackie Saunders, the Balboa girl, played the lead supported by Harry McPherson, who as a correspondence school "movie" actor contributed a good percentage of the laughs. Much comedy was provided by John Wyse and Bill Kearns as the stage crew. Joe Brotherton and Jack Wise shot the cameras. Many other Balboans performed to the great entertainment of the several hundred people that attended the banquet.

To contribute a little brightness to kiddies in the Orphan Asylums the Horkheimer Bros. are promoting free entertainments for little boys and girls, many who never have seen a moving picture show. In conjunction with exhibitors who are showing "Little Mary Sunshine," a Balboa production released by Pathe, the Horkheimers will have these children as their guests in various cities where this picture is shown. The first exhibition of this kind was given at the Strand Theater in Atlanta. There will be another at Tallys, in Los Angeles, one day this week.

Director Otis Turner made such a big hit with the members of the Imperial Council of the Shriners, who visited Universal City a short time ago, that he has been appointed an honorary life member of the Osman temple, Detroit, Mich.; Damascus temple, Rochester, N. Y., and Ararat temple, Kansas City, Mo.

Mr Turner who is also a Noble, directed a feature picture at Universal City in which the visiting Shriners took prominent parts and which is to be shown at all the Shrines in America.

An organization to benefit persons employed as extras at the motion picture studios has been formed in Los Angeles. Robert M. Goodwin is the president and organizer. More than three hundred extra people have already joined the association according to Mr. Goodwin, who states that the purpose of this organization will be to do away with strikes and trouble between studios and extra men.

H. Guy Woodward, Big Chief Pal, who is head of the "Pals," an organization of stage and screen stars, was married this week to Miss Mary Boyle. Mr. Woodward is also, as well known, a popular comedian of the Keystone Company. His bride has a large circle of friends in Los Angeles where she has lived for some time. The couple will make their home in Hollywood.

The latest idea for the physical and mental entertainment of insane patients is an outdoor moving picture show. This has been provided the inmates of the Insane Asylum at Patton, Cal. A large open air theater with a seating capacity of over fifteen hundred has been constructed and in addition to screen plays, vaudeville acts will also be shown.

Helen Holmes, the leading woman of the Signal Film Corporation, this week received word from Chicago announcing the death of her father after a short illness. At the time of his death Mr. Holmes was traffic manager of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad, in which capacity he has served for a number of years. Mr. Holmes has also been in the employ of the Great Northern Railroad Company, in an executive capacity. It was through her father and his railroad friends that Miss Holmes learned many of the stories which she afterwards embodied in plots for the motion pictures in which she was starred. Pressure of work at the studios prevented Miss Holmes from going to Chicago even for a few days.

C. A. Roeder of the Mutual Exchange, San Francisco, and a party of exchange men, this week motored to Los Angeles, stopping en route to interview individual exhibitors with regard to Mutual productions. While in Los Angeles they visited the Signal studios, where with J. P. McGowan they made plans for feature advertising, mapping out in particular the campaign for handling "Whispering Smith," the Signal-Mutual feature now in production.

Paul C. Hurst, formerly of the Kalem Company, joined the Signal studio this week, where he is to appear in one of the principal roles of "Whispering Smith."

Thomas G. Lingham, also of the Kalem Company, has joined the Signal forces and will appear in the same production.

The Signal Film Corporation this week completed negotiations with Alice MacGowan for the screen rights of her novel, "Judith of the Cumberlands." This production will follow "Whispering Smith," and will be directed by J. P. McGowan, with Helen Holmes in the title role.

Marin Sais, the popular Kalem star, has recently purchased a 320 acre farm in Utah and will send her ten head of horses there to form the nucleus of a stock ranch. Miss Sais is at present being featured in "The Social Pirates," the new Kalem series from the famous story by George Bronson-Howard.

James W. Horne is now working on the ninth episode of this picture. There will be a hotel lobby set in these scenes that will even surpass the one used for the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel" series. Carpenters and artists have been busy for the last three weeks building this elaborate set. Miss Sais in this picture makes seventeen changes of wardrobe.

The bookkeeping, scenario and publicity departments of the Ince-Triangle forces this week moved from Inceville to Culver City. This completes the removal of all the departments from the Inceville domain, which, though deserted as the headquarters, will be devoted to filming of picturesque exterior scenes.

A direct telegraphic wire has been installed between the Culver City plant and New York City. The instrument is in the office of Business Manager E. H. Allen and connects directly with the executive offices of the New York Motion Picture Corporation in the Longacre Building.

Beatrice Burnham, protege of Madam Rasch, and known on the Pacific Coast as one of the most accomplished exponents of dancing in America, has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to instruct Dorothy Dalton preparatory to the star's appearance in a new Triangle Kay-Bee feature.

In this story by Monte M. Katterjohn, Miss Dalton is called upon to execute a number of whirling dances so difficult in steps that Ince resolved to give her the benefit of professional training before allowing her to undertake the part. The picture will be directed by Walter Edwards and Howard Hickman will play the lead opposite Miss Dalton.

William S. Hart has completed his performances in a Kentucky feud story written by Monte M. Katterjohn, and is now with a company in the snow-capped regions of Mt. Baldy, filming scenes for his next vehicle. This is a forceful story of the Canadian Northwest by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which Hart plays the part of a halfbreed Indian. The company will stay in the mountains for about two weeks.

Concluding scenes are being made this week for the Triangle Kay-Bee feature in which Frank Keenan is being starred. The story was written by J. G. Hawks and is directed by Charles Giblyn.

The production contains a number of magnificent interior settings which were built on the Culver City stages and said to be among the most elaborate ever erected by the Ince plant. In the cast with Mr. Keenan are Louise Glaum, Charles Ray and George Fisher.

Fanny Ward has begun rehearsals on a new Lasky production founded on the story by Willard Mack. George Melford will be the director and the cast includes Jack Dean, James Neill, Gertrude Keller and other Lasky stars.

* * *

Victor Moore will shortly start work in a new production under the direction of William C. DeMille. Mr. DeMille and Marion Fairfax are preparing the scenario which is said to deal with circus life.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of April 10 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Mary Pickford at the Strand.

THE main photoplay attraction at the Strand theater for Anniversary Week was Mary Pickford in "The Eternal Grind," a Famous Players' production. In this screen drama Miss Pickford plays the role of a toiler in a factory, not only bearing the "eternal grind" of the long hours of labor, but also struggling under the weight of the knowledge of her sister's plight, victimized by the worthless son of her employer. Against such odds this indomitable little factory girl makes her fight and wins.

The latest pictures from the Mexican and European campaigns, the Strand Topical Review, a new comedy and musical solos by Grace Hoffman and Bruce Weyman were also on the bill.

"The Rose" at the Broadway.

Victor Moore and Anita King were presented on the screen at the Broadway theater last week by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. in the Paramount picture, "The Race." It is a thrilling drama founded upon Miss King's recent transcontinental motor trip, which she made absolutely alone from Los Angeles to New York City.

Her entire trip was filled with thrilling incidents, many of which are incorporated in the picture and were filmed at the exact locality in which they happened. The production was made under the direction of George H. Melford, and is an unusual as well as artistic picture.

The customary musical numbers, weekly events, scenics, short comedies, cartoons and the Chaplin burlesque on "Carmen" were also shown.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

Lillian Gish was the star of the Triangle-Fine Arts photoplay, "Sold for Marriage," at the Knickerbocker theater last week. The scenes open in Russia and are transferred to Los Angeles, the story having been written by William E. Wing. Frank Bennett, Walter Long, A. H. Sears, Pearl Elmore and Curt Rehfelt are members of the cast.

The Triangle-Keystone comedy, "A Love Riot," was acted by Charles Murray, Louise Fazenda, Harry Booker, Alice Davenport, Wayland Trask and Dora Rogers.

The Lake of Como and the zoological gardens of Antwerp, news events, and musical solos by Marie Maurell, Alfred De Manby and M. S. Fiddleman completed the bill.

Chaplin Begins "The Floorwalker"

The First of the New Mutual Chaplins Scheduled for Mid-May Release.

MR. CHAPLIN and his company have started to work at the studios in Hollywood. They are working up material which Chaplin gathered in a certain big New York department store while he was in the east in connection with the signing of his $670,000 contract.

"The Floorwalker," the script of which is from the pen of Vincent Bryan, will be released according to schedule on May 15. This and the following Mutual-Chaplins will be in two reels. Bookings have been signed with exhibitors in all parts of the country. Seventy-five prints of this picture will be used in the City of New York alone to cover the present booking schedules.

A cast of players with wide experience in high-class film comedy will support Chaplin in this and subsequent releases.

Edna Purviance, who will play leads opposite Mr. Chaplin, will be remembered for her excellent portrayal of similar roles with the Chaplin Essanay Company. She is the daughter of a prominent Nevadan, a dashing blonde and a graduate of Vassar College. While appearing in an amateur performance for charity at San Francisco, Miss Purviance was discovered by Mr. Chaplin, who was so attracted by her beauty and ability that he offered her a place in his company. During the short time she has been appearing in film productions, she has made a host of friends and already has a large following.

Another player of note in the Chaplin company is Charlotte Mineau, a Titian-haired Junoesque beauty, who was with Essanay for five years and who, for the past six months, has been supporting Otis Harlan in the picturization of the Hoyt farces at the Selig studios. Miss Mineau was born in Bordeaux, France, and educated at the Convent of the Sacred Heart, Paris.

Ingenue roles will be played by Loeta Bryan, an attractive blonde who attained fame in musical comedy and with the La Salle Theater Stock Company of Chicago.

A familiar figure in previous Chaplin comedies is Leo White, the comedian, who has supported Chaplin ever since he was first starred. Mr. White was born in Manchester, England, in 1886. His first stage appearance was with the Gus Edwards Gaiety Theater Company, London. He was in the original Mlle. Modiste Company with Fritzi Scheff and had prominent roles in many other popular musical comedies.

Eric Campbell, who will play heavies, left "Pom Pom," one of the musical hits of the season, to join the Chaplin company. He was for seven years with the Lyric Theater Stock Company of London and played in several productions under the management of Klaw & Erlanger in this country. He wrote and produced film comedies for the London Film Company in England.

Lloyd Bacon, of the Mutual-Chaplin Company, was educated at the Jesuit College, Santa Clara, Cal. He has appeared in stock for several seasons and entered the moving picture field last year.

William Foster, considered one of the best cameramen in the business, will be head cameraman. He was with the Selig studios for three years and came to the coast in 1912 with the Universal. Roland Tetherch will be his assistant.

CLEVELAND STUDENTS VISIT VITAGRAPH STUDIO.

Fifty students of the Mechanical Engineering Department of the Case School of Applied Science of Cleveland, Ohio, headed by Professor F. H. Vose, recently visited the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn. A representative of the company guided the party through the plant and explained the process of picture making.

This is the second expedition from that school to visit the Vitagraph plant within a year. Arrangements have been completed whereby every year's graduating class from the engineering department will go through the Brooklyn studios.

The class was on a tour of all the important manufacturers of Greater New York.

PATHE'S MINNEAPOLIS OFFICE GIVES A DAY'S PAY.

Pathe's Minneapolis office, at the suggestion of Branch Manager Sampson, has contributed a day's salary to the "Actors' Fund." Everyone in the office down to the office boy came in on that basis, and thereby furnished an excellent example to everyone in the trade.

Marc MacDermott Joins Vitagraph

MARC MacDERMOTT, who is well known to picture fans the country over for his work in Edison photoplays, has severed his connections with that company and in the future will be seen in pictures bearing the trade mark of the Vitagraph Company.

Mr. MacDermott was one of the first actors of the legitimate stage to enter the motion picture field, which was over seven years ago. He was born in Knights Bridge, London, England, but spent most of his early life in Australia, where he was taken at the age of four years. His father, Patrick MacDermott, was born in Ireland, and is a descendent of the MacDermott who was king of Munster. His mother, before her marriage, was Annie Massey, grand-daughter of Sir James Massey of Limerick. MacDermott received his education at the Jesuit College in Sydney, Australia.

Marc MacDermott.

He made his first appearance on the stage at Sydney with George Reginald, of "Henry V" fame. After remaining with Reginald's company for seven years, he joined Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and was her leading man for the five years that followed; two of which were spent in the United States and three touring England. Later, while in England he appeared with Marie Dainton at Wyndham's theater, London. Returning to the United States, he joined Richard Mansfield's company.

About this time, Mr. MacDermott became interested in motion pictures and at the instigation of a friend visited the Edison studio, where he was induced to sign a contract. He has appeared in practically all of that company's successes produced during the past seven years. MacDermott was the featured member in "The Passer-by," the first multiple-reel release produced by the big "E."

Arrangements are being made at the Vitagraph plant in Flatbush for the first MacDermott picture. To date the title is not known, but we are told it will be a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, and that he will be supported by an all-star cast of Vitagraphers. When completed it will be released through the V-L-S-E.

PAVLOWA AT THE GLOBE.

The Globe theater was well filled on the evening of April 3 for the first New York presentation of Anna Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," made by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley for the Universal Company from Auber's opera, "Masaniello." The production was cordially received by a critical audience, in which were many prominent motion picture men connected with the Universal and other organizations. The musical accompaniment arranged by Adoph Schmidt added considerably to the impressiveness of elaborate scenes.

Preceding the showing of the Pavlowa picture, "Scaling the Jungfrau," a remarkably good film of mountain climbing in Switzerland, was presented.

EDISON TO RESUME GENERAL FILM SERVICE.

The General Film Company announces that beginning April 25, Edison will again start releasing through the regular service of the General Film Service. Edison confirming this says: "The elapsed time since we discontinued releasing through the General Film Company has given us a long-hoped-for opportunity to 'get our breath,' so to speak; to make certain necessary changes in our producing organization; to secure a new and better line of stories; to improve our mechanical facilities—in short, to 'clean house' and prepare for a fresh start. Of the results of our period of apparent idleness, we are justifiably proud."

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

EXTRA!!! Latest rumors state that the rumors of reports that the moving picture industries of the country were to be underwritten into a trust on a basis of $40,000,000 capital are to the effect that the rumors which led to the rumor had no room in fact. In other words the vice-president of the American Tobacco Company has discovered that he was smoking the wrong dope, or he was not careful in lighting the pipe. It went out before he could get it smoking right. The aforesaid vice-president, Benjamin B. Hampton, of former magazine consolidation fame, says the failure of his dream was due to hasty conclusions and premature publication. According to all the published statements by the heads of the several concerns which were reported as being in the deal the whole scheme remained and died in Mr. Hampton's pipe.

"I wish," said a prominent producer of moving pictures, "that some of these aeroplane accountants would take some of their own dope and expire before becoming interested in our business. They are feeders for the grafters and that means renewed vigor on the part of the politicians who are always on the alert to make a nest egg of good paying ventures." "If one comedian can get almost $700,000 a year for his work in moving pictures, why should not the State get $700,000 a year for inspecting them?" Again, "If the business has grown to such proportions that a single concern with a capitalization of $40,000,000 can be put on a paying basis, why should not the government get a good, tangible revenue from it?" So we find that all this talk in millions, instead of becoming a valuable advertising medium, simply serves as bait for the avaricious politician—gives him an excuse to "strike" and create comfortable political berths under cover of a claim that he is creating revenue for the public treasuries from sources that can afford it.

We are inclined to think that the recent exploits in hundreds of thousands and pipe dreams of promotions on a basis of millions upon millions have gone far to cloud the normal mind of legislators on the constitutional rights of many thousands of their constituents. It seems that the astute up-State cider drinker gets a Hampton jag from the dazzling array of figures that impels him to declare in the Assembly and Senate. "If Charley Chaplin can get three-quarters of a million on laughs, let us become serious and see how much we can get." So, they are now trying to put the moving picture business through the same course of squeezing that they have put upon everything else that they think can and will stand the pressure. Verily, the censorship advocate has been a convenient propagandist for the grafter. As the parent of the political golden egg he has become supremely beneficent, because nothing other than the constitution stands between the plum and the grafter's hand. But there must and will be a turning point. When it comes the hypocritical and grafting assailants of the indefeasible rights of thousands of people in a legitimate industry like that of the making and exhibiting of motion pictures will be revealed in their true light of apostates.

Another up-State legislator has appeared in the lime-light with a bill of the censorship species. The bill provides that no picture, or representation of any contention, or fight without weapons between two or more persons, or any public or private sparring exhibition, or boxing bout, with or without gloves, either within or without the State, shall be, or caused to be, exhibited or displayed, in any building, structure or public place, by any person, either as owner, manager, director, or employee of a corporation, agent, or in any other capacity. It is the opinion of many that such a law would affect pictures of races, football and like contentions. This law says specifically: "No picture, or representation." Motion pictures are technically reproductions, but the proposed law is intended to cover them because "pictures" and "representations" are essential to the reproductions. We think we see in this bill a chance to determine the status of newspaper and similar pictures and representations of the contests enumerated. The newspaper and magazine photographer produces pictures of such events and the illustrations in such publications based on drawings by artists are representations of them. Perhaps this proposed law may bring about some definite conclusion as to the relation the press bears to the screen.

The Pennsylvania Board of Censors has had so many of its decisions reversed by the Courts that, by way of diversion, it has reversed itself. The board has revoked its censorship of film that cartooned censor boards, including a sub-title demanding a free screen. It still maintains, however, its prohibition of a title reading "Approved by the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc." It is gratifying to note that the moving picture people repel the concession and will continue their fight against the original ruling. They want a ruling by the courts on the arbitrary action of the board, its exercise of undue authority and apparent "political" censorship. The censors did not reverse themselves on discovery of error in judgment, but simply because they feared to face the courts on a question which vitally affected their own existence and that of every other official censorship board in the country. It is a source of keen disappointment that the scrapple mongers had not the backbone and courage to stand by their original decision and let the courts pass upon it. It is feared by many of the moving picture people that the reversal may curtail the scope which the original stand afforded for an exposure of the operations of the board and a discussion of its jurisdiction under the laws. Eminent legal talent representing the Motion Picture Board of Trade, however, holds out assurance that there are ample grounds for putting the censors on the carpet before the courts and getting them before the United States Supreme Court, if necessary.

It is stated that the Bureau of Licenses in Greater New York is becoming more and more exact in its rulings regarding motion picture entertainments of a temporary character and that foundation seems to exist for the assumption that the bureau is disposed to discourage such exhibitions as much as possible. Nothing official has been learned to verify the report, or bring out justification for such a course if it is in the mind of the bureau, but there exists on the part of people regularly engaged in the moving picture business a sincere hope that the report is true. For a long time these people have protested against an unfair competition which has been waged against them through fly-by-night exhibitors and organizations which, while openly opposed to the moving picture business, are so peculiarly constituted that they can temporarily cast aside their resentment for temporary financial gain at little or no cost. A moving picture exhibitor puts the situation more specifically this way: The regular exhibitor invests thousands of dollars in a place and is under heavy expense to maintain it. Frequently he meets with losses, and at all times he is a victim of prosecution on the part of the reformers and moralists who invoke every ingenuity to put him out of business. Some barnstorming exhibitor who has no regular house to maintain, no heavy license to pay, and so salary list to meet, comes along with a lot of worn out junk and arranges to give a show on a percentage basis. The reformers furnish the place and patrons. Their investment is about fifty cents worth of electricity. On that particular night the reformers do not take all the patronage from the regular exhibitor, but they do take some. The loss is not a real financial one to the exhibitor. It is the after effect—the effect that is made upon the minds of people who will not patronize a regular show and which aggravates the false impressions such people lend to arguments they make in their stand against motion pictures as a whole. It is such impressions that sustain many who are perhaps honest in their convictions that moving pictures are crude, savor of immorality, injure the eyes of the spectators, and otherwise tend to impair rather than improve. "I'm not selfish in this matter," said the exhibitor. "I speak in fairness to the picture business in general. If the reformers are sincere in their efforts to eradicate unwholesomeness from moving pictures they should begin in their own places and not momentarily close their eyes for the sake of revenue and then assail the business as a whole for results their pennywise and pound foolish methods bring about. I should like to see all cheap moving picture exhibitions of the kind I speak of wiped out of existence. I cannot complain if my patrons are taken away by an exhibition that compares favorably with or is better than mine. It helps me to learn what the people want and when I get to that realization I get them coming to me again."

Spokes From the Hub

By Marion Howard.

WE ALL recall "A Night Out," the clever comedy put on for May Robson, who is a member of the Professional Women's Club of the Hub and widely beloved. The subject served to fill the Fenway three days last week. The film version is all Miss Robson's own, and for that reason there was double interest. With such players as Flora Finch, Kate Price (whom we were pleased to see in "glad rags") and huge Hughey Mack it could not be other than a winner. Miss Robson is a real comedian and dominated every scene. The audience indulged in almost continuous laughter and went home the better for it. All through the play illustrates the fine art of growing older gracefully, and the little verse terminating it was most convincing. I noted very many middle-aged and elderly patrons in the house, and it was a joy to see their faces light up at the words. On the program was Wally Van in "Putting the Pep in Slowtown," a clever little Vitagraph farce. Then we had the ever-enthralling "The Strange Case of Mary Page," and another reel worth while in "The Repentant," for it had a good intent and moral without being a sermon.

"Hearts of Men"—there's a play which all should see, especially our German citizens, for it is done well with Arthur Donaldson and all those dear children (German and American). The story starts in at Cologne and ends in America. We note the care in stage setting, with the portrait of the Kaiser seen in the home of the man who was robbed, and when the scene shifts to America, to which the man came to seek the villain, we see a portrait of Lincoln and the same one of the Emperor. The school scenes have never been surpassed here. How on earth were those children trained to such perfect work, for they have most of the acting to do? The World Film has given us a gem in this pictured play, but it should not be picked out by policemen for a Sunday reel as it is the stuff needed every day in the week. To think that we in this state must have what that fool law requires, and in such a way, is maddening to those of us who want just such reels for children to see and who are not usually at the theaters Sunday evenings.

Lucky Triangle, to secure Henry B. Warner, that capable star whose personal popularity counts for much with the box office. Mr. Warner spends his summer here on our North Shore, and we have seen all his stage successes. "The Raiders" will surely appeal to his followers, for we have confidence in his ability. Another screen favorite who has ever made good is Douglas Fairbanks, whom I first saw here in "As Ye Sow," a clever play written by a clergyman. Fairbanks played the comedian's part to the limit and as a volunteer militiaman he was a scream. We congratulate him on his little scheme by which he will appear with Bessie Love in a film written by him, "The Good Bad Man," to be released for us here shortly. So Mae Marsh is to have a play showing up the condition of kiddies who have no bringing up or opportunity for mental or moral training! With her pathetic face and figure she will surely register. The Hub will never forget the work of the Griffith players in "The Birth of a Nation," and we are loyal to them all.

Loew's Orpheum theater is running some stunning five-reelers, usually a Metro for one-half the week, then some other more or less pretentious picture like "Passers By," which I have just seen. Recalling the great success over in New York of C. Haddon Chambers' play, I was prepared for a pictureplay worth while in the hands of the Equitable with such a finished actor as Charles Cherry. It surpassed all expectations and it gave Mary Charleson a better opportunity than heretofore. We all enthused over the interiors and the wonderful lighting effects. What went over with the house were the human touches in the scene where the society man gazes upon the passers by from his window and invites two of them inside, the derelict and the woman lost in the fog, and who proves to be the one he had loved early in life, and thereby hangs the tale upon which the play is built. Comedy is cleverly introduced by the "down-and-out" one. The close-ups were better than I've seen in a long while.

Well I had a big surprise on Sunday night at the Exeter theater when the Film Club "silencer slide" was put on by Mrs. Ayer for the first time. There was loud and prolonged applause, showing that others had suffered from the "talking fiends" and were grateful for this public protest, even if a mild one. It was most effective and it preceded the long subject, as was the desire of the club.

Emmy Wehlen, another Metro star, certainly scored in "Her Reckoning," and was ably supported all through. It was good to see H. Cooper Cliffe back again in good company, too; also Edgar Davenport, who was excellent in "The Blindness of Love." These two men stood out for dignity, good looks and finished work. The play has a lot of punch as well as good situations and was shown at the big Boston theater, happily back on the Keith map. They are running very high class vaudeville, good travel films, and one specially selected five-reeler to packed houses, which means much when we know its seating capacity. Katherine Ward is back on the job as head usher, and it is a joy to enter the lobby and find her cheery presence. To say, as one man did in public the other day, that Boston hasn't a clean picture house is a libel, as thousands of patrons of the Park, Fenway, Boston, Exeter, and I dare say other houses will also declare.

So much has been written about "The Christian," with Earle Williams, Edith Storey, Charles Kent, Donald Hall and a mammoth company, that words from me are superfluous. The Park was crowded to the doors and strict silence (for a change) prevailed all through the big scenes. This masterpiece should be revived often. The least said about "The Lost Bridegroom" the better, though it gives Jack Barrymore good opportunity for his comedy work. There were many human touches and the play aroused laughter, which is good for anyone.

Boston's newest theater, the Fenway, is modeled on the plan of the Strand in New York and designed by the same architect, Thomas W. Lamb. Its stage was arranged under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel. It seats 1,500 and the S. R. O. sign is out nightly. There is a concert orchestra of fifteen musicians, led by James M. Fulton. There is also an up-to-date pipe organ. Opera and concert singers appear daily in choice selections. This theater is building up a strong following in the exclusive Back Bay because of the nature of the films shown. These are carefully selected by the manager, Stanley Sumner. The theater is finely situated. A feature is the air of hospitality pervading the lobbies. Dainty young women ushers are in charge of a matron, Mme. Claire La Favre.

The Fenway Theater, Boston, Showing Detail of Ceiling and Auditorium.

In "Ben Blair" we found a child—Gordon Griffith—doing the best work in the cast, for it was way ahead of anything seen here at the hands of an eight-year-old lad. He is in the first reel only, but dominates it completely and was a redeeming feature in an otherwise poorly arranged version. The boy grown up gives Dustin Farnum an opportunity to show skill in horsemanship, as usual in these Western dramas in which he appears, but there was little new in any of it. Miss Kingston does not register a little bit and hasn't quite the face for big parts. There were some quite inconsistent scenes, which had no bearing upon play or plot. Page Peters was the society villain, but nowhere have I seen his name listed in the cast or referred to by the reviewers; yet he played well a thankless part—a society libertine.

Of course we all went to see "What Doris Did," as she is one of our very own. It was a pleasing three-reeler, done by the Thanhousers, who have made Doris Grey do some stunts in her initial picture. Rather amusing were scenes in the ballroom where she won the prize, for it bore little resemblance to the bare Arena where the event really took place. We missed the faces of the big stars of other companies who were here. However, we were glad to note how well our little friend's face filmed. The play had some melodramatic features, and it took with the house. On the bill that day were the Drews in "The Count of Ten," their first Metro film, and a good one, absolutely original in plot. Then we had a new Vitagraph, "Betty, the Boy and the Bird," well done by Zena Keefe, Gerald Gordon and others, staged by Tefft Johnson.

Run Your Own

Keep Away from Contest Promoters If You Want to Keep Faith with Patrons.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

CONTEST schemes are good for business when they make business, but the wise exhibitor who would build business by this means will handle his own schemes. For some years now the "contest man" has been a part of every street carnival outfit. Sometimes these men work on the level, but generally the contest man classes with the other circus "grafters" and a good contest man can clean up a lot of money for himself and his employers running a contest for the queen of the carnival. Recently some of these men seem to have turned their attention to the motion picture business, particularly when the caravans are in winter quarters.

Most exhibitors who get bitten try to hide that fact. Now and then one will be fearless enough to try and warn brother exhibitors, and one such is B. E. Elberson, of the Marlow theater, Bucyrus, Ohio, who has been busy lately with such a contest. He writes:

> I just closed a popularity contest which was a dismal failure and then I received such a shaking that I feel it my duty to warn other exhibitors of my experience and I know of no better way of giving this information than through the columns of The Moving Picture World.
> The contest was run for six weeks and so far as I know was conducted properly until the day before the closing. The plan was as follows:
>
> The Popularity Contest Advertising Co. agreed to furnish the prizes to be voted and place the prize display in a local jewelry and furniture store three days before the contest started. This they did. We were led to believe that the contest was run squarely until the day before the finish when they approached two of the contestants with the proposition as stated in the enclosed newspaper clipping.
> The prize list consisted of twelve articles, the first prize being a ticket to Jacksonville, Florida, and return with one hundred dollars in gold for expense money and the second a similar trip with fifty dollars for expenses. From there the prizes dropped to a china set, a celluloid toilet set and similar stuff technically known to the craft as "slum." The minor prizes were not of a value to cause the givers great concern, but their action in the matter of the two large prizes is best shown from this statement issued by the leaders and printed in the local papers:
> "We, the undersigned, wish to state that on Saturday afternoon, March 25, we were approached by V. E. Mendenhall and Virgie Bowen, managers of the popularity contest which closed Sunday at the Marlowe Theatre, who made representations to us as follows:
>
> "That we were in danger of losing our positions, first and second in the contest, respectively, because supporters of other candidates had offered to buy $100 and $50 worth of tickets respectively, for the purpose of defeating us. That we were certain to be reduced to fifth position or lower if this were done. That if we would accept $60 and $40 instead of $141 and $91 respectively, they would guarantee our winning first and second places in the contest. We were notified that we must decide immediately, and we were not permitted to consult Mr. B. E. Elberson, manager of the Marlowe Theatre, which we should have done. Being informed that we were entitled to first and second places and not wishing to be deprived of our positions in the contest, we consented to sign the agreement proffered by Mr. Mendenhall, accepting less than we otherwise be entitled to as prize winners. We know positively that Mr. Elberson had no knowledge of this proposition being made, or of our acceptance of it, and was in no way a party to the proposition.
> "BESSIE L. KLINE,
> "MARIE L. VOLK.
> "Bucyrus, March 28, 1916."

Mr. Elberson has said that the contest was not a marked success and it is probable that in order to show a profit this rather drastic method of reducing the prize values was resorted to. By prompt and frank action, Mr. Elberson has extricated himself from an unpleasant situation, but if exhibitors would only stop and think a moment they will realize that they are virtually giving their business honor and standing in their community into the hands of persons who cannot be expected to be interested. The contest men are out to make money. A financial return is of greater interest to them than the business honor of their client. If something breaks it is not their bank roll. They must show a profit and they do, but the exhibitor is the one who suffers.

There is nothing mysterious in a popularity contest. You get prizes of a certain value, generally proportioned to the length of time the contest will run. You print tickets or coupon books good for a certain number of future admissions and a stated number of immediate votes. You issue coupons with each cash sale of tickets. These are given to the contestants or deposited in ballot boxes in the theater lobby. At the end of the determined period the votes are counted. The first prize goes to the person having the largest number of votes, the second to the next largest number and so on down the line. Some show printers make a specialty of getting up these ticket books, or your own printer can do it for you. It is customary to use lathe work as a protection or a signature cut, to counterfeit which is a forgery. Either will protect the house from duplication.

The capital prize is generally obtained at the lowest trade price from a local dealer, who may take part of the payment in advertising. For the rest the exhibitor may turn to the novelty dealers who sell gold watches as low as nine dollars a dozen and watches with movements of standard makes for very little. A showy lavaliere can be had for a dollar or more and silverware of a well known name for surprisingly small prices. It is not good stuff; not the sort of stuff that will do the house any good, but it is precisely the same stuff that you will get if you join a contest scheme with an outside man. He shades the price a little by buying in dozen lots, but that is all.

All of this being true, why pay a man to come to your home town and swindle your patrons even when he runs a contest on the level? And what assurance have you that some trickery will not be tried? You get paid for all the admissions you sell, as a rule, but perhaps you find he has added some votes, "to make the contest seem bigger," and you do not find out until later that these represent votes he sold.

There undoubtedly are contest companies that deal fairly with the manager, and few will resort to raw work unless they get in a tight place, but at best the prizes will be trumpery and will be billed to the exhibitor at the cost of real jewelry and silverware.

Run your own contests with town-bought prizes, and keep away from this growing class. One concern started a pony contest (the word is spelled correctly) and contestants did not discover until later that the contest covered a dozen houses in as many towns. Eleven exhibitors had to face their disappointed patrons.

If you want contests run your own. It is cheaper and better and if you get stung it will be by a home bee.

VITAGRAPH SHOW IN BAY SHORE CHURCH.

Bit by bit, motion pictures have been gaining with the church because of the fact that in many ways, pictures have been made to contribute to the very teachings of truth and morals that make people better churchgoers.

It is interesting, though not altogether surprising, therefore, to note that a clergyman, Rev. D. D. Irvine, of the Methodist Church, Bay Shore, L. I., is to present a "motion picture service" at his church on the evening of Sunday, April 16.

He is a personal friend of Ralph W. Ince, managing director of the Vitagraph studio, located at Bay Shore, L. I. For the occasion, the Vitagraph Company has loaned two scene pictures entitled "Niagara in Winter Dress" and "Beautiful California," and a pictorial Bible story entitled "The Life of Daniel" together with a picturization of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," in which Ince portrays the immortal Lincoln.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

AN IMPORTANT announcement has been made with regard to the local exhibition of the Triangle productions by Australasian Films, Ltd., the biggest Australian motion picture concern. Harry Musgrove, general manager, made preliminary arrangements with regard to the Triangles during his recent visit to America, and his announcement caused no little satisfaction among Australian film fans who have already read extensively of the Griffith-Ince-Sennett combination.

As far as exhibition in this city is concerned, he is working in conjunction with W. Barrington Miller, who, as general manager of Union Theaters, Ltd., controls seven of the principal Sydney theaters and an extensive circuit through the capitals of the six states.

They have chosen the Sydney "Lyceum" as the Triangle house, thus giving a crowning glory to the theater where in the past have been shown the biggest spectacular features, including "Cabiria," "The Spoilers" and "Quo Vadis?" A big scheme of structural alterations has been prepared, including the rearrangement of the front of the house, the installation of stage sets and a decorative color scheme to be carried throughout the theater. The prices will range from sixpence (ten cents) to half a crown (sixty cents), the two-dollar charge being as yet rather tall to Australians for pictures, or the regular "legit" theater either. It is interesting to note that the highest price charged for a film entertainment was three shillings (75 cents) for "Hypocrites" at the Palace theater.

A big advertising campaign has been mapped out by C. L. Yearsley, the firm's publicity manager, with full, half and quarter pages in the local dailies, the publication of a magazine, and well-situated hoardings. The opening advertising must necessarily strike a different note to that used by Triangle in America; for many of the stars, whose names alone are drawing cards in the U. S. A., are absolutely unknown here. On the opening Triangle program at the Knickerbocker theater, New York, only Mabel Normand and Mack Sennett are at all known in Australia, while a few have seen Dustin Farnum. This difficulty being overcome through the magazine and press paragraphs.

Mr. Miller and Mr. Musgrove have fixed the Sydney opening for the latter end of March, with a special trade show a week in advance. Brisbane will commence with them practically the same time, and Melbourne, Adelaide, Perth and Hobart are to follow in rapid succession.

The "Sierra" brought the first batch of pictures to Sydney on February 29. Among them were "The Lamb," "The Coward," "Let Katy Do It," "The Golden Claw" and an assortment of Keystones.

An Order-in-Council has been gazetted in Wellington, New Zealand, prohibiting the exhibition of films dealing with war subjects.

A referendum has been taken in Hobart, Tasmania, in regard to whether Sunday picture shows should be permitted. The result of the poll was a majority of 420 out of over 5,000 votes in favor of the opening on Sunday.

Archbishop Wright, head of the Church of England ministry in Sydney, is a very strong advocate of film censorship. Writing in the "Church Monthly," he declares that the large majority of stage plays and motion pictures tend to immorality.

His article has caused much adverse criticism.

Raymond Longford, a prominent director here, is at present working on a production which, it is stated, will be the longest picture yet made in Australia, running into eight or nine reels. Mr. Longford has not made public any statement regarding his venture, but it is rumored that the subject will deal with a page in Australian history, probably the landing of Captain Cook. Monsignor Cerretti, formerly with the Ambrosio Company, of Turin, Italy, is cameraman.

Photoplays shown here this week include "The Shooting of Dan McGrew—this is the second Metro feature shown in Sydney, and has screened to crowded houses all this week. "The Country Mouse," a Bosworth feature, is the star at the Crystal Palace. Paramount's "The Arab" is the leading feature at the Strand and the Majestic and has been favorably criticised by the press—the fine scenery receiving special mention. "The Plunderer" has been shown at the Theater Royal for the past six days. This is a decided contrast to "Carmen," screened the week before, but has been equally successful.

George Willoughby, following in the wake of numerous prominent theatrical managers, is turning to the lucrative calling of picture production and is engaged on his first release, a screen adaption of the play "Emilienne Moreau, the Jean D'Arc de Loos," which is at present on a very successful run in England.

Included in the cast are many well-known artists. The subject is being directed by George Willoughby and Martin Keith, the latter being a prominent producer here, having many fine photoplays to his credit. This will be one of the biggest undertakings of its kind yet attempted in Australia, and there will be over 300 people employed. Special scenery is under construction, including a replica of the village of Loos, where a great deal of the action takes place. Franklyn Barrett, formerly with Pathe Freres, has been engaged as cinematographer for the whole of the Willoughby photoplays.

The fifth annual report and balance sheet of the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Co., which controls four theaters in Sydney and two in Melbourne, was made available this week and shows a credit to the profit and loss account of £14,500 (72,500 dollars). The directors point out that the exhibiting business was satisfactory, but the imposition of a duty on films (twopence (4c.) per foot) by the commonwealth government had the effect of curtailing the profits.

By the A. M. S. "Sierra" which arrived from San Francisco last week Australasian Films, Ltd., received a consignment of films valued at £15,000 (75,000 dollars). This is the largest single shipment ever received in Australia. The pictures were the initial offerings of the Triangle program.

Nina Speight, who has appeared in several Australian photoplays taken at Manly (Sydney), is leaving this month for the U. S. A., with a view to trying her luck in pictures. In addition to her appearance before the camera, Miss Speight has had stage experience with Pollard's Opera Company, and with a partner in a dancing turn in vaudeville.

But it is as an artist's model that she has become known. She is the possessor of much beauty and charm, and was much sought after by prominent artists for face and neck studies.

She gives great promise of a successful career in the pictures.

A new Photoplay theater will be opened shortly by Waddington's Limited, who already control many theaters in Sydney and suburbs. The new show is situated in Darlinghurst, a suburb of this city, and will have a seating capacity of two thousand.

The Palace theater, where many good features have been shown from time to time, including "Judith of Bethulia," "Neptune's Daughter" and "Hypocrites," will again revert to the pictures after a short season of legitimate. The new attraction is "A Film Visit to the Vatican." As the picture is being widely advertised, it should meet with good success.

The Williamson submarine pictures have had a very successful run in Melbourne, and will shortly be presented in this city. It is a peculiar coincidence that when presented by the J. C. Williamson management at their Paramount theater in Melbourne, the same company were having a successful run of the play "Under Fire" at their legit theater right opposite. So that anyone coming along the street had the choice of "Under Fire" or "Under Water."

* * *

By the way, mention of "Under Fire" recalls the fact that the well-known Sydney "Bulletin" in its criticism of that play said the realism of "Under Fire" is startling, but it is nothing to the realism of the picture. Which, coming from the "Bulletin," is enough proof in itself of the upward trend of the standard of motion pictures.

HOW A CLERGYMAN WINS OUT WITH THE MOVING PICTURES.

The Rev. T. S. Ross, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Ellsworth, Maine, has for some months past been a steady user of pictures in connection with his Sunday services. So much benefit has been derived from this source, and such a demand has sprung up for just the sort of pictures he has been using, that Mr. Ross has decided to embark in the film rental business in so far as educational films are concerned. He has already secured a number of reels, and is making his programs up in units of five reels. Those consist of juvenile comedy and drama, and a generous sprinkling of educational subjects.

This is rather a radical departure for a clergyman, but the program which he terms the "Warwick Children's Program" is meeting with success which proves that a demand exists. This program will be let to churches, schools or theaters and a fresh program will be supplied each week.

Further to the above notice the educator is glad to be able to publish a letter written to the editor of this page which on account of the valuable experiences is worth reproducing in full, the reverend gentleman is to be congratulated, not only upon his keen perception of the value of the moving pictures in church and educational work, but also upon his display of the courage of his convictions; he may also be further congratulated upon the victory obtained and upon his determination to place himself at the service of others whose conditions may be very similar to his own.

To The Moving Picture Educator:

Dear Sir—I am a clergyman. Am pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church of this city. I have for a long time been interested in moving pictures, and some time ago, in fact about a year ago, I decided to incorporate them as a regular part of my Sunday evening service. This is a dead city. There are no industries and nothing to incite enthusiasm in any way. Among the several churches of the city it is doubtful if our entire congregations exceeded one hundred and fifty people in the aggregate on Sunday night.

Your department in the "World" had been carefully read for some period of time when I decided to make the radical departure which I did. Guided by my own judgment of what was best for my use, and a young man of my acquaintance who is actively engaged in the film business, I ran my first "show." I had a fairly large gathering but several of the "pillars" of the church withdrew their support from that instant. I had desecrated my church.

Nevertheless, handicapped as I was by this loss of support and a too low salary, I kept it up. I used every method possible to get pictures which would redect credit on the new work. And I have won. Last week at the conference I was unanimously asked to return and this in spite of the fact that for a few weeks after I started. I had lacks a friend in town.

On Sunday evening now my church is crowded. The pews and extra chairs are filled standing room is scarce, and why? I run pictures which are far superior to any stolen sermon. Recently I ran a picture selected from a Saturday Evening Post story by Miss Eleanor Gates. It was entitled "Dan." It was a temperance story and in the midst of the most intense temperance agitation, and the fact that Maine is supposed to be prohibition, it proved a wonderfully effective picture. The lesson for temperance was drawn hard, and the memory will always remain with whoever saw it. I had a crowded church that night yet not a person moved or spoke for minutes after the pictures were over. The picture coupled with a few well chosen remarks had entranced them. It was a wonderful sight to see this great great mass of humanity carried off their feet by a motion picture and among that crowd were those who a year ago could not see their way clear to attend the church if pictures were to be used.

In getting such crowds into my church, I am keeping hundreds of young boys and girls off the streets at night. Every one is welcome whether they have money or not. I have never stipulated the amount of the collection to be made. We have a free will offering only.

I feel that other clergymen would take this up if they were assured of getting good pictures. A minister does not have time to hunt and look for pictures as he would like to. Therefore having gained considerable experience in what has made a success of my church and myself, I am establishing a bureau for the purpose of supplying churches, schools or theaters with an educational and religious program.

While the work of accumulating a small stock and a steady source of supply of such films as I require is interesting, it is, to say the least, expensive. But my greatest trouble is to find the source of supply. It is possible that you could help me in this respect. If so, any advice or information will be appreciated.

EDUCATOR NEWS FROM THE WIDER FIELD.

In Salt Lake City Utah arrangements have been made between the school authorities and a local picture house to show such pictures as may be beneficial to the children. Permission is given to announce these subjects in the school and class-rooms and committees composed of the Women's Civic League help in the selection of suitable programs. The subjects given preference are Fairy Stories, Nature Studies, Travelogues and any others of educational value.

Superior, Wisconsin.—In the Matt Carpenter school a complete moving picture has been installed for the purpose of giving picture aid in the manual training classes also in the domestic science classes. The children are helping to pay for the apparatus by the exhibition given. Special attention is being given to "Our Scenic West," local pride in the wonders of the west will also, they hope, prove to the advantage of those places in attracting tourists whose money is now diverted from European countries. A local special pride is added to these pictures in that they are colored and are of unusually attractive appearance. "Treasure Island," by Stephenson, and Pathe pictures are much used.

In Rochester, New York, a movement calling for "Better Pictures for Children" is being inaugurated. There is something presumptuous about such a title in that it seems to convey the idea that they have some superior knowledge or power in that well and favorably-known city. Certain claims are being made that the idea of special exhibitions for children were somewhat of a patent which they had discovered. It cannot be too widely known that the interests of the children have always been the best interests of the moving picture people, there is no special need for local societies to organize for such a purpose; if they will organize with the object of co-operating with the present makers and powers that be in seeing to it that the hundreds of films now lying idle were brought to the attention of the children, they would, without doubt, be doing a good work.

Schenectady reports the advantageous use of moving pictures at a local exposition. The pictures covered a wide range of pure food subjects and were interesting and instructive. The majority of the films were taken in the pure food factories and were valuable in showing people how the foods they eat are prepared, to which is of course added the fact the best-known hygenic plans are always adopted. Among the many industries represented were the Hawaiian pineapple industry, the preparation of certified milk, the tea and honey industries, a model pure food factory, the preparation of grape juice and many other similar industries properly finding place in such an exposition which has been made possible only by the advent of the moving picture. It was announced that about the most complete film of the series was that showing the honey bee industry of the A. I. Root Apiaries at Medina, Ohio. In addition to the interest in the work of the bees themselves, great interest is centered in the doings of an expert, who, stripped to waist, pours an entire swarm of bees from a basket over his bare body and concludes his demonstration by filling his straw hat full of bees and putting it on his head, thereby illustrating the knowledge of the habits of bees so that they may be handled without difficulty. Bees hatching from the comb and many other similar incidents are fully illustrated, making the whole one of more than ordinary interest.

A writer to the American Magazine calls attention to the way in which the Japanese teach by the aid of colored pictures the special subjects of moral behavior. "How shall a child know how to act unless he is taught," said a Japanese teacher. The writer deplores the absence of such a course in this country and suggests this as a most suitable subject for an educational film.

Wilby's In Again.

THE Stramco Post is on the map again, in changed form. The Post is run by R. H. Wilby for the Strand Amusement Company, Montgomery, Ala., and the issues to hand are more like the old Academian than anything Mr. Wilby has done since. The first Stramco Post was blazing a trail and was too serious and argumentative, but now that the road is clear we get flashes of the old Wilby style. Once more we copy his program style, for he has something new again.

2 THE STRAMCO POST

The House of Quality

Strand Theatre

SUNDAY Feb. 6th. MARIE DORO in "THE WOOD NYMPH"	The charming little Frohman star has a particularly winsome role in this Griffith-supervised story of a girl brought up to believe in mythology and to distrust men. The love story which follows her first meeting with a youth will fascinate you with its beauty, its subtle humor and its sweetness.
MONDAY Feb. 7th. FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN with Beverly Bayne in "MAN and HIS SOUL"	Even more than in "Pennington's Choice" is the most popular pair of players in pictures given an opportunity to please in this original drama which combines a sublime allegory and a vital, modern story. Especially beautiful are the scenes of "The Garden of Eden" with Valentine Grant as Eve.
TUESDAY Feb. 8th. HOLBROOK BLINN in "LIFE'S WHIRLPOOL"	Frank Norris, author of "The Pit," wrote this powerful story which, at the time of publication, was greatly discussed because of its daring treatment of the raw facts of life. Its power offers Holbrook Blinn even a greater opportunity for intense acting than did "The Boss." Fania Marinoff is the leading woman.
WEDNESDAY Feb. 9th. HELEN WARE in "SECRET LOVE"	This adaption of Frances Hodgson Burnett's "That Lass O' Lowries" is reported to us as being one of the three strongest dramas of the past year. It offers its star the first suitable role she has had in pictures, and of it she makes a success even greater than were hers upon the stage.
THURSDAY Feb. 10th. WILLIARD MACK in Triangle's "THE CONQUEROR"	Williard Mack and Enid Markey, stars of "Alaho Oe," appear in a drama the conflict in which is the old fight between rising youth and a "socially arrived" family; a drama of love, and struggle and intrigue, that results in a victory for youth.
FRIDAY Feb. 11th. PEARL WHITE in "HAZEL KIRKE"	The famous old play which has charmed a generation upon the stage has never had such an interpretation as is given by Pearl White, Bruce McRae, Creighton Hale and William Riley Hatch, nor such a production as has been given by the Whartons, producers of "Elaine" and "Pauline."
SATURDAY Feb. 12th. CARLYLE BLACKWELL in "THE CLARION"	Here is a story of the conflict between a youth's ideals and his love for a girl and his father, of a fight against odds for what he knew to be right, and of his victory. It is an adaption of a novel of newspaper life by Samuel Hopkins Adams.

Here we get a combination of the formal program and the always effective running story. Try it in your own program some time. The Strand gets the inside front cover and the Plaza the inside back cover. The rest of the sixteen-page space is given to chat of the features, the players, the house and outside advertising. All of the house announcements are on the third page, but he does not give a time table, which is now the proper caper. His editorial on the child and the pictures is worth the space it takes; there is no reason why the pictures today should be viewed, even by the reformers, as an entertainment solely for the child:

CHILDREN AND MOTION PICTURES.

No longer is the motion picture a child's amusement, yet there seems to exist a tendency for some people to criticize their subject matter ever with the idea of its effect upon the child before them. Some one has truly said: "The motion picture is a process of recording thought without the use of printer's ink, and is as great an advance on printing as Gutenberg's invention was over the quill pen." As a form of thought record it could not well be expected to be restrained within the limits of a child's understanding.

At the beginning of the exploitation of motion pictures as a form of amusement, they were confined to views of trains in motion, of runs of fire apparatus, views of boats sailing, anything that would show that pictures could be made of moving objects. Naturally these things appealed most strongly to children. Then followed those composed of fifty feet of excuse and nine hundred and fifty feet of chase, with humor injected through collisions. Equally as naturally these too had their biggest following among the children. Then came the day of cowboy-and-Indian melodrama, similarly designed to please without causing thought of any kind.

But the motion picture has outgrown those things. It has passed through the stages of adaptions of classics, of adaptions of successful play and novels—and some unsuccessful ones—until it is now entering a new development. Authors of real ability are writing stories for the screen alone, and writing seriously. It would be essentially wrong to attempt to confine their thoughts to those things which would be adapted to exhibition to children, just as it would be to expect all the magazines to confine their stories to subjects which might be discussed with them. Just as Mr. McClure and Mr. Hearst do not publish their magazines with the idea of having them read by youngsters, just so Mr. Griffith, Mr. Ince and Mr. Pathe do not make motion pictures with the children as the prospective audiences.

But Messrs. Hearst and McClure do publish magazines for children. And many of the picture producers have made films which are well adapted to exhibition for them. It is a selection of these that the Strand Amusement Company will begin to exhibit at the Plaza theater on Saturday mornings from nine thirty until twelve under the auspices and with the cooperation of the Montgomery Federation of Women's Clubs. The first exhibition of these programs will be given on Saturday, Feb. 19.

Each program will be composed of some fairy tale, a reel of scenes from this or foreign lands, and a comedy. The admission will be five cents. The first program will include an adaptation of "Cinderilla" with Mabel Taliaferro in the leading role.

Mr. Wilby is making good use of his magazine to fight the censorship and he fights in the proper way, not with denunciation, but with proof and argument. We are mighty glad to see him with a house sheet again for he can, and does, deliver the goods.

About P. T. A.

An exhibitor wants to know if there are any matinee schemes in Picture Theater Advertising. There are. There is an entire chapter of proved stuff. The book was written in Maine last spring and one night we went down to the picture theater where the manager was kicking about his business. We sent him the carbon sheets of that chapter. In January we were there again and he was not only playing to big business, but sometimes has a matinee turnaway. That seems to be the answer. One afternoon last spring we dropped in on the matinee and he was playing to eighteen people.

Changing Around.

That Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., keeps us busy recording its program changes. Its latest is an eight by eleven four-pager. cream surfaced paper with a cut of Ruth Roland on the front page, advertising the Red Circle, the daily program inside and brief underlines on the back page. It is probably too costly for regular use and may have been brought out merely to give the Red Circle a start, but it will do that and more. And the issue carries as a supplement a folder portrait of Miss Pickford.

And, as might have been expected, from them, merely because they had all the extra space, they did not overload the program with an excess of announcement. They did not give the recipient too much to read.

But they will be careless with their cuts and are using an old Famous Players cut of Marie Doro for her appearance in a Triangle subject, though it is only a matter of a moment to chisel off the misleading line. It is the only kick we have with the Lehigh, which does all other things so well.

Walk Soft.

It's a fine scheme to number your programs and make some of them good for admission, but what are you going to say to the Post Office Inspector when he comes around? Even if you do not sell the programs, you are liable under the lottery law, as is the paper that prints the winning numbers.

A Husky Infant.

C. H. Arrington, of the Grand and Alamo, Rocky Mount, N. C., sends in the second issue of the dual house organ. It is large for its age, four by nine, twelve pages and cover, the latter being heavy dove colored paper and the rest news stock. The Grand gets the double middle page, nicely set out and the Alamo is given the inside back cover. There is plenty of outside advertising, but run primarily for the house. One good front page feature is entitled "To be with us this week," and lists the stars without reference to their plays. There is plenty of house talk, gossip of the players, and the house stuff gets the right hand pages where it will show best. It is workmanlike from cover to cover and we feel puffed up when Mr. Arrington says that this department has been of help to him. If we helped him get that out, we can both go out and take a drink. He might have gold plated the edges, but he could not do much else to improve, for he got it all worked out before he started. One feature night he had opposition in the shape of a glee-club charity performance, so, to get his money, he ran an extra performance at half-past ten, and to make certain that the concert would be over by then he invited the glee club to be his guests. A man like that is ready for a larger town. He made one break in the first issue, calling it the Movie News, but in the second issue he changes over to Photoplay News. We like the word better without the hyphen between "photo" and "play."

We want to get on Mr. Arrington's list and stay there, if he will be so good.

Right There.

The Orpheum, Aberdeen, is right in line with the extra for the "Battle Cry of Peace" and got out the edition before we printed the reproduction of a similar advertisement. And as before they used up the cuts to save composition costs.

An Auto Contest.

The Swanson houses in Salt Lake City, the Liberty and Rex, are running an automobile contest for the kiddies, the prize being a real gas operated car, but a child's size. The usual coupon stunt is used, the child with the greatest number of votes getting the prize. The novelty of the idea lies in the use of a real gas car as a prize.

The Bleich Organ.

George A. Bleich, of the Empress and Queen, Owensboro, Ky., sends in the last issues of his house organ. The first is "reel one, act one," but the second is more properly "reel two instead of "act two." It is good, but a man who can write the sort of stuff that Mr. Bleich can is overlooking a bet when he has no editorial column. He has a nice four pager, but no characteristic Bleich talk. Of course he puts the Bleich stamp on anything he does, but we miss what we almost have a right to expect. The nearest he comes to it is a cut of the house and "The purest picture of the week—this one of the Empress theater." He prints on a very good stock, changing color for each week, and runs mostly to a display, though breaking up the page to avoid gaps and sameness. We would like to see him come to a form listing the formal program and embellishing on it in reading notices. It will take more time to prepare, but it will be worth the effort. From most people the current issue would be better than usual, but we know Mr. Bleich and what he can do when he takes his coat off. He also sends in a very pretty three-day advertisement. It runs six inches cross page and over the two houses. A moderate use of rule border holds the two apart, but he does not spoil the effect with the over use of rules now inside the border. There are times when heavy rule must frame all sections, but to avoid the necessity for resort to this by not trying to tell too much. Mr. Bleich gets his display through the balance of the ideas and not through stuffing the space as full of black type as he can.

Hearts for the Fourteenth.

If you collect ideas make a note that for St. Valentine's week this year the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., surcharged a big red heart over the cut used on its program. For this purpose you must use the so-called transparent inks that do not obscure what is underneath. These are used in printing the three-color process and are not expensive. Of course you do not have to wait until next year to overprint some cut, but it works especially well for valentine week.

Room for Improvement.

The Palace, Wichita, Kans., gets out what looks to be a neat magazine until you turn the cover page. Inside lack of arrangement and want of definite layout spoils the effect. The issue is sixteen pages and cover. The first inside page is set in the form of a cross with the four corners used for trade advertisements. The story jumps to pages back of the three program pages and each installment of the running comment is headed by the fact that Frederickson sells automobile tires and at the bottom runs a remark about Sam's Kitchen. At that Sam is a better line writer than the house management, for he cuts chops and steaks "to order," just like a custom tailor. Sam and Fred should be set over into the advertising part and the reading space kept for reader. The program proper should run on three right hand pages, with some good reading matter in the left hand, and this should be in the form of headed items, set two columns to the page. And the very next time the printer sets short measure and boxes in the white space at the side, he should be hit on the head with the roller of his proof press. Perhaps they hope to get some advertising in these white spaces, but it would be better to take the stuff for the house and write convincing house and film stuff to fit. Greediness for advertising seems to have spoiled the program on every page and the double middle page, the best position for a two page program is given over to the same short order restaurant, a milling company, a "conscientious" plumber and an electric company with a cut of the house in the centre done from the architect's drawing. The program would work just as hard for the house as it does for outsiders if they would give it a chance.

Speed Up.

Donmeyer and Keefer, of the Palace, Salina, Kansas, seem to send copy for the printer over to the shop and then forget about it, at least the job is turned out without the slightest attention to proper type and display and then, with grim humor, it is announced as a "de luxe souvenir program." Just for fun we wish the printer would look up that word de luxe. If he finds it matches the program we will be pleased to find so new a definition. There is not a line of house talk, no underline, all of the program is set in machine caps with a foolish looking fan shaped ornament in the centre that tells you to "Note the features for the week." That sort of line cannot pull a penny into the house. Used to boom the star feature, it would work.

Like a Blanket.

J. P. Greenwell, of the Monroe, Monroe, Wis., writes that he turns to the daily paper, which covers the field "like a blanket," but that he contemplates the issue of a small house organ in the near future. The house seats 275 and draws on a town of five thousand, so it does not have to be a very large blanket. Three samples are sent in, one a spread for a run of three features on successive days (some stunt in a house that size), but ordinarily they take three fives for a feature and the same space single for the daily advertising. In a town that size the local advertising rates are apt to be reasonable and the publication of the booklet should not be made at the cost of space in the paper. The paper gives a good display, for the type is put together by a man who is something more than a compositor, though he does not try to draw pictures, and some do. He simply does a good job in artist fashion as the reproduction will show. If the trade ads yielding will take up the cost of a house booklet, it can be used to advantage in addition to the newspaper stuff, but the booklet work is not where the newspaper rates are too high to give a good display at a reasonable price. Even a small town, though, can support a house four-pager if the merchants are properly approached. The best form is to take the inside for the house program and give the back to the advertiser or to take the back for underline, the third page for the house and give the second page to advertising.

Double Duty.

The Majestic-Colonial Theater Company, of Jackson, Mich., uses one house organ to cover the two houses. It is rather small, about 5 by 6½, but it runs twelve pages and cover, most of the space going to the Majestic. The printer might do better by the job, but he seems to lack good type faces and sets the house title in Old English over each section of the Majestic program. This used to be regarded as good form, but most of those who held to that theory have since died of old age. He suffers too, from a lack of sense of balance and will shoot a thirty-six point title where a type half that size would be plenty on a page with no other bold face. And to make things worse, he does not even get a good impression. If there is another printer in town a change would be advisable. A man with average good judgment could make a prettier job without half trying. The house uses straight program form for the Majestic and display for the Colonial; the trailer house. Properly done, this would be striking and effective, but the type is not there, and the result is not good though the copy is all right. The Colonial seems to be a weak sister and is not given the proper attention. The house name should appear over the program (doubly important where there are two houses) and the days should be dated. When space permits there is talk about the underline, but the space varies as the Majestic takes in the road shows and this program copy is variable. The agent who turned in copy for the Pygmalion program is a wonder. He gives a glossary of the cockney dialect used in the Shaw play which tells that a "tanner" is a coin worth six pence and adds that six pence is twenty cents. This has nothing to do with the house, of course, but it shows the sort of agents that go ahead of some road shows. Getting back to the program: If the Colonial program could be uniformly shown on a right hand page, it would help to convince the patrons that the house was regarded with proper respect. As it is, there is in the treatment of the lesser house a suggestion of contempt that is not wholly wise. The patrons should be made to think that the house amounted to something and this could be done with a little more care and a better printer. A page a day for the big house and six to the page for the Colonial is scarcely politic. A little too much attention is paid to the trade advertising. It is permitted to crowd the house announcements. The chief office of the program should be to give the fullest publicity to the house. Taking the back or the inside back page for house talk would probably mean more than the check from the advertiser does, though it would not be so tangible an asset. The company has a good idea, apart from this, but it is handicapped by the printer.

Make a Note.

Earl Calvin Johnson, of the Princess, Memphis, Texas, sends in some samples, a couple of which are worth noting. One is a small card lettered to advertise Warren Kerrigan. In one corner, where a space is left, a button pin is fastened and Mr. Johnson writes that adults will accept and wear these button advertisements where they would not take them if they were offered loose. As each button worn is a perambulating advertisement, its idea is worth remembering. Another "wrinkle" is a souvenir program given all box parties. The cut shows the sheet opened. This is plate paper, printed on one side and then folded so that the program and memorandum of the party face each other, the other side showing the house name, in two colors. This odd form gives a swagger effect and also saves one printing. These special programs are prepared for each box party, an idea recommended in Picture Theater Advertising. It is better to have each program distinctive, since many in a small town will receive several in the course of the season, and by using this form of fold the entire program is printed at one impression, save where a two color job is wanted. The special program sounds fussy, but it helps more than most managers would imagine, and Mr. Johnson looks after small niceties as is shown in his personal letter heads, a little touch that counts.

Mr. Johnson also sends in his program and asks that brother exhibitors exchange with him. The front page is used for house talk and inside he starts each column with a dated day, runs down as far as the text will and fills with comment. We think he could get a neater effect by setting across page, three days to a page, and using the front and back for notes and house talk. If he does not like to run the small type across the page, he can use the matter about as it stands, but set the announcement at the left and the running comment to the right of this, breaking with a hairline rule between and with one point to separate the days. The day to a column is an easier make-up, but not quite as striking. The program is well set and as well printed, the stock and ink working well and getting a strong black on a good white. Shoot some samples o Mr. Johnson and help along.

Too Modest.

The Lyric, Lancaster, N. H., is just starting in, running three days a week. It is a little too modest in its opening announcement, for it says they will have "one big feature a month." This wording suggests that the other twelve or fourteen days will be given to plays that are not big features, where a change in phrase would isolate one exceptional feature and still permit the other offerings to be regarded as out of the ordinary. "Features always but at least one unusual attraction each month" would have been better, or if they run regular programs most of the time, it would still be possible to avoid the suggestion that there would be but one strong story a month. The opening advertisement tells the facts as to the prices, times of showing and similar details, but does not say anything about the opening bill. If the opening attraction had not been arranged for, a "teaser" line to suggest mystery would have helped, but both house and attraction should be recognized in some manner. As a starter, the machine was taken to the opera house to illustrate a lecture on Serbia as part of the movement to collect relief funds. The house was named and a vote of thanks was given, which means more than any amount of straight newspaper advertising. That is effective because for the moment the attention of an entire audience was centered upon the Lyric theater. We look to see Carroll and Mills swing into line as regulars.

What's the Use?

R. L. McLean, of the Capitol, Frankfort, Ky., sends in his program "to be roasted." The "roast" he gets is on the use of the word. Constructive criticism is not roasting and because we do not always smear soft soap over everything that comes in, it does not follow that we "roast." We are not trying to flatter, but to help, and in the long run this is better appreciated, because more beneficial, than effusive praise. At the same time we do not think that Mr. McLean expected much in the way of comment. He has a layout that he knows we like; a layout designed we believe by the Hennegan Company for its colored program covers. In this the advertisements frame the program which appears in the center of the inside of a four-pager. Here the top is held for reading matter, but it is mostly clipped stuff where a running comment on the films of the week would have been better. It is all right to tell that some photoplayer is the "proud possessor" of an automobile, but it will do the house a lot more good to tell that a current program is particularly strong and why. The use of chat of the plays and players is all right where there is plenty of space at command, but where space is limited, use it for the house and the current program. The program should be framed in heavier rule than that used to keep the trade advertisements separated. In this case the frame for the house program should be three point flush rule. This and the Kellette form printed some time ago and reproduced in Picture Theater Advertising, form the best program forms for a four page program because both give a maximum of display with a maximum of trade advertising without confusing the two. That Triangle border on the front page would come up better on better stock, as would the cut, but this is merely a matter of cost and the main thing is the program message, and this is done in good usage.

Another Good One.

The Family Theater, Adrian, Mich., has another good idea. They are going to add a story teller to their children's matinees. Each program will show scenes in some one country and presumably the stories will be stories of that land. The exhibitors have it in their power to make those children's matinees the best argument against censoring down to the juvenile standard that can be offered, and we are glad to see so many coming into line. It's worth a little trouble to make these morning performances as attractive as possible, and brief stories will help a lot to give variety to the program. If you cannot do that you can at least in a couple of phonograph records of characteristic music to be found in the educational catalogues of the various companies, and perhaps donate these to the public schools after use.

Changed Name.

The Star theater, Lumberton, N. C., is now known as the Arcade and is under the management of Worth and Worth. They send in a small folder for the reopening that is a trifle confusing. For instance they announce a five-reel feature for the opening and then announce the hours at which the reels will be run, but at the last show "two reels and the comedy" are to be run, though nothing has been said of other than the five reel. In the same way they advertise that the house will be open every afternoon and night, the matinee to start at 3 o'clock, though nothing is said as to the night hours unless the opening schedule is adhered to. It is best to be at some pains to be definite.

Neatly Done.

The Cumberland theater, Brooklyn, gets out a very neat program in brown on cream. It might run titles in a type a trifle larger and still be inside the limit, but it is better to err on the side of modesty. They might, too, play up the Children's special performance on Saturdays. It is given merely as a note tagged to the regular program announcement. And speaking of the matinee, here is a sidelight on announcements. The special performance was announced in a locality paper known as Chat. Our better half saw it and decided that if she had time through the week she would phone over for the hour of performance and take the real head of the house. If she had no time, the three-year-old would have lost the treat. Had the hour of performance been stated in the press work the quarter would have been cinched then and there. It is impossible to be too definite as to hours and locations in press work and all other advertising matter.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail postpaid $2.00

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Good for Mr. Miller.

DID you see a recent letter from Ashley Miller in the news columns? He is one of the few directors who does not know it all. He is willing to concede that an author may know more about his own story than a director does, and he urges larger pay for proper stories and co-operation between author and director. Mr. Miller is not merely breaking into print, either. He is not swinging out with a letter in line with a growing belief. He thought and acted the same way three or four years ago, when he was largely responsible for the first payments of one hundred dollars a reel for one reel stories. He and Bannister Merwin worked together on some of the best Edisons that studio ever turned out because both the direction and the story were there.

It does not follow that a director can write because he can direct. He may be able to do both, but if he does, he will be the exception and not the rule. Take any copy of this paper and read the synopses. When you come to a story "written and directed by——" you will find a steal or a rehash about ninety-nine times out of a hundred. It is the same with some of the staff writers. One of them recently presented a rehash of Sabotage as his own, cluttering it up with some foolish complications that detracted from the story. It may be argued that he simply got the idea, not having heard of the original source, but if this be true, he is at least an exceedingly badly prepared author, for some stories are too well known to be unknown to any writing person.

If there were more directors like Mr. Miller there would be vastly better stories. Now and then a director can write new business into a script and make it better, but more generally they spoil the balance of the story and throw it out of plumb—and the author gets blamed.

Before the motion picture business gets on a permanent plane we must have a house cleaning. We must do away with directors who write all their own stories. We must dispense with those who "fix up" everything that comes into their hands and we must be rid of the staff editors who "write" all the stuff they buy from free lancers. We must raise up a more numerous family of really well-trained writers; men and women who can turn out work that can best be put on precisely as they have written it.

Melies Not Buying.

Melies is not in the market for scripts for the Knickerbocker Star Features and scripts intended for the Vim series of that company should be sent to the Vim Studio, 750 Riverside Avenue, Jacksonville, Florida, the old Lubin Southern studio. It might be added that they are not buying very strongly. Nothing whatever should be sent the New York office.

Naughty.

Walter Prichard Eaton, in a recent article, waits that Carmen will make a photoplay story but that a certain other play will not, and therefore finds the motion picture deficient. Why worry? Dramatize Carmen and leave the other play alone. You cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, but the porcine lady may be excellent bacon and spare ribs.

Read the News.

Read all of each issue of the paper and you'll not have to ask so many questions. A correspondent this morning wants to know what the script address of the Bluebird company is. He has not seen their advertisement offering to buy the highest grade of negative. He does not know that it is the successor to another Universal brand, though the page advertisements week after week could not well be overlooked. He doesn't read the paper but when he wants to know something, he sits down and writes a letter—and he does not get an answer. If you are trying to get into the business of writing and selling scripts, be intelligent and keep posted on your markets. Then you will know Pathe is not making films and will not bombard that company with manuscripts.

That Copyright.

Even William Lord Wright now admits that the copyright law before Congress may not be all he hoped for. It has been pointed out that an incompetent may hit upon a good idea and tie up possible variants by other writers of greater competence. We do not anticipate much trouble from this source, but here is a point that no one seems to have thought of.

At present scripts are protected by common law before publication, the Copyright Law merely being the code under which suit may be brought after publication in case of infringement. If a literary product is published and not copyrighted, it is protected neither under the copyright statutes nor in common law since the author, by not copyrighting the book, has virtually abandoned his work to the public.

So long as scripts are not eligible for copyright they are protected by common law as unpublished works, but the moment it is possible to copyright a photoplay in manuscript and this is not done, anyone may legally and with impunity avail themselves of the story.

If it is possible to copyright and you do not do so, then it is the presumption in law that you do not care to protect your work. It means an additional expense without return of any sort.

An English View.

Hepworth is the style of one of the large English film makers, and from their house organ we take this little gem:

> Don't forget that the heart and soul of the scenario is its story. That is the great thing, the essential thing, and the all-important thing about the scenario. If the story is a fascinating thing of heart-interest or mystery, or full-blooded adventure, then your scenario is good at heart.
> But just as the finest soul in a man has to have a body with muscles and eyes and arms and ears and tongue before it can be of any earthly use to other men, so the greatest story must be skilfully, dramatically presented, and in such a way that all the in-between artistes, who are to help the story on its way to the screen, and thus to the minds of the picture-goers, will be able to understand exactly what to do in order to make the story clear and fascinating.

We have said the same thing before, but they say it so very nicely and so compactly that it is worth pasting over your writing desk.

Fading.

In a recent issue Carl Gregory gave out the most compact definition of fade that we have seen when he describes it as the even fading of the entire field, as opposed to the gradual diminuition of the field itself, the picture remaining being full illumination. And please remember that the straight fade is the only form of fade with which you have any concern. The rest is up to the director, and he will overwork the trick devices without any urging from you.

Nix on Lubin.

Owing to the change in production plans of the Lubin company, they do not appear to be in the market for short length scripts at present. Make a note of that fact.

Stand on Your Feet.

You'll never get ahead so long as you want to be helped all the time, and you'll not find success if you just sit around and wait for it. It is not a case of what others do for you, but what you do for yourself that counts. The past week we have been rolling around on the mat with one of each. One man is certain that he can sell five-reel synopses if only he has a sample to guide him. He was courteously advised that if he had an idea and would write it down it would sell, even if it did not look like the one that Jim Smith or Tom Jones sold, yet he persists in the belief that he will not sell until he gets a model, and so he is losing what little chance he has. Another man wrote he would be glad to have a regular job at ten dollars a week, and we showed him a staff position at $35. He did not go after it. He wanted to be a great big success. He would not take legitimate help, and so he is in the same box with the man who wanted more assistance than he could get.

Both will land on the dump heap, though they come in from opposite sides. Neither is playing the game right. One man makes for a fetich and turns out a lot of plays that are poor instead of trying to make any one good, though he has passed the point where it is more profitable to write a hundred plots once than one play a hundred times. He wants some money in a hurry and he blames his form and not his plotting. The other man is too deep in a rut to pull out and take the hands stretched out to him.

Neither man is standing on his feet. One is lying down and the other is up in the air. Both will fail unless they change their methods. Do your own work. Accept legitimate help, but ask no more than that.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 133.

Best answers will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the easiest and simplest method of measuring distance from lens to screen? The rule is: "Intensity of light diminishes with the square of the distance from its source." Does this hold good in projection light?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 126.

The Roll of Honor on Question 126 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York (will Crawford kindly send his street address?); T. C. Shipley, Lincoln, Neb.; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; Walter E. Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; Bert Meester, Hobart, Ind.; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; Arthur H. Cuff, Gravenhurst, Canada; Carl Schmidt, New Ulm, Minn.; F. H. Marx, Ashland, Wis., and Jamie McAdoo, Hamilton, Mo.

I have selected the reply of Brother Shipley for publication.

Reply to Question No. 126.

By T. C. Shipley, Lincoln, Neb.

The Question:

Suppose your mercury arc rectifier tube became sluggish and hard to start, and that small bubbles appeared in the mercury. What would you conclude, and what would you do? Can the reactance of a mercury arc rectifier be used as an economizer, and is it as efficient as the regular economizer when used that way?

The Answer:

If my mercury arc rectifier tube became sluggish and hard to start I would presume that it was losing its vacuum. This supposition would be strengthened if there were bubbles in the mercury, but this must be qualified by the fact that if the rectifier was in a very cold place the tube will start hard due to the low temperature. If I thought the tube was losing its vacuum, I would examine it carefully and see if I could locate the leak. It is sometimes possible to locate a leak and stop it. but the best plan would be to forward the tube immediately to the nearest office of the manufacturer for their inspection, because if the vacuum becomes too low (too much air admitted to the tube), the tube will go hopelessly dead. The first thing to do, should this condition show up, is to get a new tube and get it quickly, if there is not one already on hand. The main reactance of a mercury arc rectifier may be used as an economizer, and is as efficient as the regular economizer when it is used in that way, since the main reactance is nothing more or less than a step-down auto transformer. The newer types of transformers have switches arranged so that you can instantly change from the tube to the reactance in case the tube goes dead, and if you have a rectifier which is not thus equipped it is quite possible to add the switch and the connections, and it should by all means be done.

Sure You Can.

Chicago, Illinois, says:

> I am going to try answering the questions. A reader of the World has convinced me that it is the best reading there is for operators and film men, and I am very thoroughly convinced of that fact too. I am an experienced operator, and member of local No. 110, Chicago.

You're as welcome as the flowers in May, brother, and I am sure you will find that the reading of the Moving Picture World to be beneficial, particularly if you will do what I want you to do, viz.: study as well as read.

Another Idea.

R. W. Martin, Los Angeles, California, writes:

> I notice in a recent issue that Griffiths and Solar have agreed to agree, which is indeed fine. But here is another idea with more or less meat on it. Somebody directly concerned with the "two ray theory" ought to construct an actual working model by using black and white thread, with pieces of cardboard for lenses, and send the finished product to the Archaeological Museum of Moving Monstrosities, which I have heard is located somewhere in New York City, or thereabouts. (Why, confound you, are you taking a side swipe at my office? Man, man! I'll amputate your dome if you don't watch out.—Ed.) Your humble servant would also be willing to make a similar contribution in the shape of the projector, picture of which is attached. If replicas could also be secured of the Pithecanthroups Erectus, The Calaveras Skull, The Hottentot Venus, The Diplodocus, the first copy of "Why Girls Leave Home" (Good night.—Ed.), the first educational film showing how they tunnel for ostriches in Africa, etc. Surely a very interesting collection could be gathered together.

All of which shows that Friend Martin has a sense of humor. As to Brother Griffiths' "two ray theory" being a curiosity, why I cannot at all agree with Martin, because no matter whether we accept the "two ray theory" at its face value or not, the fact remains that it was the first even half way intelligent attempt to explain the action of the projector light ray, and, moreover, whereas it is open to considerable criticism, yet when you dig down into the matter and finally come to understand Griffiths' meaning, his "two ray theory" is not far from right after all, so—there you are. As to the Museum, it's a fact we have accumulated a rather weird collection of curiosities, but it is very seldom they find their way into print—that is those I regard merely as curiosities. I ofttimes publish a thing which I do not think is right, because I believe that, whereas the thing is not in proper shape, the idea itself is susceptible to being worked into practical form.

As to the projector, the illustration shows both sides of the machine, which was made purely for experimental purposes. The lamphouse was constructed from a piece of stove pipe. Inside is a small arc lamp taken from a discarded post card projector, using 5/16 inch carbons. Directly under the lamphouse is the main rheostat; underneath, out of sight, is another similar rheostat; one has high resistance, and the other low. Both are connected in multiple with the arc circuit, the lower resistance being controlled by a separate switch. When both are in use there are about 8 amperes at the arc, and about 5 when only one is in use. Directly in front of the arc rheostat is a variable resistance for controlling the motor, the same being home made from German silver wire, having seven separate coils. It is, of course, connected in series with the motor, and both are in shunt with the arc and its rheostat. The mechanism is very simple, being merely a standard star and cam and sprocket connected by simple gearing to the belt drive from the motor. There is only one sprocket, and the operator must turn the reel of film with his left hand to feed it to the gate. The lower reel is on the floor. The objective of this perfectly wonderful mechanism is a small lens taken from a toy magic-lantern and mounted in the end of a shaving soap can. The condensing system consists of a bi-convex, with a plano-convex on either side. The aperture lens is an achromatic objective taken from a pair of opera glasses. It will readily be seen that the aperture lens can just as well be placed behind the aperture; also the latter position will not require a high grade lens. With this machine the picture was 6 feet wide at a 15 foot throw, and the definition was good, in spite of the cheap objective, due in large part to the fact that the beam at the objective was only about ½ inch in diameter, and thus only the central part of the lens came into use. The narrowest part of the beam is located about one inch in front of the objective, and is about ¼ inch in diameter. Many shutter experiments were performed with this beam, and some important results arrived at. Many miles of film were run on this little machine, with fairly good results on the screen, but the mechanism was constructed wholly and solely for first-hand experiments, and in this capacity was a howling success.

I have given space to this because, as Friend Martin says, it is a bit of curosity, and as such will no doubt prove interesting to operators.

Light Trouble.

R. L. Tice, Pacific Grove, California, says:

> What is the big "bugbear" with regard to alternating current? Everyone who is working with D. C. seems to be worried when they have to tackle A. C. I have never worked with D. C., and would like to know the wherefore. We are using a Butler Formastat on one machine, and a Preddy economizer on the other; get a fine light on the screen. Why is it the Simplex requires more current than a Motiograph to get the same amount of light? When we first opened we ran both machines off the Butler. The arc in the Motiograph would start right off, while the Simplex would sputter until the carbons got warmed up and then would give only about half the light the Motiograph did with the same current, requiring ten to fifteen amperes more to bring it up to normal. The manager had several electrical experts on this problem, but can get no satisfactory solution. A representative of the Western Electric Company was among the number, also the city electrician, who ascribed it to "pure cussedness," though he is a graduate E. E. Both machines are motor driven and have a special dissolving device, designed by our manager, which works so well that no one can tell when the change-over is made.

There is no earthly reason, brother Tice, why the arc in a Motiograph should give more light than the arc in a Simplex. As to the sputtering why I could not tell you where that difference lies perhaps to poor electrical contact somewhere, or it might be due to a difference in the angle of the lamp as a whole. I would suggest the following possible causes: (1) Lamb of one machine properly angled and the lamp of the other not properly angled. (2) A better grade of condensers in one machine than in the other, or condensers spaced farther apart in one machine than in the other. (3) Central system not lined up right and a large waste of light at the objective lens in the Simplex, and not in the Motiograph and last a possible difference in the shutters of the two machines. It may be that the Simplex shutter is not suited to the local conditions, whereas the Motiograph shutter is. I would advise you to study the light rays articles published recently in the [illegible] and by all means to get the new Handbook, and study those various points carefully. As to A. C. and D. C., why it is very much harder to get satisfactory screen illumination with A. C. than with D. C., unless you boost the A. C. amperage up to 70 or 80; this by reason of the fact that with equal or anything like equal amperage the D. C. crater is very much larger and better formed than the A. C. crater.

Managers Read This.

A few weeks ago the editor received a very well written letter from a convict in a Federal penitentiary. He replied to that letter, and now comes the following which I commend to the careful consideration of managers. Any one who is willing to give this man the chance he asks for can either send the letter to me, or to No. 16888, P. O. Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. The following is the letter:

> Your of recent date, enclosing carbon copy of article for the projection department, together with words of encouragement, reached me last evening. To say that I was pleased and delight would but faintly express my feelings. To us who are behind the bars, where even sunlight reaches us but in fragments, words of good cheer and encouragement are about as rare as angels in Hades, therefore this line of thanks and appreciation. And now I am to be released seventy-one days from today. (About April 1st.—Ed.) As you rightly say, I will have but a five dollar bill when I go through the gates, and no prospects for the future. My "friends" were all of the fair weather variety. Even my wife divorced me, and unless I find something to do very soon, I will be destitute. My sentence was fifteen months, and, while the admission may startle you, I was guilty. But I have learned my lesson through experience—that greatest of teachers, and want now to live honorably for the future and to win back a legitimate place in the outside world. I am not a whiner, nor am I looking for sympathy in this, my predicament, because I well know I only got what was coming to me. I do, however, want a job—not a "position" or an "appointment," but just a plain every-day old-fashioned "job," carrying with it a living wage, to the end that I may once more fight my way back to self respect, and rehabilitate myself in the eyes of my fellow men. I am thirty-eight years of age; Irish, red hair (where there is any); sober (got drunk once and that was enough); use tobacco temperately; am a college graduate; can handle a typewriter, or fill in at the piano, and have studied projection and apparati for about ten years, six of which I have spent in actually operating various makes of projection machines. I am one of the few operators in this country who can handle a single motor driven machine, and keep the picture on the screen continuously, as long as the carbons last, without stopping to thread—a trick which I picked up in France some years ago while I was in the Foreign Legion and which I am willing to demonstrate at any time. I am a fair electrician, having wired several houses, and have worked with a multiplicity of different currents and voltages. If you can discover any opening whatsoever where I can make expenses, you will find that I will be honest, upright and reliable, and will in no way disgrace your friendship. In the files of the "Advertising for Exhibitors" Department for 1912 and 1913, you will find several examples of my advertising ability.

Now, gentlemen, I believe the man who writes a straightforward statement of this kind is worthy of consideration, and I hope that some of you will find a place for the brother—for he is a brother, though just now an erring one. However, remember this: be sure there is no glass in the walls of your own house before you heave stones at the other fellow. Any of you who are disposed to help a fellow man may send your letters through the Department, or to the address before given. I would suggest, however, that the position ought to be within a radius of say, two hundred miles of Leavenworth, unless you wish to forward railroad fare. I think up to two or even three hundred miles the brother can probably manage.

Conditions in Atlantic City.

From Atlantic City comes an interesting letter describing conditions in that city, accompanied by a copy of the "Labor Union Advocate," which contains two very excellent editorials demanding that the city officials take action and enforce the law concerning the operation of moving picture machines in that city. Quoting from one of the editorials: "The many fires which have occurred in operating rooms of certain theaters on Atlantic avenue recently, resulting in the destroying of hundreds of feet of film, proves, beyond any question of doubt, there must be something radically wrong. Either the city ordinance is being violated by the said theaters, or machines are being operated by inexperienced operators, or by boys. But whatever is the cause it is time the fault is remedied at once before the city is to be crowned with a fire that will cause many happy homes to become homes of sadness."

Well, we never, as yet, heard of a city being "crowned" exactly in that way. However, while perhaps the writer got a little bit mixed in his dates, still if it is true that there have been several fires it is proof positive that something is decidedly wrong, because with modern up-to-date projection apparatus, an experienced man never ought to do more than, at the very worst, burn a hole an inch or so square through the film.

The letter reads as follows:

> Here are two copies of the "Advocate" to articles in which I would call your attention. The "Advocate" has started the ball rolling for the operators, and it is going to keep rolling until conditions are better. With reference to fires, here is the dope I received from one operator: "I was compelled by the manager to run two machines, thread up, rewind, make necessary repairs in films, fade one picture into the next and set carbons, besides keeping a picture on the screen, and all for the huge salary of fifteen perfectly good dollars per week."
> I do not know what other work he had to do, but one night when I was on my way home I saw him taking in poster frames. This house has some kind of a home-made motor drive, and such things make it bad for operators who have been supplied with real motor drives, and who attend strictly to their projection and put the real goods on the screen. One fire happened just before the show started. It was reported that a cigarette was dropped into the film box by the rewind boy. The boy however denied that, and we also heard it was caused by (get this) "spontaneous combustion."
>
> Next I suppose we will learn that a German spy put a time-set fire bomb in the box; you never can tell! Note: They were not union operators. From all information I can gather the operator in charge of the house where the six reels were burned is still working, and that does not look as if the Department of Public Safety had interested itself in finding out the real cause. There have been cases where operators, both men and boys, have been caught running machines without a license, and in one case, it is alleged, a boy worked almost a month without a license, and then the city officials were notified by an operator before he was removed. The reason some of us kick about this practice is that we are soaked five dollars a year for a license, and we hold that when an unlicensed man is allowed to enter into competition with us it amounts to a swindle on the part of the city.
> I am glad that the new Handbook is ready, for my copy of the second edition is nearly worn out and I still have a lot to learn. I sincerely hope you sellum like hot cakes.

The letter referred to is one sent out by Frank Shinner, chief of the Electrical Bureau of Atlantic City, warning operators to come forward and be examined for a 1916 license.

Conditions in Atlantic City have never been of the best. They seldom are the best in cities largely given over to amusement. I don't know why, but it is a fact, nevertheless. Take the big summer or winter resorts, and you will almost invariably find conditions to be in sad need of improvement. Perhaps it is largely by reason of the fact that there is always a crowd of mechanics of all kinds eager to earn their bread amid the White Lights.

I thoroughly agree with the brother that if unlicensed men and boys are allowed to run machines in competition with men who must pay five dollars for a license, it is a swindle, and, assuming that to be the case, Atlantic City would stand convicted of petty larceny, or, perhaps, I might better say petty thievery, because that one who commits petty larceny at least takes a chance of going to jail, which the city does not take, therefore, the city, in a case of this kind, would occupy a position distinctly below that of the sneak thief—plain words, gentlemen, true, but it's facts nevertheless.

The same thing in somewhat lesser degree holds true if incompetent men are licensed, and thus allowed to enter into competition with competent operators who have proved their ability.

The daily papers, some time ago, gave the city government of Atlantic City a terrific ripping up the back. Well, if the charges made in this letter are well founded, then there ought to be a few more seams loosened up.

Local labor papers do a certain amount of good, but the thing which hampers their usefulness is, they don't, as a rule, reach the very people it is most essential to reach—the employer and the general public. The city officials don't pay so much attention to them, because they know they don't reach the public, and therefore cannot, in any large degree, mould public sentiment. I would suggest that the Atlantic City operators could long ago have gained considerable by and through the columns of the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, which does at least reach all managers and most of the operators, both union and non-union. The Projection Department won't side with you regardless of whether you are right or wrong, but concerning things in which you are right we are with you, gentlemen, to a hard boiled finish, remembering always, however, that sometimes an argument will do a whole lot more good than pure, unadulterated abuse. Of course, you may say, well what you say in this article is somewhat in the nature of abuse, but in which case I disagree with you. It is not abuse at all. Just a plain, straightforward statement of fact, which no official, however biased, can claim as being anything other than just that.

Structural Aberration of the Condenser Beam.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, California, presents the following:

> In the drawing point A is on the optical center of the lens, and is focused at position A^1. Spherical aberration prevents point A^1 from being definitely located, but by experiment it is found that the truest focal plane is located about at the position shown. At this position the definition of point A is sharpest, and is very nearly free from color. In the section of the two sections of the beam, the definition of point A is very blurred, and contains much color.
>
> Point B is located off the optical center, and is focused near position B^1. The focal plane and the other two sections are shown in similar relationship, as we described in connection with beam AA^1. The aberrations at B^1 are due to anastigmatism, and the cross-sections reveal some very odd shapes.
> Spherical aberration and anastigmatism are caused by practically the same action of the rays, except in the latter case it is impossible to get any kind of a sharp image of the point B, and therefore anastigmatism is really the worst defect. The practical effect of both the aberrations described, is to prevent true focal conditions at the aperture, with consequent loss of definition on the screen, and some way should be devised for getting rid of these defects.
> All rays of light come to a true focus at Infinity. Infinity is the sorrce of true light, and consequently all true light must be in the form of true focus. The idea of parallel rays of light is merely an abstraction, and does not exist in the concrete. Single and pencilled rays of light, which is the condition that aberrated rays tend to approach, all depart from the idea of true focus, and consequently lose their power of illumination.

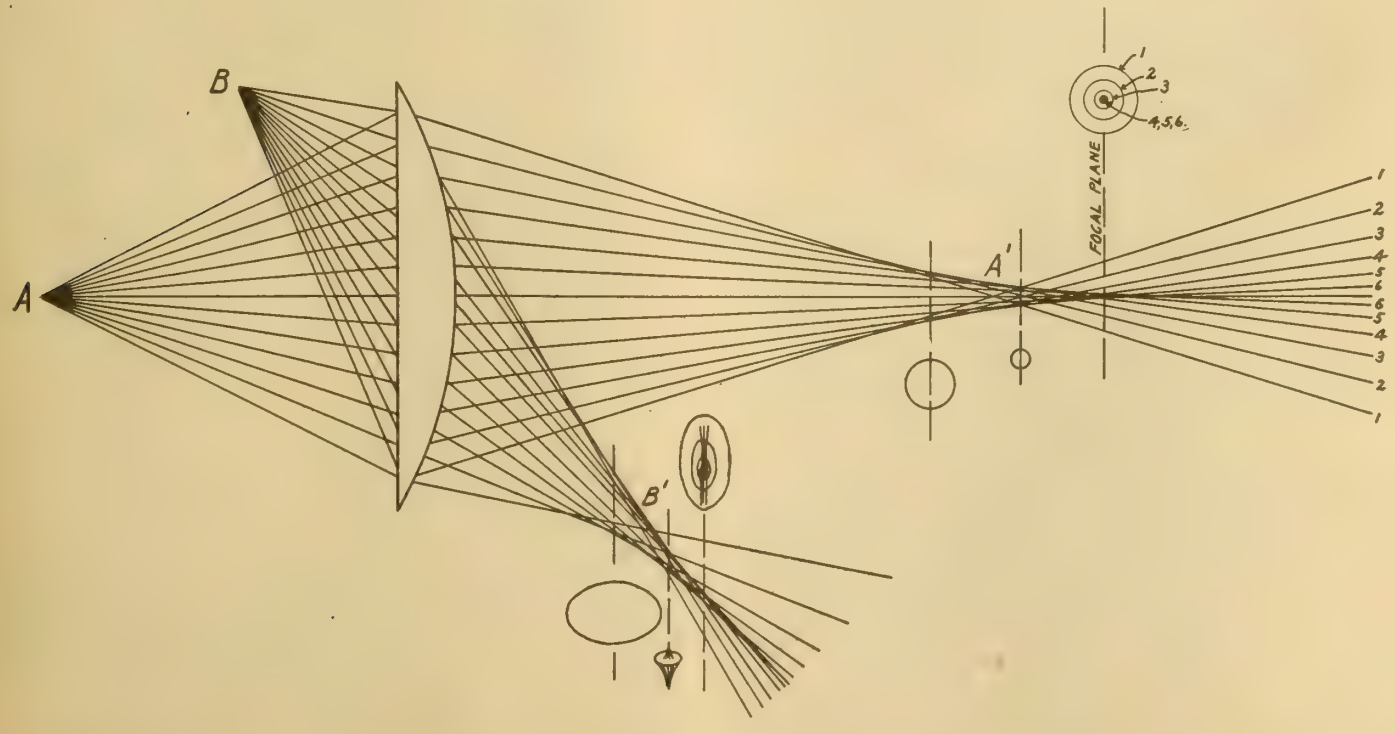
In considering this article it will, of course, be understood that BB^1 is a highly abnormal condition, but nevertheless the condition represented is present in some degree the instant any part of the light source extends beyond the optical axis of the lens system, therefore, the larger the crater the greater the fault will of necessity be. We would recommend the drawings and articles of Brother Martin to the very serious consideration and study of all operators, and would suggest that any of you who think he is in error on any point are entirely at liberty to set forth your own views and criticisms. Personally, I have not the time at present to give this matter the extended study necessary to intelligently criticise.

Visiting the South.

Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla., sends in replies to questions 119 and 120, and says:

> I do hope you will some day be able to visit the South, particularly Tampa. But if you ever do come be sure and let us know in advance, because we will give you the time of your young and unsophisticated life.

Well, Brother Nosti, I don't know about a southern trip. I expect to go-devil down to Washington some time in the spring, and expect to go up to Canada, visiting Montreal and Quebec, and then on up the St. Lawrence, about four hundred miles, coming back by Maine, and that, taken in conjunction with my trip west will be about all, I think, for this year. However, it would afford me much pleasure to visit the south. I have been all through your beautiful State, up the Oklawaha (I guess that is spelled right) river, have gazed into the depths of Silver Springs, been pretty much all over Tampa, visited Tallehassee, Miami and its orchards of huge grape fruit, have sailed up the Lagoon in Palm Beach, delved into the mysteries of the old fort in St. Augustine, rode out to the Ostrich Farm in Jacksonville. However, I would like to do it all over again, and perhaps will some day, too. And if I do you can gamble your last summer's necktie that I will let you boys know when I am coming, and will arrange to spend at least one or two days with you.



beam at this point there is a sort of flare, or halo of light formed by rays 1, 2, and 3, which have no function in forming the image of point A at the focal plane shown. At the other

"A Kink."

Bert Carlson, Minneapolis, Minnesota, says:

Some time ago I promised to send in some ideas which I have tried and found to be practical. Well here is the first one. When threading the take-up of a loop setter-equipped Power's six, it is necessary, after inserting the reel, to turn it backwards until it catches, and then thread the right size loop and wind the film on the reel, and then turn the reel back again until it catches, and then hold on the sprocket, and again take up the slack. When working on a single machine this is too much monkey business; and as a result most operators dismantle the loop-setter and pin the gear. The following kink obviates all this trouble.

Drill and tap a hole for pin B about ¾ inch back from pin A; make pin B a trifle shorter than pin A and with its end filed so that it slants away from pin A. When the pin that travels with the gear strikes B it slips back and falls between the two pins, so that it is prevented from going in either direction. It is easy to make and works mighty slick. I hope Mr. Power adopts some such thing as this, and he is entirely at liberty to use my idea.

All of which is most respectfully referred to the Nicholas Power Company for attention. If the trouble such as Friend Carlson describes exists, and it can be remedied in as simple a way as this, I guess it is up to the Power Company, and if it is you can bet they will get busy. I have always found that company, and for that matter most of the other machine manufacturers, ready to adopt anything which seemed to be really desirable and practical.

Unnecessarily Alarmed.

C. F. Hancock, Stuart, Fla., writes:

We are using a 5 K.W. 125 volt, 40 ampere D. C. Bissell generator, which is supplying our Power's SixA machine, and about thirty-five, 40 c.p. mazda lights. For power we use a 10 h.p. Hagan gasoline engine with a 40-inch pulley on engine, and an 8-inch pulley on the generator. The engine running about 300 R.P.M., turns the generator about 1,500. I do not believe we are getting as good light as the above outfit should produce, yet we are helpless, apparently, to improve the condition. Frequently the amperage will climb up dangerously near 45, whereas we ought not to be using over 40, which is the rated amperage of the generator. If we were getting what we really require we could get along splendidly with 110 volts and 40 amperes. We don't seem to be able to locate the trouble in the carbons, which are ⅝-inch cored above and solid (or hard) below. Can you suggest a remedy? We also have, though not in use, a 75 ampere D.C., 120 volt "Bullock" generator made by the Electric Manufacturing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, which is supposed to run 1,550 R.P.M. Would the Hagan engine, as above described, refuse to handle this generator, and would it give as a better service than we are now getting?

Gentlemen, you evidently do not understand matters of this kind very well. In the first place so far as the 45 ampere proposition be concerned you are unnecessarily alarmed. There should be no danger to the generator even though the output were 50, and no danger to it for a short time, say as long as a minute, even at 75 or 80 amperes, because a generator, if properly constructed, should be able to carry 100 per cent overload for a brief period, but for a brief period only. A 40-ampere generator should, however, carry 5 amperes overload without any trouble whatever, and carry it indefinitely. The first indication of danger you would have from overload would either be an undue rise in the temperature of the machine, or a heavy sparking at the brushes, or both—probably both. The generator you have, however, is not suited to your work. I cannot take up space in the department explaining that which has been explained many times. However, the higher the voltage, above 70, the greater the unnecessary waste in resistance. If you were running several hours a day it would probably pay you in the long run to try and get rid of your 125-volt generator, and install in its place a 70-volt one, getting 70-volt lamps, fan motors, etc., of course, instead of your present 125-volt ones. Your engine would pull the 75-ampere Bullock generator all right up to an output of almost 70 amperes, because 70×110=7700 watts, which is approximately 10 h.p. It would be about a standoff using the Bullock or your present generator, because the Bullock would not be quite as sufficient as the other one, since a generator operates at highest point of efficiency at full load, and its voltage is but little less, assuming that both machines are in equally good condition and equally efficient, aside from the item of voltage. As to the light, why you ought to get a very good light with 40 amperes, though I would suggest the use of ¾-inch scored above instead of ⅝, and ⅝-inch cored or solid below. You say you are using solid (or hard) below. What do you mean by that? If you are using hard carbons, such as are used in street arc lighting, then it is no wonder you don't get good results. If you use solid carbons you must have projection, not ordinary street lamp carbons.

I would suggest that you procure a copy of the new Handbook just as soon as it is out, and study up on the matter of voltage and resistance, because you are pretty weak on those points.

Be very sure that all your electrical connections are tight; that the inside of your carbon clamps are clean; that your lamp, as a whole, has the proper angle, and that your carbons are set just as they ought to be. A little difference in the set of carbons will make a lot of difference in your light.

Your remark about the voltage climbing up sometimes seems to indicate unsteadiness of speed in your engine, and that is something that ought not to be. Better examine into the performance of the engine governor, be sure that the ignition is in good order, and that the combustion chamber is not heavily carbonized. Possibly your lens system is wasting light. See Table No. 2, October 6, 1915, or New Handbook.

Some Class.

F. E. Orcutt, Conneaut, Ohio, send in a letter on just about the classiest operator's stationery I have ever looked at. Really his stationery and cards would do credit to the president of a railway system. He says:

Commenting on Friend Middlecamp's, Allentown, Pa., query as to why producers don't start sending out films on 2,000-foot reels, why, if he means 1,000 feet on 2,000-foot reels (14-inch), that's the proper trick, providing the hubs are made a little larger than now used, although it would be a large expense to the exchanges in reels and shipping cases. Many times I have opened a case and found a 10-inch reel more than full, with the band off and the film in a mess. But, if he means 2,000 feet on 14-inch reels, well, that's something else again. Personally, I have my doubts about the film lasting longer with the present-day take-ups put out on projectors. It is my opinion that the take-up friction on most of the present projectors is not flexible enough to carry 2,000 feet without a good bit of strain on the first two or three hundred feet. I find the most satisfactory take-up belt, for my Powers, when using 14-inch reels, to be a ½ inch round spring belt, and do not be timid about getting a little oil on it, as the oil prolongs its life and reduces friction. The belt will last long after the price is forgotten. I inspected a very neat arrangement for equalizing the tension on the film about three years ago in Erie, Pa. The machine was a Power's Six. The lower magazine rested on coil springs and was free from the base board; spring and magazine were held in place by a frame work of band iron. The springs were adjusted so that on the starting of the film the belt was just tight enough to wind the film up snug, but without any strain. As the weight of the film became more, the magazine settled and tightened the belt. If I remember rightly the magazine and reels were 15 inches, and home made. Brother Bill Sawdey was responsible for it. After considerable experimenting I stopped my troubles with premo asphaltum, which can be secured at any hardware store for about twenty cents per pint. Roll a small paper tube; stop up one end with a cork; fill tube with asphaltum, set aside until hardened, then use as a dressing on the friction pulley driving disc. It also works fine on the friction drive on the Metz car. The Table in October 16th issue is sure one fine thing, but we have one lens that does not go far enough, same being 1⅝ inches in diameter with a 4-inch back focus. We are using two 7½ condensers. I'll say "there is something wrong that is not right." Am enclosing one of my business cards for you to laugh at. "It pays to advertise" is the only excuse I have to offer for it.

No, Brother Orcutt, in a just-received post card Friend Middlecamp says: "What I mean is that producers who put out two-reel subjects ought to put them on a 2,000-foot reel. This would not work at all on single reel stuff, but on multiple reel features it would." So you see, whereas Middlecamp does not mean what you mean, still his query has brought out your views, which are of distinct value in several ways. And now let us hear from some more of you. This, gentlemen, is an important point, and should be fully discussed. As to take-ups, there unquestionably is very decided room for improvement, even in some of the present model projectors, but I am told the large-diameter Power's Six B and the Edison Superfriction work very well. The Baird take-up operates on the principle you have described.

We Have Readers.

The Precision Machine Company, New York City, by its sales manager, L. W. Atwater, writes as follows:

> It may interest you to know that, due to the short article you published in the projection department, October 16th issue, with reference to the distribution by us of souvenir pocket-books to operators, we have already received 386 requests which specifically mentioned having seen the article in the department, and these requests came from practically every State in the United States as well as from foreign countries. There were hundreds of other requests which did not mention having seen the notice in the department. We merely give you the above information to show the great interest operators manifest in the projection department.

Comment on our part would seem unnecessary. We thank the Precision Machine Company, however, for its kindness in sending this unsolicited but the none the less welcome testimony. Of course, we individually and personally knew it all the time but—business of swelling up like a toy balloon.

High Class Operator.

From F. J. Wallace, Lodi, Cal., comes a letter which gives Mr. Allie Baron, a moving picture operator of that city, very high praise.

We are, of course, always glad to hear of high class operators, particularly where the information comes from a second party, and may therefore be considered as unbiased. Our compliments to Friend Baron. We sincerely trust that his efforts will meet with adequate reward.

Age Limit.

St. John, New Brunswick, has the following to say on the age limit of operators:

> Concerning the recent article regarding the age of the operator in which you invited comment. I am with you in this. There are many sides to the question and I would submit that it is only right that a few must necessarily suffer for the benefit of the many. I am of the opinion that the age limit of the operator should be set at twenty-one, man's estate, as those below that age are as a rule very readily susceptible of having attention drawn from their work, as well as failing to fully realize their responsibility. In time of trouble a greater percentage of very young men will become excited and thus be found wanting. It is an old proverb: never send a boy on a man's errand, and in this case I believe the saying is applicable. Of course, there are exceptions. It must be admitted that a young man of nineteen or twenty sometimes has an "old head on his shoulders" and will probably act, in time of trouble, equally as well as an older person, but we cannot base the generality on the exception. It is, as you say, rather hard on those who have been at the work for several years, but when you dig down into the underlying motive, I think it will be found that such young men have been employed largely through the manager's desire to have the work performed cheaply, and without considering what is due the public. It is generally the rule that responsible societies set the entrance age at twenty-one, it being conceded that it is not well to confer membership at a lower age, by reason of the liability to unguarded speech; also I know it to be a fact that some years ago the railway commissioners compelled railways to suspend from service all locomotive engineers and firemen who had not attained the age of twenty-one, and this necessarily set back a considerable number of men who had studied and passed various examinations, consisting of "Rules of the Road," "The Engine, Its Mechanical Side, Repairs and Upkeep," "Air Brake; Its Rules, Repairs and Upkeep," "Steam Heating," "Ventilating," "Lighting," "Water Raising Systems," "Air Train Signal," "Safety Appliances," "Transportation of Exposives," as well as having to pass the "Eyesight," "Hearing," and "Color Sense" tests. This was felt at the time to be a very heavy hardship, but a number of the men so set back have told me since that they are in accord with the principle, (They are probably past twenty-one now.—Ed.) and I have heard officers of their organizations state that the ruling was undoubtedly to the benefit of all concerned. Further, it is now compulsory that men taking the position of locomotive engineer or fireman undergo a physical test by a physician as to their physical fitness and general health. Now, if railways cannot employ firemen and engineers under twenty-one, I do not see that managers of moving picture theaters should be allowed to either, as most certainly the work of an operator of moving picture apparatus is equally as hazardous to the public as is that of the locomotive fireman, and under certain conditions and circumstances the safety, if not the lives of a huge audience may be entirely in their hands; also, I believe that all unions ought to make it a cast-iron rule to admit no one but men of mature age, that age being at least twenty-one. (Not a practical thing for a union to do—Ed.) The moving picture organization could, like the Locomotive Engineers and Firemen's Brotherhoods, agree that their men under twenty-one, should be set back until the desired age is reached, and then resume their old standing, and while, as before said, this would mean a hardship to a few, it would show that they realized the responsibility, and the desire to do everything possible to put their class of work in none but competent hands.

The brother puts up a corking good argument. I would like to hear from others, as this is a matter of very large importance affecting thousands of young men. Let us have your opinion, gentlemen. I might say that the brother's remarks as to the safety of an audience being entirely in the hands of the operator under certain conditions is absolutely correct, and it reaches further than appears at first glance. The careful, competent operator who realizes his responsibility will not only be prepared to act promptly, coolly and without error in time of danger (when an error may mean the difference between life and death to some of those out in front), but he will insist that his operating room be so equipped that he can safe-guard the audience from panic, and this means that he must not only have the stamina to demand, if necessary, the proper equipment, but it also means that he must have accurate knowledge of exactly what equipment is necessary to safety.

Speer Carbons.

F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas, forwards answers to questions 119 and 120, and says:

> This is my first offense on the questions, by reason of the fact that I was ashamed to show my ignorance. I note you want reports on Speer carbons. We bought two hundred of them which they said were shipped out from the new factory erected solely for the manufacture of projection carbons. Well the minute I struck an arc (using A. C.) I felt there was something different. The light seemed brighter and of a greenish hue. It certainly makes the picture stand out. At first I had some trouble in getting them to burn just right, but after putting a half dozen on top of the lamphouse they burned better. Now all this may be purely imagination, but my opinion is that the Speer is good.

As to "showing your ignorance," Brother Bell, why good Lord man I expose mine several times each week, and don't mind it a bit. Reports on the Speer carbon have, up to date, been almost invariably good. Probably the reason they burned better after being placed on the lamphouse is because they were damp, and dampness in carbons does not make for good results on the screen.

Loop Setter Trouble.

Lloyd Musselman, Franklin, Indiana, writes:

> Am operating a Power's Six A and the automatic loop setter does not act as I think it should. When the machine loses its lower loop, the loop setter does not take it up until I lift it up with my finger. How may I adjust it to remedy the fault?

I don't understand how this may be, my brother, if you are threading the machine properly. The film should pass under the roller of the loop setter, and if it does so I don't see any reason in the world why you should have to raise it with your finger, because when the loop is lost it would either raise that roller up or pull the film apart. However this is possible: sometimes the loop setter may reset the loop, but reset it too short, in which case the loop setter will jump up or down and quiver, but not far enough to set the loop. It is then necessary to raise the roller, which disengages the lower sprocket and allow it to rest during one revolution of the lower sprocket which will reform the lower loop. It is possible that if the clutch has a little dirt on it the engaging and disengaging of the lower sprocket might not be properly accomplished, in which case it will be necessary for the operator to trip the loop setter with his finger. The remedy, of course, would be to clean out the dirt. I think this is all I can say on this particular subject.

Age of Eighteen.

Connecticut asks:

> Can you tell me whether there are any other states besides Massachusetts where I can secure an operator's license at the age of eighteen, and do any of these states require an apprenticeship before one can secure a license? I don't wish to serve an apprenticeship because I have already served one and a half years here in Connecticut. During that time I have assembled a Power's head, gained a fair knowledge of electricity, learned the setting of carbons, and, as a whole, understand fairly well the operation of a moving picture machine.

I don't know, brother. It would be something of a job to hunt up that particular piece of information (age limit) by going through a multitude of license laws. However I think all of them provide that where you can produce evidence that you have already served an apprenticeship equal to the local requirement, that point will be waived.

Toning Motion Picture Films.

Based on the Methods Worked Out by the Eastman Kodak Research Laboratories.

Many practical methods have been worked out from time to time for the toning of lantern slides and photographic papers, but when these are applied to the toning of motion picture film, in most cases the toned film obtained, although apparently satisfactory when viewed in the hand, appears substantially black on projection. Generally speaking, the color of the image as seen in the hand is no criterion whatever of its appearance on the screen, so that in judging any particular tone it is necessary to view the projected image.

The importance of producing toned images of the maximum degree of transparency is therefore at once apparent, and the excellence of any formula may be estimated by its capacity for producing a transparent image which shall still retain the necessary vigor and snap on projection.

While other methods have been suggested for producing a colored image, the method almost universally employed is to replace the silver by a colored metallic compound—usually a ferro-cyanide of a metal, of which,

Iron (ferric) ferrocyanide	is	blue
Copper	"	red
Uranium	"	reddish brown
Vanadium	"	greenish yellow
Silver Sulphide	"	warm brown.

It is the object in toning to replace the metallic silver composing the image by one of the above compounds or by a mixture of the same, whereby intermediate tones are obtained. This toning may be effected either by a two-solution process or by a single-solution process.

The two-solution process consists of first converting the silver image into silver ferrocyanide by means of a suitable bleaching bath, thoroughly washing and acting upon the ferrocyanide image with a metallic salt, usually in presence of an acid, whereby the metallic ferrocyanide is produced by double decomposition. The reaction, however, is never complete, so that the image is mixed with undecomposed silver ferrocyanide which tends to make the image opaque, but at the same time it tends to add "body" to the latter. Providing allowance is made in the original positive for this intensification, good tones are obtained.

Single-solution process. Instead of the two separate baths used above, a single solution may be employed consisting usually of the metallic ferricyanide dissolved in a suitable solvent (say an alkali salt of citric, tartaric, or oxalic acids) in presence of an acid and certain other salts.

On immersion of the positive film in this solution the silver image is converted to silver ferrocyanide, whilst the colored ferrocyanide is formed simultaneously and in situ.

In either of the above cases in view of the fact that the metallic ferrocyanide is deposited in a colloidal condition in presence of the gelatine of the film, the state of division and therefore the nature of the tone is largely affected by the presence of certain salts, changes of temperature, concentration of the baths and other factors which must be maintained constant in order that uniform results may be obtained. With such single baths it is possible to secure tones which are unobtainable by a two-solution process, though as such single solutions are sensitive to light and rapidly attack foreign metals, which may be present in shape of faucets, etc., such solutions are comparatively unstable and require care in their use.

Two-solution methods are reliable, economical, and are not so prone to influence by disturbing factors. The total time required for toning, however, is invariably double that taken up by a single-solution process, so that from an economic standpoint two-solution methods are especially recommended for the occasinal worker who tones at infrequent intervals.

In the above case if the toned image be treated with acid hypo to remove the opaque silver ferrocyanide, an almost pure colored image remains. The intensity of the toned image is, however, considerably diminished, and therefore due allowance must be made in choosing the positive previous to toning in order that the final image shall be of the correct density for projection.

Since most toning processes either intensify or reduce the original image, it is most important to commence toning with positive film of the correct density, so as to obtain uniform results.

Any good metol-hydrochinon formula will produce good tones, although a straight Hydrochinon developer will produce excellent tones in all cases except with certain Vanadium and Iron formulas for green tones. A Metol-hydrochinon developer is essential in these cases in order that the rich olive-green color may be obtained, and the proportion of Metol in the developer should be about twice the usual quantity.

In toning work it is necessary that developed film should be entirely free from fog, since a thin veil becomes intensified in most of the toning processes. Fog may be caused by:

(a) Oxidisation of the developer, noticeable by the brown coloration produced after continued use. The remedy is obvious. Do not use developer to exhaustion or when badly oxidized.

(b) Carelessness in compounding the developer. The usual mistake consists in adding the carbonate to the Metol and Hydrochinon without previously adding some sulphite in order to prevent oxidation. It is not advisable, however, to add the whole of the sulphite to the Metol and Hydrochinon in the first place, otherwise the Metol may precipitate.

(c) The presence of metals such as copper, brass and tin, the fumes from sodium sulphide, etc., in the developing baths are to be strictly avoided. A salt of copper if present only to the extent of one part in 10,000 will produce fog immediately on cine positive film.

It is advisable that all metallic parts such as pins on developing racks, etc., should be enamelled, replaced with hard rubber or silver plated, in order to eliminate any source of danger.

Exposure and development are of great importance. In such a case as sulphide or copper toning, the best results can only be obtained by so adjusting the exposure that the correct density is obtained on full development.

Fixing should be complete and, if possible, carried out in two consecutive baths followed by thorough washing, otherwise uneven coloring will result.

The toned deposits obtained by the processes recommended are as transparent as is consistent with pluckiness, and only those formulae have been recommended which by virtue of their rapidity of action, long life, and cheapness are capable of being employed commercially.

Permanency of the tone produced in every case depends largely on the thoroughness and care exercised during the various chemical operations.

The silver sulphide image may be considered permanent, and likewise the blue tones in those cases where the film is finally fixed after toning. In the other cases, however, where more or less silver ferrocyanide still remains in the toned image, the film is not absolutely permanent (blue and green tones being affected by excessive heat), though in no case, where instructions are carefully followed, will the toned image deteriorate during the active life of the film. Moreover, so far as can be ascertained, the wear and tear of film which has been toned by the methods recommended is in no way impaired, though by virtue of the hardening action of most of the toning baths on the gelatine it is advisable, especially during the winter months, to immerse the film for three or four minutes in the usual 3 per cent. glycerine bath after toning.

In case film has to be stored for long periods of time it is inadvisable to tone the same nor is it advisable to tone valuable film unless duplicates of the same are available.

The life of the toning bath has been carefully investigated in each case, the term "life" being considered as the total length of film capable of being toned by a given volume of fresh solution when toning is conducted continuously and without interruption.

In all cases it is false economy to exhaust a toning bath to the limit and thereby obtain inferior tones, since the cost of the chemicals employed is insignificant compared with the value of the film being treated, being about one cent per twenty-five feet of film toned. (This calculation was made when chemicals were not so high as at present.)

Since the figures given represent the capacity of the bath for toning under the best conditions, they only apply providing the baths are kept covered as far as possible when not in use, so far as to exclude light, and providing no foreign metallic surface, however small, is allowed to come into contact with the solution.

As mentioned above, single solution baths are not intended for use at very infrequent intervals. In such cases two-solution methods should as far as possible be employed, although it has only been possible to recommend the latter for the production of green and blue-green tones.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Musical Settings for "The Traffic Cop."

Released April 8 by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Suggestions Prepared by S. M. Berg.

By Special Arrangements With G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of Mutual Films the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "The Traffic Cop" were prepared by Mr. Berg, who is associated with the Photoplay Department of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance, 29¾ T, "Weeks pass," is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 24¾ D, "Bell," is a description of action.

Casey, the cop, by daring horsemanship, rescues the financier's niece and finds that he knows her from childhood days. She invites him to call and their acquaintance ripens. The niece overhears her uncle plan to have her cop's brother falsely accused of embezzlement, and after many adventures the picture closes with the future realization of the cop and his sweetheart's dreams.

The whole character of this picture is bright, with many scenes of hurries, agitatos, etc. Note particularly: Bell, 24¾; police whistle at 28 and 56¼.

The Theme selected is "A Little Song" (Erdody).

Time schedule: Five reels (4,400 feet), 66 minutes.

Time.		Sub-titles or Descriptive Cues.	Music.
0	D	Opening.	A Little Song—Erdody. (Andante.) (Theme.)
2	T	At the corner of Lafayette—	Matinee Idol—Eysler. (Non allegro.)
6	T	"Take No. 10 detail in the park."
7	D	In the park.	Hurry No. 1.
8	D	When cop stops horse.	Repeat: A Little Song. (Theme.)
10¼	T	"Come and see me."	A Garden Dance—Vargas. (Allegro moderato.)
12	T	"How dare you laugh—"
14	D	When Casey calls on the girl.	Repeat: A Little Song. (Theme.)
15¼	T	"I am proud to be on the service." (Scene of police marching.)	Clavelitos—Valverde. (Marica allegro 6/8.)
19	T	"No reckless driving allowed."
20	T	"We give a regular course—"	Pulcinello—Aletter. (Allegretto.)
22	T	The following afternoon.
24	T	"Get into that poolroom."	Galop No. 1.
24¾	D	Bell.
25	T	"We are going to raid."	Hurry No. 2.
26¾	D	When the police load men in wagon.	Hurry No. 3.
28	D	Police whistle.
29	T	"I'll let your brother bring you—"
29¾	T	Weeks pass.	Auf Wiedersehn—Remberg. (Moderato.)
33	T	"I think you could prove—"
34¾	T	"Arrest Casey, my paying teller."	In Poppyland—Albers. (Moderato.)
35¾	T	"I know I am innocent—"
37	D	When girl sees policemen below.	Allegro No. 1.
39½	D	When cops enter room.	Allegro No. 2.
40½	D	When police arrest book agent.
41¾	T	"There's a conspiracy—"	Little Serenade—Grunfeld. (Allegretto.)
44	D	When banker and chief enter room.
46½	T	"Your rascally brother is hidden."	Berceuse—Karganoff. (Lento.)
48	T	"Go to that policeman's apartment."
49	D	When chauffeur enters room.	Agitato No. 2.
51	D	When policeman drives off with car.	Agitato No. 1.
52	T	"I charge them with resisting—"
5'¾	T	"That paying teller escaped"	Repeat: A Little Song. (Theme.)
54	T	"Your fortune? Why that was wiped out long ago."
55	T	That evening.	Marche Joyeuse—Chabrier. (March giocoso.)
56¼	D	Police whistle.
58	T	Next day, the cop on leave of absence—	Furioso No. 2.
60½	D	When the cop and his prisoner land on island.	Intermezzo—Arensky. (Presto.)
64¾	T	"I will pay you $5,000—"
65½	T	"There's a prize goes with the diary—"	Repeat: A Little Song. (Theme.)
66	T	The end.

NOTE—For the convenience of readers of the Moving Picture World a price list of the numbers suggested in the above cue-sheet is to be found in G. Schirmer's advertisement on page 714.

The Intermezzo and Its Use.

By S. M. Berg.

For those musicians who give some thought not only to the interpretation of music, but who desire to learn something of the foundation upon which our modern theories are based, it is interesting to seek where and how words were derived and with the changing of custom and times how new interpretations were gradually created until the original thought has almost been lost.

At the service of the musician is what is known as the intermezzo (Italian). Intermezzi were originally short musical entr'acts in the Italian tragedies of a very simple description and quite independent of each other. We learned that towards the end of the sixteenth century they assumed larger proportions and finally were treated as separate parts of a whole musical drama, of a less serious cast than the principal work which they were intended to embellish. Having reached this stage they merely had to be detached from the larger work to form a self existent operetta and instrumental music today sometimes takes the place of the old intermezzi in modern dramas. It is also technically applied to many short movements connecting the main division of a symphony or rather extended work; sometimes to entire long movements or even to independent compositions. Intermezzos in the Suite are several dances (movements) that do not form one of its regular parts, but are occasionally introduced for variety's sake.

With the progress of time intermezzos became so varied in character that they encroached on to the character of Serenade (German, Standchen; French, serenade; Italian, serenta) which is defined as an "evening song," specifically, such a song sung by a lover before his lady's window, or an instrumental solo imitating it in style. From these was evolved the Serenata (French and Italian ditto; German, serenade) which is a species of dramatic cantata greatly in vogue during the eighteenth century or an instrumental composition, midway between the Suite and Symphony, but freer in form than either, consisting of five, six or more movements for very various combinations of instruments, and in chamber-music style. The earlier serenatas were invariably concerted pieces: they were also called Cassations and Divertimenti.

Such is the original musical interpretation and now to what service it is used for the film. In synchronizing music for the motion picture one of the greatest difficulties experienced is to find what is known as pleasing music for neutral scenes. In the preparation of a score I have always advocated that it is the dramatic situations which should be enhanced by appropriate music, but in the neutral scenes care should be taken in selecting music which will be pleasing to the listening audience. Those who attempt to fit every slight action with a musical setting simply bore their audience with sounds that are disjointed and ear-racking. It can be stated without fear of contradiction that every composer has always named one of his compositions "intermezzo" in its newer meaning and it is from this inexhaustible supply of material that musical interpretation of motion pictures depends.

Music for the motion picture is possibly the most difficult task which the orchestra director has ever experienced. In a Denver paper there appeared a very interesting article by Mr. Jack Rich who tells us that perhaps after all motion pictures are more closely related to the opera than to the speaking stage. At any rate, such conclusions follow from the experiences of exhibitors and leaders of orchestras in the photoplay houses. In the first place it has been found that the canned drama without music is tiresome and inadequate as an entertainment and in the second place it has been demonstrated that the musical program must be arranged to fit the picture.

There are every type of musical adaptions. First there is the popular type that appeals to the audience's sense of humor. For example, the orchestra plays "The Ocean Roll" during the storm scene or "Please Don't Take Me Home" when the officer of the law takes the drunk in charge during the wee sma' hours. But the really difficult kind is that which essays to convey through music the emotions as well as the action that is taking place on the screen. Altogether the task of the man who arranges musical programs is almost as difficult as that of the operatic composer. The average follower of the photoplay does not appreciate this tremendous labor. The chances are they do not realize that the music has been specially adapted to the picture and perhaps they do not even enthuse over the music, though this is the greatest tribute that can be paid to the musicians for it is only when the music is in harmony with the film that it is truly unnoticed in the total emotional effect of play and accompaniment. To adapt competently requires a tremendous range of musical knowledge not only of modern day compositions, but historical as well. The music must be arranged with reference to its various peculiarities. It is a labor of the blood-sweating variety and one that is least appreciated than any branch of the motion picture industry.

Course of Film Empire Sways to South

So Declares Treasurer Joseph W. Engel of Metro Following Visit to Florida—Pictures Gaining in Havana.

MOTION PICTURE production is headed east, and the big feature producers will incline more and more to the Atlantic seaboard as against California, is the declaration of Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of the Metro Pictures Corporation, who has just returned from a tour of the Southern states and a flying trip to Cuba.

"The business enterprise of the South, particularly in Florida, has brought about an especially desirable condition of affairs from a motion picture production standpoint, and I am willing to hazard a good guess that the big features which cannot be made in the North during the winter months will, in a majority of cases, before very long be produced in Florida, especially in Jacksonville," said Mr. Engel, at the Metro offices. "During a three weeks' trip, which combined business and pleasure, I had an opportunity to see Jacksonville at close range and to note its advantages over California as a production center.

"To begin with, the people of Jacksonville, led by such men as Telfair Stockton, W. R. Carter and J. J. Logan, were enterprising enough to send a committee, appointed by the Mayor, to New York, to tell of Jacksonville's possibilities to the motion picture concerns here. And they did not stop there. They secured from local merchants and other business people, including the hotels and transportation companies, full co-operation, so that our companies which have gone down there have received the best of everything, and have found, in addition to an ideal climate, wonderful scenery, plenty of metropolitan locations and a really sympathetic and helpful co-operation from every element of the social and business life of Jacksonville.

"When we consider that this is only a night and a day from New York by train, and an easy journey by boat, we know that we have near the great marketing center for pictures the most satisfactory picture-making proposition that I have ever seen. It stands to reason, therefore, that with these added attractions, and the co-operation that the Coast has never given the picture men, that California being farther away is far less desirable from every point of view.

"Mr. Logan, who is connected with the United States Trust Company, the Florida National Bank, and other important local industries, and George Mason, one of the big hotel men of the South, have gone out of their way on numerous occasions to see to it that the motion picture men had a square deal—and more than a square deal, because, instead of being treated as outsiders, our people have been given more consideration than the local residents. We have found no instances of raised prices, and, in fact, the contrary was the case.

"As far as I am concerned I believe that all the picture-makers in the East will take so kindly to Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Atlantic Beach that next winter will see most of the big companies making pictures there rather than in California."

Mr. Engel, in speaking of motion picture theater conditions in the South, said, "I found everywhere a motion picture awakening, with splendid new theaters going up and popular enthusiasm over pictures of the better class. The theaters in the South today compare favorably with the very best in the country, and the business is far in advance of what it was six months ago."

Mr. Engel found conditions in Cuba radically changed, in that stag pictures have been put out of business by the Havana newspapers. "Within thirty days," said Mr. Engel, "several representatives of capital are coming to New York to get the latest ideas in modern picture houses, as Havana is to have several new big picture theaters. Heretofore the better-to-do have stayed away from picture houses, but they recently have shown such an interest that one theater with a capacity of three thousand, and corresponding in character to the Strand here in New York, is to be erected. Only high-class pictures will be shown, and there is every indication that the venture will be attended with great success."

Anna Lehr New Figure in Triangle

THE April releases of the Triangle introduce a new leading woman to film theatergoers, one whose debut has already convinced her discovered, Thomas H. Ince, that a long term contract would just fit her case. Anna Lehr came from Austria, which perhaps accounts for her successful portrayal of Berna, the Russian girl, in "Civilization's Child," with William H. Thompson, the veteran character actor and Scotch uncle of "Peggy."

Anna Lehr.

Miss Lehr has played on both sides of the water in stage productions but when she entered the picture field her progress was slow until Ince recognized her ability. He looked upon her as a first class "register," with her melting gray eyes, loops of blonde hair and tremulous mouth. When the right part came along he gave it to her and she fairly holds her own with Thompson, Jack Standing, Dorothy Dayton, J. Barney Sherry and the other members of the cast of "Civilization's Child." Her next appearance on the Triangle screen will be with young "Buster" Collier in "The Bugle Call."

"I was born in Austria, came to America when a child and in my stage career have supported many leading actors," said Miss Lehr to a recent embryo biographer. "But of what consequence is all that? The thing that counts is my work now. Reputation's only value, as I see it, is in obtaining engagements from producers. I got my engagement without the reputation, which I now hope to make."

WARDE NOW WITH THANHOUSER.

Since the release of "Silas Marner" on the Mutual program the star of the production has been the subject of an avalanche of correspondence between New Rochelle and fandom. So successful is the eminent tragedian's film debut that Edwin Thanhouser has succeeded in getting Frederick Warde's signature to a long term contract. This happened last week, right after the actor had returned from a lecture tour. The contract means that Mr. Warde will be seen in eight great classic productions every year, and it is expected that his plays will be selected for screen adaptation from the repertoire of material in which he has been seen. This brings to the screen permanently the last of the old school of Booth and Barrett and McCullough.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS THE IRREPRESSIBLE.

Douglas Fairbanks, who after fourteen years of legitimate stage work took to the screen as a duck takes to water, has begun work on his sixth Triangle picture at the Fine Arts studios. This record stamps Fairbanks as one of the fastest workers in the films. Beginning with "The Lamb," released November 7, he has completed in rapid succession "Double Trouble," "His Picture in the Papers," "The Habit of Happiness" and "The Good Bad Man." At the same time he has crossed the continent twice. This is believed to be a record for production

Roasting Censorship

Big Public Gathering in Pittsburgh, Pa., Hears Picturemen's Opinion of Censor Laws.

THAT censorship of motion pictures, particularly as it exists in Pennsylvania, is a nuisance, unnecessary, un-American and a menace to the fifth industry of the United States, were facts masterfully set forth before the big public gathering in the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh, Sunday, April 2. The first gun in the campaign for the repeal of the censorship law in the state proved to be of the 42-centimeter type. A number of the most able champions of the industry were on hand the local film interests turned out as one, and the great audience of men, women and children demonstrated by its deep interest and enthusiastic response that the protest was directed against the common enemy of all. It was especially urged that, as the public is the only rightful and competent judge of what it shall see on the screen, all should go out as missionaries to convince others of the injustice of censorship, to use vote and influence to have the existing law set aside.

The affair was handled in an efficient manner by the campaign committee of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, of which John McAleer is chairman. In his introductory remarks, Mr. McAleer explained the purpose of the meeting and stated that it was the first of a well-planned state-wide campaign. The first speaker was Jacob W. Binder, of New York, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America. After paying tribute to Pittsburgh, at one time his home, Mr. Binder touched upon the extent of the motion picture industry and its force in the political, economic and social world. He said in part: "The motion picture industry today is not alone an amusement, but an educator, a newspaper and a great public forum. When the President of the United States honored the industry by his presence at its annual dinner and placed upon the industry his stamp of approval, he thereby lifted it from its early standard to that which it occupies today. What it will eventually become, the future only may determine, considering withal the immense development and rapidly rising standards of the producers. These things being true it is essential that the screen be as free from political and religious prejudices as the press. In order to attain this freedom we are appealing to public opinion. Pennsylvania, Kansas and Ohio are the only states in the Union where censorship is tolerated and it must and will be done away with."

Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, National President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, delivered one of the strongest indictments of censorship, swaying his hearers by his characteristic earnestness and force. Mr. Herrington reviewed the failure of the old "muzzler" bill in Pennsylvania directed against the freedom of press and speech and predicted the early death of censorship. He said: "All books are not good. All lectures are not good. All plays are not good. What do you do to people who produce the bad in those industries? Why not do the same to a man that produces or shows a bad motion picture? The organization which I represent is unalterably opposed to any brand of censorship, whether federal, state, city, county or township. We do not want and will not have censorship in any form, except that which controls and safeguards other similar productions." Much applause followed his characterization of censorship as "conceived in iniquity, born in sin and dying in disgrace."

Representative A. C. Stein, of Pittsburgh, an honorary member of the Screen Club, next touched upon several interesting aspects of censorship from the standpoint of the law-maker. "One of the chief reasons why censorship must fail," he said, "is because it is a menace to this big industry. It seems to me that, in its immense proportions it may be spoken of as an inter-state commerce. If censored at all it should be by a central body under the authority of the inter-state commerce commission." Indorsing the action of the Screen Club in seeking to eliminate the censor by urging the repeal of the present law, Mr. Stein continued: "If Pennsylvania can have a board of censors, every state in the Union could do the same. By the time a film had passed forty-eight different boards there would be nothing left but the titles, and maybe not even that."

W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World, pointed out the futility of all kinds of censorship in the history of all English-speaking peoples. Mr. Bush dwelt particularly upon the proper regulation of motion picture entertainment for children. He said: "Censorship is no new thing; on the contrary, it is centuries old as an institution, but it has been tried and has failed conspicuously. The American people are surcharged with humor and they would never for a moment entertain censorship for adults. But the appeal for the protection of the children has its natural effect upon society and the legislatures. It is absurd to claim that the problem of the child can be solved through censorship. Libraries have their special rooms for children. The same force which protects the child in these cases ought to be found ample to protect it in the case of the motion picture theater. The conscientious parent will control the child and advise him to see the proper pictures. More constructive work for specializing in children entertainments, rather than the destructive work of the censor, is needed to guide them properly. With these things in view, the enlightened film men are working in conjunction with public-spirited men and women in various cities in an effort to solve this complex children problem."

During his address, Mr. Bush referred to various eliminations that have been made recently by the censors in Pennsylvania and Ohio, showing how senseless and, at times, utterly ludicrous they are. Sections of film that had been eliminated were distributed among the audience.

Chairman McAleer read a telegram from P. A. Powers, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., expressing his regret that he could not be present. Between the various addresses three good comedies were thrown upon the screen, concluding with an anti-censorship cartoon.

REEL FELLOWS' ELECTION.

At a recent meeting of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, the annual election of officers was held, and the following were voted into office for the ensuing year: President, R. R. Nehls (re-elected); first vice-president, Frank J. Flaherty; second vice-president, Richard C. Travers; treasurer, Wm. J. Sweeney; secretary, M. G. Watkins, and assistant secretary, Freeman H. Owens. The five members of the Board of Governors elected were: Watterson R. Rothacker, H. C. Miller, George Berg, Fred W. Wild, Jr., and L. A. Boening. The members of the club decided to give a special theater party on Monday, March 27, at the Palace theater, where Richard C. Travers will make his appearance in a special vaudeville number.

SELIG-TRIBUNE AUTO SERVICE.

The automobile plays an important part in the releasing of an animated newspaper. For example the Selig-Tribune, the twice-a-week news reel issued by the Selig Polyscope Company, has an automobile always ready and waiting. By special wire one of the great news agencies informs Editor Jack Wheeler, of the Selig-Tribune, the minute a big news story "breaks." Editor Wheeler presses a button and automobile with chauffeur and staff cameraman is at the office door. Soon the automobile is speeding to the scene of a large fire, a spectacular parade, or some other event interesting to the people who later view the Selig-Tribune in the motion picture theaters. The automobile is utilized at the Chicago headquarters of the Selig-Tribune. The picture shows Editor Wheeler seated in front with the chauffeur with the staff cameraman in the rear ready for action.

Mitchell Mark on Censorship

President of the Mark-Strand Theater Company Presents Other Side of Question.

MITCHELL H. MARK and the Mark-Strand Theater Company, of which he is the guiding spirit, come out unreservedly in favor of a Federal Board of Control for Motion Pictures, the plan which has so long been advocated by President W. W. Hodkinson of Paramount Picture Corporation that it has become known as the Paramount Plan.

Mr. Mark and his company occupy a very important position in the eyes of exhibitors because of their very successful operation of an unusually high grade of motion picture theaters, such as is typified by their Strand theater, New York. The letter from the Mark-Strand Company to Paramount, and an open letter addressed to all exhibitors follows:

Paramount Pictures Corporation, 485 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Gentlemen:—I herewith enclose a few remarks on Censorship inspired by our recent conversations on this subject. If you think they will be of any benefit to the trade in general, you are at liberty to use them as you see fit.

Yours very truly,
MARK-STRAND THEATER CO.
(Signed) M. H. Mark.

A Few Timely Words on Censorship Addressed to the Exhibitors of the United States.

During a recent hearing at Washington on Federal control of motion pictures, the industry was represented on the firing line solely by producers and their allies.

Why were not the exhibitors present to give voice to the demands of their patrons? They, of all classes financially interested in this comparatively new and wonderful form of entertainment, are directly and constantly in touch with the pulse of those who have made this business possible—the public. For this neglect we, of course, have only ourselves to blame, but a public expression of opinion on this very important question from the owners and operators of the Strand Theater, New York, may and should be quite timely and interest every exhibitor who has the good of the business at heart as well as the manufacturers of the films we project on our screens.

Right off the reel, so to speak, we believe in interesting pictures that leave a good taste in the mouth, pictures with plenty of action that stir the red blood in our viens, pictures that appeal to the finer and artistic senses, pictures that educate and uplift, but always, always clean, moral pictures. That is the rock on which the future prosperity of our business is built. Follow any other course, and in a comparatively short time, the rock will be split and the crevices filled with many dead exhibitors. Is it not a fact in the amusement line, that the largest rewards invariably come to those who spread a clean palatable bill of fare before their patrons? Can anyone recall a single instance of a popular form of entertainment that owes its prosperity to catering to the lower and debasing element of human nature? No one can controvert the above facts.

The wave of vampire and sex pictures which has swept over the country in the past year is bound to react and result in great harm to the entire industry unless checked very quickly. The prosperity of theaters specializing in this form of entertainment is temporary and evanescent. Censorship, intelligently applied, is the remedy for this evil and the safeguard for our continued existence. This censorship should emanate from the Federal Government and should not by any means consist of politicians whose livelihood depends upon the votes of their constituents, but of those who have had worldly experience, people of large and liberal ideas, men of business, of letters, artists, dramatists, etc. Care should be exercised in eliminating the narrow-minded and the bigoted.

Are we not all protected under censorship of that description? Should we not consider it a blessing that our business is safeguarded by trained and discriminate minds? Under such conditions and with such authorities confronting them, the petty annoyance of state and local censorship should vanish—in fact, in course of time these lesser boards should pass out of existence for want of sustenance.

That the industry has brought censorship upon itself admits of no argument. Given free rein, a certain class of manufacturers would cast prudence and caution to the four winds of heaven, salaciousness would run rampant, and discredit would be cast upon the entire industry, the good suffering for the sins of the bad. If the exhibitor insists upon clean moral pictures, the manufacturers will be compelled to furnish that class of material. The business must be purged of its unhealthy odor. Censorship properly applied will accomplish this.

I hope that this expression of opinion will be the means of bringing forth the sentiments of the better class of exhibitors. It is the duty of each and every one of them to put themselves on record for Federal censorship as outlined above.

Beauty May Become Screen Star

Prominent English Player Reported as About to Take Up Motion Picture Work.

ACCORDING to reports received from England, stars of the British stage are following the example of their American cousins and listening more attentively to the invitations of motion picture producers than has been the custom in the past. The latest statement made is that Miss Ivy Close, who has gained fame throughout the world for her beauty, may soon be found in screen productions.

Ivy Close.

A year or so ago, when it was the fashion of English stars to decide that they would not affect their stage reputations by a few appearances in pictures, Miss Close played with great success in some English-made features. The present rumors are, however, the first to indicate that she might be induced to undertake a long engagement on the screen.

Of the ideal English type of beauty, which photographs remarkably well, Miss Close has all the natural requisites for brilliant screen success. In addition her ability as an actress has made her a London favorite, particularly in comedy roles. She also is unusually clever at the type of comedy character parts so well liked by English audiences, and when lured to the variety stage is a never-failing magnet in the music halls.

Miss Close gained the title of "the most beautiful woman in the world," when she triumphed over many thousands of contestants in the Chicago Tribune-London Daily Mirror contest. At the time the contest created world-wide notice and the judges were recruited from the most distinguished artistic circles. The board that declared Miss Close "the international beauty" included such names as Sir James Linton, R. I.; Mr. John Lavery, R. S. A.; Mr. John Hassall, R. I.; Mr. A. Carruthers-Gould, R. B. A., and Mr. A. R. Hackett, A. R. A. Since the awarding of the prize, Miss Close has sat for numerous paintings which have hung in the Royal Academy.

PATHE NEWS USED BY CHICAGO POLICE.

The Chicago Police Department has been using a Pathe News film to acquaint its detectives with the face of Jean Crones, the notorious anarchist who attempted wholesale poisoning. The Pathe News last Thanksgiving filmed an anarchistic gathering in which Crones appeared prominently. Manager Holah of Pathe's Chicago office, remembered the occasion and offered to show the picture to the detectives of the department. The police found it of great help.

LOUIS A. J. GELENG FILES SUIT.

Louis A. J. Geleng, well known cameraman, who left New York, January 23, to take up work for the Overland Park Film Manufacturing Company, of Overland, Kan., has filed suit against the company and also against W. B. Strang, president. The complaint alleges there is due back salary for $375 and $300 balance on contract. Mr. Geleng expects to be back in New York shortly. Mr. Geleng is a member of the Screen Club and Cinema Camera.

No Censorship in Rochester

New York State City, However, Authorizes Commissioner to Inspect Any Subject As to Which He May Be in Doubt.

MAYOR HIRAM H. EDGERTON of Rochester gave a hearing Friday morning, April 7, on the ordinance which had been passed by the Common Council on the previous Saturday. This is not a censorship ordinance. It does not create a local board of censorship such as many of the clubwomen and the ministers of Rochester wish to have created. The ordinance does give to the Commissioner of Public Safety, Andrew Hamilton, the right to inspect any film the exhibition of which Mr. Hamilton might feel was questionable public policy. It is not the intention of Mr. Hamilton to review films in advance of their exhibition except where information has reached him in advance from other localities that the picture under discussion has met with disfavor. Mr. Hamilton has requested that the weekly bulletin of the National Board's official advices be furnished to his office in order that he may keep informed as to the pictures which are coming to Rochester.

At the hearing Corporation Counsel Cunningham explained the provisions of the ordinance. The Regent and Gordon theaters were represented at the hearing by their attorney, John McInerney. Mr. McInerney had opposed the passage of any censorship ordinance before the Common Council. When the ordinance was explained Mr. McInerney stated for the exhibitors that while they were opposed to any censorship they would not oppose the Mayor's signing this ordinance, for the reason that it kept the power within the Mayor's office and that the exhibitors had never had any cause to complain against action taken by the Mayor. Mr. Smith, president of the local operators' union, appeared for the operators and explained that they did not care to oppose the ordinance as it did not create a board of censorship. Lester F. Scott, chairman of the Legislative Committee of the National Board of Review, in speaking at the hearing, explained further that the National Board would have opposed any ordinance calling for pre-publicity censorship of motion picture films, but that the ordinance which the Mayor had before him crystallized his power to properly regulate the commercial amusements of the city; that it had never been the policy of the National Board to oppose enactments which maintained the power to regulate motion picture films in the Mayor's hands or in the hands of one of the Mayor's departments.

Two or three ministers spoke, asking the Mayor to appoint some clubwomen and two or three ministers to act for him on any pictures which he might desire to have inspected. This the Mayor explained he could not do, as the city held his office responsible for the proper conduct of its affairs and therefore he could not delegate his authority.

The Mayor said that he felt that Commissioner Hamilton was amply fitted to pass upon any questions which might come before him.

W. D. McGuire, secretary of the National Board of Review, spoke on the character of pictures which are being exhibited in Rochester, and explained that the public could hardly expect Commissioner Hamilton to take action against certain pictures because children might be likely to see them. It was pointed out that the motion picture audiences consist of less than 20 per cent. of children, that many films are not designed for children, and that the solution of this problem in Rochester was already being reached through a special children's performance being given at the Regent theater each Saturday morning; that accordingly parents should assume the responsibility for keeping their children out of some theaters where films designed for adult audiences were being exhibited and allowing them to go to the Regent theater to the children's performance. This course should be followed rather than make complaints to Commissioner Hamilton against pictures being exhibited which were not designed for children, when already a proper program specially selected for children was being presented in Rochester weekly.

"Twilight Sleep" Film Announced

The Modern Motherhood League announces it will soon show "Twilight Sleep," a subject made under the personal direction of Dr. Schlossinck, associate of Drs. Kronig and Gauss, Frauenklinik, Freiburg, Germany, where "twilight sleep" was discovered. The picture is designed for women audiences and for clinical purposes. The accompanying lecture and film is designed to afford an interesting and illuminating hour and a half. States rights are now selling on the subject.

Sallie Fisher With Essanay

SALLIE FISHER, famous Dillingham star, has been obtained by Essanay to play the big part in "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," a five-act visualization of Howard McKent Barnes' novel and drama. Those who have read the book and know Sallie Fisher will readily see how exceptionally well cast she is for the part of the resourceful young business woman who has fought her way to the top from the humblest beginnings.

Sallie Fisher.

With Miss Fisher in the piece are Richard C. Travers and John Junior, two stars known to picture followers the world over.

"The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row" would have been highly inconsistent a quarter of a century ago, but now it is literally a page out of life today. There is not a situation in it that is not true to life in the business section of a great city and the subject lends itself admirably to filming.

Women will enjoy Sallie Fisher's interpretation of the girl who fought her way from the tenements to the management of a great store and will follow her through the various trials that confront her and which she disposes of in the big breezy way that is part of her. They will realize her interest in the things she likes and agree with her in her maternal care of the girls in the store. "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," is a story of a woman who made good.

There are many opportunities for Miss Fisher to exercise her talent for light comedy. Her brusque manner and commercial slang—as conveyed by the sub-titles—are irresistible.

Crimmins and Gore

Famous Old-Time Vaudeville Team One of the Features of Kleine's "Musty Suffer" Series.

NOT the least of a dozen well-known faces recognized in George Kleine's "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," with Harry Watson, Jr., are those of that old-time vaudeville team of Crimmins and Gore. They appeared in the first episode, "Cruel and Unusual," and have since been seen in each one of the ten comprised in the series.

Dan Crimmins.

Their reappearance in film after some years of retirement, carries the elder generation of play-goers back to the days of Tony Pastor's Fourteenth Street playhouse, scene of the beginning of many of the American theater's greatest stage celebrities. At Pastor's they were engaged to star jointly with Helen Mora, of Hyde's Star Specialty Company. The bill included Prof. Don Latto, Lillian Western, Smith & Lord, Crimmins & Gore, McIntyre & Heath, Leslie & Hardman, Filson & Errol, Le Petit Freddie, and concluding with a five-mile race in land boats between Capt. Paul Boynton, champion of the United States; Wallace Ross, champion of England, and John Largan, champion of Ireland.

The next season they appeared with Frank Buch and others in H. W. William's company at the Pittsburgh Academy of Music. With Grenier's Lyceum Theater Company they were headlined with Charles V. Seamon, Lizzie and Vinie Daly, under the management of John Morrisey, who later became more in the limelight as manager of the Orpheum theater in San Francisco.

Rosa Gore.

The team crossed the continent from New York to San Francisco fifteen times, including seven tours over the Orpheum Circuit. They played 104 weeks over the Considine & Sullivan Circuit; headlined with Keith & Proctor from the opening of their theaters until 1910, when they turned their attention to foreign engagements, touring with the late Harry Richards' Australian circuit for one year.

Under the management of Charles Morton (father of the music halls) they had a run at the Palace theater, London, afterward making a tour of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, twice playing the music halls.

They started in their own musical comedy and played the Wizard and Lady Lunatic respectively in Hamlin & Mitchell's "Wizard of Oz."

Crimmins and Gore have added much to the gayety of the "Musty Suffer" series, and because of their extraordinary versatility and long familiarity with the possibilities of make-up, have played a score of characters of the comedy.

Edna May at Fulton Theatre

Musical Comedy Star, in Vitagraph Picture, Is Cordially Welcomed by Broadway Audience.

WITH Edna May on the screen and in person as the chief attraction, the Vitagraph Company took possession of the Fulton theater, New York, the evening of April 9. The duration of the lease of the popular playhouse has not been announced, but it probably will extend over a nnmber of weeks with the frequent changes of bill.

The first public showing of "Salvation Joan," the seven-part romantic drama in which Edna May (Mrs. Oscar Lewisohn) plays the role of a society woman, who indulges her charitable instincts by working among the poor as a Salvation Army lass, was cordially greeted by a distinguished audience, including many friends of the actress. The Salvation Army costume worn by Joan during parts of the picture was pleasingly reminiscent of "The Belle of New York," the musical comedy in which Miss May acquired fame many years ago, and contributing to the same memories was the frequent introduction of the song "Follow on" in the accompaniment of the production.

Following the first part of the program, comprising a Frank Daniels' comedy, a comedy cartoon, a humorous romance featuring Lillian Walker and an interesting study of animal life, J. Stuart Blackton presented Miss May, who expressed great pleasure at seeing so many of her old friends and hoped that they would not be disappointed in the picture. Miss May looked extremely well in a cream-colored satin gown and a chinchilla scarf. The audience welcomed the actress with generous applause and followed her work on the screen with obvious approval.

Among those present were William T. Rock, Albert E. Smith, Marie Tempest, Anita Stewart, Martha Hedman, Herbert Swope, Harry Northrop, Judge and Mrs. Gary, Mrs. William R. Hearst, Reginald Vanderbilt and party, Mr. and Mrs. Walter W. Irwin, Victor Smith, Harry R. Guggenheimer, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Lewisohn and party, Baron and Baroness DeMeyer, Lionel Pape, Dorothy Kelly, Harry T. Morey, C. A. Willat, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Whittenberg, Raymond Havemeyer, Charles Knedler, John Barrymore and Avery Hopwood.

"Ramona" Opens New York Run

Premier Showing in East of Big Clune Production Is Warmly Received by Large House.

THE first production of the Clune Film Producing Company, "Ramona," opened its New York run at the Forty-fourth Street theater on the evening of Wednesday, April 5. Practically everyone of the 1,540 seats in the big playhouse was filled. The audience, and in speaking of this photodrama "audience" is good beyond cavil—was markedly appreciative. It applauded the elaborate stage settings, transformation scenes they might be called—shown before the prologue and the first and second acts, indicating the three periods into which the story naturally, logically divides. Then, too, the music came in for praise, both instrumental and vocal. The orchestra of forty-two pieces—thirty in the pit and twelve under the stage—was directed by Carli Di Elinor, the head of the orchestra of the Clune Auditorium in Los Angeles, who had been brought on to New York for the purpose of supervising the music in the Clune way.

Among those seen in the audience by a World man were Daniel Frohman, David Belasco, William Wright, J. Stuart Blackton, George M. Cohan, J. J. Kennedy, Arthur Kane, Percy Waters, Marc Klaw, E. F. Albee, Martin Beck, John Cort, J. J. Murdock, Walter W. Irwin, Joe Brandt, William A. Brady, B. S. Moss and Max Spiegel. Present, too, were many players.

In the lobby at the close of the show receiving congratulations were W. H. Clune, the California exhibitor and manufacturer; Lloyd Brown, general manager of the Clune enterprises, and Donald Crisp, the producer of the twelve-reel subject.

"Ramona" is now being shown at Los Angeles, in its tenth week, and San Francisco, in its fourth. Besides the New York presentation it is intended soon to open in Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia. Other cities are under consideration.

Among those departing from the first matinee on Thursday were purchasers of seventy-eight seats for future performances. This is considered a straw of significance as indicating that "Ramona" is liked in New York.

San Francisco, Picture Center?

Los Angeles Producers May Be Tempted to Seek New Locations—Frank Woods Explains Situation.

FOR several months talk has been rife that producers now located in the southern part of the state were considering the advisability of removing to other locations, with San Francisco mentioned most prominently. Recently four members of the industry from Los Angeles were visitors here to appear before the police committee of the Board of Supervisors in opposition to the proposed censorship ordinance, and also to investigate conditions for producing pictures. The party was composed of Frank E. Woods, manager of the Fine Arts Studio of the Triangle Film Corporation, J. Barney Sherry, personal representative of Thomas Ince; Harry Kerr, representing the Keystone interests, and Neil McCarthy, attorney for the Paramount and Lasky companies.

While before the police committee Mr. Woods was asked many questions regarding the scope of the industry at Los Angeles and whether or not he was here seeking a site for a studio. In reply he said that this was not the reason for his visit and he did not wish this impression to be conveyed as it might seem that an effort was being made to influence the committee on the censorship matter. In referring to studio locations he said: "Just why Los Angeles was selected as a producing center in the first place is not apparent, unless it is that it was widely advertised as the home of sunshine. Producers have found that this is not exactly the case and there are many places near San Francisco where there are more sunny days in the year than at Los Angeles, according to Government and private records. The supposed sunshine alleged to exist in Southern California is not entirely the kind needed for the production of pictures."

Leaving the police committee he took more time to explain his views on this question and said: "San Francisco has around it any number of locations that offer better climatic conditions than can be found in the south, and as far as picturesqueness goes, the vicinity of this city offers a wealth of varieties of scenic backgrounds that cannot be approached in the south. One of the largest items of expense that figure on the books of a producing concern is transportation. Operating near San Francisco the cost of moving our performers to the suitable scenic environment would be materially reduced because mountains, woods, brooks, bay and ocean are practically within a stone's throw. When the studios were first established at Los Angeles it was simply a case of follow the leader. Studios were built and men employed regardless of the fact that there were few inducements from the people of Los Angeles and but few advantages.

"The motion picture industry now spends annually in Los Angeles $20,000,000, which sum is double the capitalization of the Los Angeles banks. What we spend stays in Los Angeles. Nevertheless, the people down there commenced to think they owned the picture people and what with censorship and other petty efforts to regulate the business the seed of discontent was planted."

The party was shown some of the beauty spots of Marin, San Mateo and Santa Clara Counties by Guy Wayman, of San Francisco, who has devoted considerable of his time during the past few months to interesting moving picture producers in this city as a center for their operations. Other producers are coming shortly on tours of inspection and it is considered likely that within a comparatively short time the local moving picture colony will be greatly augmented.

JOE BRANDT PUTS IN CLAIM.

The Nation Board of Censorship has decided to change its name. It now wishes to be known as "The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures." Three years ago when the board of review met to decide upon a name in the Cafe Lafayette, Joe Brandt, now general manager of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., pointed out to W. D. McGuire, Executive Secretary of the Board, that the title "National Board of Censorship" was misleading, that it conveyed the impression of greater scope and power of government sanction which the body did not possess. Mr. Brandt was overruled. And now, three years later, Mr. Brandt's original suggestion, that the body of moving picture censors be called "The National Board of Review," has been adopted. Joe is usually three years ahead of the procession anyway.

New American Serial

It Is Entitled "The Secret of the Submarine," and Will Be Done in Fifteen Chapters of Two Reels Each.

"THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE," a chaptered photoplay produced by American Film Co., will be released as a Mutual special feature May 8. The story is woven around the life of a young girl whose father is the inventor of an apparatus enabling sub-sea craft to reach a great depth without peril to the crews. The formula of this invention, sought by foreign governments as well as the American government, permits the direct introduction of the question of national defense in a manner at once logical and thrilling.

The fact that the United States is involved in the search for the formula lends a patriotic novelty to the intense drama of the story. The dramatic suspense is well sustained from the beginning, being carried through adventure after adventure, to a big "punch" climax at the close of each chapter. The authors have struck an excellent balance of characterization and the members of the cast have been selected to fit the types as well as for their dramatic ability.

Hylda Hollis.

Thomas Chatterton, as Lieut. Hope, U. S. N., and Juanita Hansen, as Cleo Burke, modern young Americans, awaken immediate interest as their love affairs lend a real charm to the chain of heart stirring situations. Mr. Chatterton is a fine, upstanding, virile type of hero, and Miss Hansen, the possessor of a captivating winsomeness, just suited to the role of Cleo. The "heavy" roles have been given into exceptionally capable hands, Lamar Johnstone and Hylda Hollis, both distinguished for their finished acting. William Tedmarsh, whose characterization of Quabba in "The Diamond from the Sky," was considered one of the great screen character roles, essays the part of a Japanese spy.

George Clancy as "Hook" Barnacle, an old salt, who has gained his odd sobriquet because of a hook in place of his right hand, is afforded a splendid opportunity for character work, the which he realizes to the fullest extent, as does George Webb, in his role of Mahlin, an international emissary.

The smaller roles have all been given into equally capable hands. The manner in which the characters have been defined by the authors is so definite that an unusual amount of strength will be given to the story through this fact alone.

Motion picture patrons do not enjoy watching a picture and be made to wonder "who's who" in each chapter. President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Co., has precluded any possibility in "The Secret of the Submarine" by his selection of the storied characters and the persons chosen to play them.

"The Secret of the Submarine" will be released in fifteen chapters of two reels each. George Sargent is the director in charge of production.

BRONSON HOWARD AN ACTOR.

For one brief moment George Bronson Howard was an actor last week. The prominent dramatist, who is the author of Kalem's big series, "The Social Pirates," visited the Glendale studios last week while the company was at work on the staging of an elaborate restaurant scene for a coming episode. Since his arrival in California, the author has been a frequent visitor at the studio, lending his aid in the way of suggestions as to details in the productions.

Starfilms, Ltd., in Canada

Marks Advance in Motion Picture Development in the Dominion—A. H. Sawyer in Charge.

CANADA has generally been considered by residents of the States to be a practically undeveloped field for motion pictures, and until a few months ago very little serious consideration was given to that territory. During the past few months, however, most of the large companies have opened offices in different parts of the Dominion, to different grades of success.

Early in October, 1915, Metro pictures had their first showing in Canada, opening at the Imperial theater in Montreal, one of Canada's leading theaters. In conjunction with the showing of the Metro pictures, Valli Valli, one of the Metro stars, appeared in person. This proved such a decided novelty to Canadian moving picture patrons that arrangements were made whereby a Metro star appears about once a month in theaters showing Metro pictures. The result has been that Metro now is the leading program in Canada, numbering among its patrons the leading theaters in every section of the Dominion.

This success was brought about by the Starfilms, Ltd., a million-dollar company, organized and financed by prominent Montreal business men. Although the company has been in existence less than six months, it has opened offices in Montreal, Toronto, St. Johns, N. B., Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. The policy of the company has been, "Pictures Plus Publicity," and the wonderful results achieved have proved the wisdom of the policy.

Since Valli's appearance in theaters showing Metro, Mme. Petrova and Mary Miles Minter have appeared to great success, and this week Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Helen Dunbar and Robert Cummings appeared to packed houses in four cities.

The great success of Starfilms, Ltd., has been due in a large measure to the efforts of A. H. Sawyer, who has been general manager since November last. He has installed many new and original ideas and has put in force several advertising schemes that have brought big results. Mr. Sawyer has always been known in the film trade as an aggressive advertiser and he has carried out this plan in Canada to great success.

The main office of the Starfilms, Ltd., is in Montreal, Canada, in the Starfilms Building on Phillips Square, a prominent location facing Montreal's main street. Two large stores have been remodeled into one big office floor. Over the front of the big show windows is an electric sign, 44 feet long by 6 feet in height, and across it makes a wonderful display. On this sign are flashed the names of the stars and pictures released during the current week.

The reception offices are all finished in mahogany and as they are all open, with low rail fences, the effect is one of bigness. In the back part of the west side of the building are the shipping and booking departments. On the east side, in the front, is the general manager's office, with an exhibitors' rest room connected. In this room are kept the latest numbers of the trade magazines, and a stenographer is located to be of service to exhibitors. In the rear of the east side is located the projection room, which is a model of its kind and one of the best fitted in the Dominion. The room is fifty feet long and fifteen feet wide. A beautiful stage setting has been installed at the north end, with a Gold Radium screen, in front of which is a fountain and a beautiful floral effect on lattice work. To the right of the projection room is located the publicity department.

A two-machine booth, equipped with the latest improvements, adjoined by a revising and film examining room, completes the equipment of the ground floor.

In the basement is a big poster department and workroom.

The entire equipment is complete and is a silent commentary on the methods of the Starfilms, Ltd. In addition to handling Metro, this company also books other high-class special features and is always in the market for good features. The company is now booking "The Spoilers," "The Heart of Maryland," "The Tigress," "Beulah" and "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

Arthur Brisbane Changes His Mind

Famous Editor Declares the Motion Picture in History Will Equal the Discovery of Printing Press.

TO celebrate the tenth anniversary of his entrance into the theater business Marcus Loew was on Sunday, April 9, the guest at a complimentary dinner in the Astor. The occasion was notable not only for the large number of theatrical men present to do honor to Mr. Loew, but also by reason of the speech of Arthur Brisbane, who puts himself in the category of wise men by notably changing his mind. Mr. Brisbane, it will be recalled, a few weeks ago at a public gathering, made some unexpected remarks about motion pictures in general, one of these being so mething to the effect that the motion picture thrived on account of the stupidity of the human race. Mr. Brisbane delivered what he stated was his first prepared speech. He said in part:

"The moving picture will give immortality to the genius and the grace of the great actors. The moving picture within two or three years and perhaps this year will be the greatest weapon in political fights. The moving picture is destined to be what the newspaper should be, and will possess power that the newspaper cannot match—an entertainment, a relaxation, an education, a political weapon to protect the people. It is the only possible method of reaching the human mind directly and effectively, regardless of that mind's intellectual training.

"The moving picture in history will equal the discovery of the printing press."

All of which is good to read. It demonstrates that Mr. Brisbane is really big, that he is not afraid to change his attitude when he is shown his former position was one that could not be justified by the facts. Arthur James, chairman of the publication committee of the Board of Trade, before which Mr. Brisbane made his now famous speech, will probably take pains to see that the story of the regeneration of the editor is duly filed along with the mountain of clippings that flowed from the first address.

Vitagraphs for Week of April 17

Three Comedies, a Romance and a Naval Picture Constitute an Attractive Collection of Offerings.

ERNEST TRUEX and Dorothy Kelly in "Artie, the Millionaire Kid," a five-part rollicking comedy of the Blue Ribbon feature brand, listed for release on Monday, April 17, starts off a program of exceptionally high standard for the week.

Scene from "Artie, the Millionaire Kid" (Vitagraph).

Mr. Truex as Artie, a college boy expelled from college, turns book agent and meets Anabelle; played by Dorothy Kelly, with whom he falls in love. The proceeds made on selling books enables him to buy the only paper in that section. When he learns that his father, a railroad magnate, intends running a branch of his road through Byways, Artie makes Updike, the owner of the land wanted for the "right-of-way," believe that his property is not the location desired. Artie's friend, Jack, masquerading in female attire, induces Updike to sell out to a syndicate formed by Artie. They arrange for Updike to purchase land on which they have an option, telling him it is the property wanted. Updike in turn tells the members of Artie's syndicate that they have been cheated and a mad rush for the "Bee" office follows. When they demand the return of their money, Artie pays them off with Updike's cash. Things look bad for Artie with Anabelle, since she has discovered him in the arms of the "widow," but everything ends happily when Pa learns that he has to do business with his son, whom he has not seen in months. The climax comes when Artie claims Anabelle and the identity of the "widow" is made known.

Mr. Truex and Miss Kelly are ably supported by John T. Kelly, Albert Roccardi, William R. Dunn and Girardot.

Frank Daniels in another adventure "Mr. Jack's Artistic Sense," of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," listed on the Scene from "His Lucky Day" (Vitagraph).

V-L-S-E program for Monday, April 17, has many funny experiences with an artist's model in an art studio while inspecting the painting of his son's portrait. How he makes his escape from his wife who comes in while he is paying one of his "secret" visits is only one of a hundred funny situations. Rose Tapley is seen as Daniels' wife, and Arthur Cozine plays the part of the son. C. Jay Williams supervised the filming of this photoplay.

Monday, April 17, is also the day on which "Life and Training in the U. S. N." will be ready for exhibition. It is a single-reel subject depicting the life of Uncle Sam's "jack tars," from the recruit at the Newport training school to the highest officials in navy matters. Scenes at Annapolis and other well-known points are shown. It was taken by special permission and in co-operation with the United States Navy.

"His Lucky Day" is the title of the one-part comedy on April 21, in which Freddy gets arrested, escapes and locks up the constable. Both compromise and earn a reward for an escaped lunatic and split "fifty-fifty." William Dangman plays the part of Freddy and is supported by William Lytell, Jr., George O'Donnell, Harry Mayo, Lucille Crane and Florence Natol. It was written by James A. Stiles and produced by Frank Currier.

"A Caliph of the New Bagdad," a three-part Broadway Star feature, by William Addison Lathrop, on the General Film program for Saturday, April 22, presents Van Dyke Brooke, Leah Baird, Templar Saxe, Edward Elkas, Emanuel A. Turner, Harry Fisher and Charles Edwards, telling of a romance in a boarding house and gives us an insight into the ways of the people of the "painted world." Besides playing an important part in the production, Van Dyke Brooke also produced the photoplay.

Ogden Crane With Pallas Pictures

OGDEN CRANE, well known for almost a quarter of a century as a characterizer of "heavy" roles, is now busily engaged in his initial work for Pallas Pictures at Los Angeles. Mr. Crane gained his early theatrical experience in stock in New York, Cincinnati, Denver and other metropolitan cities and later appeared under the management of such producers as Charles Frohman, William A. Brady, Liebler & Co. in important roles with Robert Hilliard, Emmett Corrigan, Maclyn Arbuckle, Louis Mann and others of equal fame. Among his greatest characterizations on the speaking stage were those he offered in "The House Next Door," as Sir John Cotswald and in "The Round Up," as Buck McKee.

Ogden Crane.

Supporting Mary Pickford in "Caprice" the well known Famous Players success, Mr. Crane appeared for the first time before the motion picture camera in 1910. His initial offering in this photoplay in the role of the father, received wide praise and his subsequent work in films of similar merit has been presented under the tradesmarks of the foremost producing companies in the business.

A son of Mme. Ogden Crane, late dramatic singer and instructor of New York, Ogden became associated with the stage at an early age after graduating from public and preparatory schools in Newburgh, N. Y. His first characterization for Pallas Pictures will be presented in "Davy Crockett," an elaborate film version of the famous story in which Dustin Farnum portrays the title role. In this production Mr. Crane has been given a particularly difficult part to handle which discloses all the dramatic finesse possessed by the sterling actor. "Davy Crockett" is now well under way and will be ready for release on the Paramount program in the near future.

FLORENCE LAWRENCE RESIGNS.

Immediately after finishing "Elusive Isabel" and "Spring Time and Tillie Tod" for the Universal, Florence Lawrence, the old Imp star, resigned. Florry Lorry is said to have developed a temperamental streak, but as she had no written or verbal contract with the Universal President Laemmle had no means of making her stay at the big new Fort Lee studios.

"Who's Guilty?" Coming in May

Stories of Social Significance in Pathe's Series Comprising Fourteen Two-Reel Dramas.

ON MAY 8 the Pathe exchange will release throughout the country the first of the fourteen two-reel photo-novels which comprise Pathe's newest series, "Who's Guilty?" These photo-novels are, in every case, complete in themselves. They have no plot connection one with another, yet all are based on the one major theme of "Who's Guilty?"

Necessarily, this theme is broad and intensely human. It concerns the biggest problems that beset the American people today. It portrays those questions—domestic, sociological, political and psychological—which enter into the lives of all Americans and which must be answered from day to day by every individual.

"Who's Guilty?" series is produced by the Arrow Film Corporation for Pathe with a most careful regard for the demands of the ultra-modern photoplay. Under the personal guidance of W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Company, no item of plot, acting, direction, setting or other detail of successful motion picture production has been overlooked. There has been no stinting of cost—whether of money or brain—to make this series in at least one way the most remarkable succession of two-reel photoplays ever placed on the market.

Co-starred in the "Who's Guilty?" series are Anna Q. Nilsson and Tom Moore, both of whom have long been prime favorites of American motion picture patrons. All of Miss Nilsson's gowns in the "Who's Guilty?" series were made especially for her by Hickson, the ultra-smart Fifth avenue modiste. Staging and directing these fourteen photo-novels are two of America's premier directors, Howell Hansel and Lawrence B. McGill. Mr. Hansel made a name for himself as the director of "The Million Dollar Mystery," "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," and a number of other Thanhouser photoplays. Mr. McGill is one of the small number of directors who made good pictures in the early days of the screen play and still is a highly successful producer.

Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, one of the foremost women writers of the day, is turning each "Who's Guilty?" photo-novel into a fiction story that will appear in a large number of newspapers throughout the country simultaneously with the release of each two-reel screen play. The actual scenarios of the series have been written in their entirety or else re-edited by E. A. Bingham, long the head of the Metro scenario department, and for many years editor of the Paris edition of the New York Herald. Collaborating with Mr. Bingham on the scenarios is Albert S. Le Vino, of the Arrow Company, who dramatized "The Woman's Law" for the screen and is the author of more than a hundred photoplays.

Left to right, Anna Nilsson, Howell Hansel, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Lawrence B. McGill, Tom Moore.

Distribution of the pictures is under the direct supervision of George A. Smith, serial director of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Prior to his present work, Mr. Smith was on the staff of the New York Journal, and he brought to his present work the same zeal and efficiency which stamped his previous career. He has had charge of the newspaper arrangements for the appearance of the "Who's Guilty?" series, which will be published simultaneously in the Detroit Times, Detroit, Mich.; Providence Tribune, Providence, R. I.; Buffalo Evening News, Buffalo, N. Y.; Indianapolis Star, Indianapolis, Ind.; Altoona Tribune, Altoona, Pa.; Philadelphia North American, Philadelphia, Pa.; Pittsburgh Press, Pittsburgh, Pa.; New York Evening World, New York City; Cincinnati Times-Star, Cincinnati, O.; Cleveland Plain Dealer, Cleveland, O.; Dallas News, Dallas, Tex.; Los Angeles Record, Los Angeles, Cal.; San Francisco Call, San Francisco, Cal.; Atlanta Journal, Atlanta, Ga.; Chicago Herald, Chicago, Ill.; New Orleans Item, New Orleans, La.; St. Louis Times, St. Louis, Mo.; Omaha World-Herald, Omaha, Neb.; Salt Lake Tribune, Salt Lake City, Utah; Kansas City Star, Kansas City, Mo., and many others.

The titles thus far selected for some of the photo-novels of the "Who's Guilty?" series are: "The Stroke of the Scalpel, "Sowing the Wind," "The Tight Rein," "The Tangled Web," "The Second Offense," "The Silent Shame," "The Moral Coward" and "Sold Out."

History of Indiana

Unique Productions Being Made by the Selig Company—Director Beal in Charge.

ACTIVE work on the production of "The History of Indiana," the feature picture approved by the Indiana Historical Commission, has started at the Selig Polyscope Company studios, in Chicago. Director Frank Beal was summoned from the Pacific Coast by William N. Selig to assume active charge of production and he has selected an all-star cast of players. The scenario, written by Gilson Willets, the noted novelist and photoplaywright, has been approved by the Indiana Historical Commission and by the Governor of the state. It provides for a seven-reel production, the first two reels of which will be in the nature of a prologue covering the periods between the arrival of La Salle in 1679, and the admission of Indiana into statehood in 1816.

Herbert C. Hoagland, general manager of the Selig Company, has returned from Indianapolis, Ind., where he conferred with the members of the commission. "It may be interesting to the citizens of Indiana to know that this is the first state to attempt to embody its great historical events and personages in film production," he stated. The Selig Company will take motion pictures on the very ground where the historical events actually occurred, with the costumes and the enviroment of the times accurately produced.

Director Beal, in charge of the Indiana production, has had a noteworthy career as a motion picture producer. He produced the Selig Red Seal Play "I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier," "The Gold Ship," "The Woman Who Did Not Care," etc. He is enthusiastic over the possibilities of the historical picture-play. Citizens in many sections of Indiana will soon have opportunities of seeing motion pictures in the making, for many historical localities in Indiana will be visited by the Selig Company of players.

A SCENARIO BY LAWSON.

The World Film Corporation announces that it has secured a scenario on the subject, "Friday, the 13th," written by Thomas W. Lawson, the noted financier and author of Boston, who, several years ago, turned the money world up-side down with his vivid exposures and sensational accusations in the various magazines and papers and who later turned his pen to fiction.

Mr. Lawson was prevailed upon to write "Friday, the 13th," for the World Film Corporation by William A. Brady, who recently took over the art direction of that organization and when it was written and sent to the New York offices for first reading a letter accompanied it in which Mr. Lawson requested of Mr. Brady that either Mr. Holbrook Blinn or Robert Warwick be cast for the leading role. The story, so tremendous that its very reading created a suspense, even in its technical form, was allotted to Holbrook Blinn, for Robert Warwick is busily engaged playing opposite Grace George and spending his spare moments at the Peerless studio where "Sudden Riches" is being completed.

Mr. Blinn is completing "The Way of the World" at Baltimore, where many of the scenes were laid by the author and where permission was granted by Dr. Isaac E. Emerson for the use of his wonderful villa on Eutaw Place. Immediately "The Way of the World" is completed work will begin with a strong cast on "Friday, the 13th." "Friday, the 13th" in its book form has sold into the millions and is still one of the strongest sellers. It is a Wall street story of the different sort, blending more of the romantic than the practical and the original story as submitted by Mr. Lawson has been strengthened by a series of situations suggested and written by Harvey Thew of local scenario fame.

Paramount Program

John Barrymore and Marguerite Clark in Features—Bray Cartoons and Other Specialties.

COMEDY—played as only Jack Barrymore can play it—and a delightful film adaptation of Eleanor Hallowell Abbott's charming story "Molly Make-Believe," in which dainty Marguerite Clark will star, are the two five-reel offerings on the Paramount Program for the week of April 17. Both are from the studio of the Famous Players.

Scene from "Col. Heeza Liar Wins a Pennant" (Paramount).

Barrymore will appear in a picturization of "The Red Widow," the popular comedy by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, and will have the support of several members of the cast in the original production. Flora Zabelle, co-star in the stage production, appears as Anna Varvara, and John Hendricks and George E. Mack are seen in the roles of the Baron and Popova, as they were in the original version.

An excellent cast will appear in support of Miss Clark in "Molly Make-Believe," including J. W. Johnson, Edwin Mordant, Mahlon Hamilton, Gertrude Norman and others.

Henry Reuterdahl, greatest naval expert in the United States, will start the naval series of the "Preparedness" films in the thirteenth release of the Paramount Pictographs. The startling inadequacy of the United States army revealed by statesmen and army experts through the screen campaign of the Paramount Pictures Corporation has already attracted widespread attention throughout the nation. The inadequacy of the navy will be shown in a similar manner beginning with the release of the week of April 17. Also included in this week's features for the "magazine on the screen" will be "Better Babies," a political cartoon by J. R. Bray; "Things We Should Know," "How Submarines Go Down" and a new chapter in the "Hazards of Happifat."

"Through the Lowlands of Luzon with Burton Holmes," the twelfth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, and "Colonel Heeza Liar Wins the Pennant," Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, will be the two other single reel releases on the Paramount program for the same week.

Colonel Heeza Liar comes to the rescue and saves the map of the war-stricken Europe in this picture, pulling down the pennant over the ruins of the enemy's fortress in the Battle of Dead Man's Hill No. 23. Taking up his position in a private trench he plays havoc with the enemy's lines and has just settled down for a peaceful rest when his trench is destroyed by one of the enemy's shells. Heeza Liar retreats hastily by hopping on a passing cannon ball, but finds his men are either dead or have deserted. The Colonel's last cannon has been shot to pieces when an idea restores his backbone. He remembers his batting record with the Podunk Giants back in '85. From the wreckage he pulls the small end of the cannon barrel and bats the enemy's missiles back on their heads until they are in full retreat. Reinforcements arrive just as he pulls down the pennant.

In the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures "Through the Lowlands of Luzon" Mr. Holmes shows the beauty of this island wonderland of the Philippine hemp industry. Luzon supplies hemp to the entire world. Hemp "weavers" caught by the camera are partly Spanish and partly native Filipino beauties. The primitive lives of the Negritos, lowest type of human beings in existence, are also shown in this release, which is noteworthy for its industrial interest as well as for its scenic beauty.

"Dollars and the Woman"

Film, Which Censors Barred, Wins Praise from Two Extremes of Society.

WHEN the august members of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors saw fit recently to place an embargo on the showing of "Dollars and the Woman," a Lubin release through V-L-S-E., an appeal to the courts against their decision was instantly taken. The case came up in Philadelphia March 31st, before Judges Audenreid, Carr and Findletter, in the Court of Common Pleas. It being the first time that a trial of the kind had been held in this court, the justices resolved to visit the Lubin studio and gain first-hand knowledge of the subject by viewing the picture. This was done, and it was apparent that the members of the distinguished audience were favorably impressed with the film, Judge Audenreid remarking that it was a beautiful picture. Decision was reserved and the censor brigade, evidently somewhat wary of the outlook, made advances toward peace with the producers.

"We think," said one of them soothingly, "that you people were a trifle too hasty in rushing this matter into the courts. There is every likelihood that a compromise could be reached if it were talked over in detail."

"That," rejoined the Lubin legal representative, "is just where we differ in opinion. There can be no compromise where there is nothing to compromise, which is our contention in this case."

The praise accorded the film by Judge Audenreid found an echo in another quarter very far removed in social, if not business distance, from the judicial bench. For some time past George Balsdon, manager of the V-L-S-E. Boston branch office, has injected a little gaiety into the gloom of the Rhode Island Penitentiary by exhibiting Big Four pictures to the inmates once a week. An enthusiastic reception was given to "Dollars and the Woman" by the prison patrons, one of whom wrote in part to Mr. Balsdon as follows:

"We had the good fortune to see 'Dollars and the Woman.' The boys think it is the best picture they have had. Everybody in the picture worked well. There were no impossibilities, nor was there anything suggestive. I looked around and saw many an eye wet with tears." The writer of the above is said to have developed considerable talent in scenario construction, and with the assistance of sample instructions in the art forwarded him from the V-L-S-E., has high hopes of producing dramas which will earn him recognition as a screen author.

It is a far cry from the judicial bench to the penitentiary, and in fact that "Dollars and the Woman" found appreciation in both quarters furnishes undisputable evidence of the human interest appeal the feature makes to all classes of society.

REMODELS ALHAMBRA THEATER.

Miss Anna Bell Ward, proprietor of the Alhambra theater, Richmond, Ky., is to remodel and enlarge that house. When it is completed it will be one of the most beautiful moving picture theaters in that region. Although the work of improvement is going on there is no cessation in the daily program. A balcony is to be built in, the structure will be lengthened fifty feet, new seats will be installed and a new screen and projection apparatus will be purchased. Miss Ward has sold a half interest in the Alhambra to the Colonial Amusement Company of Lexington, Ky., and the new company is now incorporated for $20,000. The renovated house will be practically fireproof.

OKMULGEE TO HAVE NEW THEATER.

George Kanavuts, owner of the Yale theater, Sapulpa, Okla., and Lust Haniotis of Okmulgee, are soon to erect a moving picture and vaudeville theater in the former city. It is estimated that the new structure will cost $40,000, and will have a seating capacity of $1,500. There will be a stage big enough to accommodate any size road show. The house will be built of fireproof material and will contain all modern conveniences.

RIALTO OPENING APRIL 21.

Owing to delay in construction the Rialto theater, S. L. Rothapfel's new picture house, will not be ready for its premier until April 21. The delay is attributed to the pernicious activities of Oscar Hammerstein, who haled the Rialto folk into court on some trivial claim and caused a suspension of business on the part of the contractors.

Farrar in "Maria Rosa"

Lasky Star Said to Be at Her Best in Third Production from Hollywood Studio.

GERALDINE FARRAR will appear on May 8 in her third Lasky production, entitled "Maria Rosa," according to announcement made recently by the producing company. This is the third of the photoplays Miss Farrar made for the Lasky Company when she was at the studios at Hollywood last summer. In the order of their release the productions are: "Carmen," which created international interest; "Temptation," something of an expose of grand opera conditions in America, and "Maria Rosa," founded on the play of the same name by Guido Marburg and Wallace Gillpatrick.

There is a point of exceptional interest about the release of "Maria Rosa," coming soon after Miss Farrar's marriage to Lou-Tellegen. It was while Miss Farrar, under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, was making this production at the Lasky studios that she first met Lou-Tellegen. In the conferences between the star and producers which prefaced the making of this picture, Lou-Tellegen joined the discussions and gave to Miss Farrar and Mr. De Mille the benefit of his experience with the dramatic version, in which he made his debut on the English-speaking stage. The friendship between Miss Farrar and her future husband began with these discussions.

"Maria Rosa," said by those who have seen it to be the best of the three pictures which Miss Farrar made for the Lasky Company, is a tragedy of Spanish peasant life. The leading role in support of the star will be played by Wallace Reid, who has come rapidly to the front as one of the leading younger men on the screen. The supporting cast also includes Pedro de Cordoba, Ernest Joy, Anita King, Horace B. Carpenter and James Neill. Unlike the fiery character of the irrepressible "Carmen," "Maria Rosa" affords Miss Farrar a role far more sympathetic than the wild Spanish girl, in which she achieved such extraordinary success.

FAMOUS PLAYERS AND LASKY FILMS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Pursuing the policy of international expansion which prompted the sending of E. M. Porter to South America for the purpose of making a survey of conditions, the Famous Players Film Company and Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company have just completed arrangements with the African Film Trust, Ltd., whereby the productions of these concerns will be handled in South Africa by the latter company.

By the terms of this agreement, in which the African company was represented by Max Schlesinger, attorney, of 10 Wall street, New York City, all productions of the Famous Players and Lasky companies made since the formation of these feature concerns will be marketed through the African organization.

Famous Players and Lasky are taking active steps to perfect a great international system of distribution by which every corner of the globe will be methodically reached on a basis that will provide the greatest aggregate following for the productions of these concerns.

With the completion of the arrangements for the distribution of the Famous Players and Lasky productions in Africa, a world-wide distribution system as affecting these two important producing companies has been concluded with the exception of the continent of Asia and a few of the warring European countries.

Famous Players and Lasky films are distributed in England through J. D. Walker World's Films, Ltd., in the United States through Paramount Pictures Corporation, and in South America and Africa through the new channels recently announced.

Little Alice Turner

LITTLE ALICE TURNER, daughter of J. Alan Turner, formerly technical director for Fox, is just twelve years of age, yet she may qualify as a veteran on the legitimate stage, in vaudeville and on the screen. Having had experience in all branches of the profession, Little Alice, with a fine decisiveness for one so young, has chosen acting in pictures. She likes to dance, to swim, to ride and best of all, to act in front of the camera, so a bright career is being planned with just one aim in view—she is going to become a photoplay star.

Alice Turner.

Not many girls of twelve can match the following record of activity: At the age of six appeared in a play with Andrew Mack and in two days learned a part of seventeen "sides;" acted in pictures for the Biograph, Gem, Imp, Rex and Reliance companies and later played at the Academy of Music in "The Bluebird," "The Red Mill," and "Aladin's Lamp." An engagement with "The Charity Girl" in Chicago was followed by experience in posing for fashions and three seasons with the fashion shows at Grand Central Palace and Bamberger's in Newark. Then came a long tour on the Loew Circuit in a monologue; two years of schooling preparatory to another picture engagement, this time with the Thanhouser company. "Gold," "Her Big Brother," and "Arty, the Artist," were the most important of the photoplays in which little Alice appeared in 1915.

For the past six months the youthful actress has been in Kingston, Jamaica, with the Annette Kellermann company under the direction of Herbert Brenon. She was one of the mermaids, did a solo dance in the palace scene and acted several small parts. More than that, Little Alice feels that she has had her first experience in direction, for she was entrusted with the task of arranging the turbans and sashes of more than one hundred natives used in a mob scene. Beauty, intelligence and training are among the assets of this coming star.

A Big Mutual Week

The Program for Week of April 17 Has Many Interesting Features and Single Reels.

MUTUAL releases for the week of April 17 present a wide variety of themes. Comprised of two five act Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, two three and three two-act subjects, seven single reel comedies, the Mutual Weekly and the split reel, "See America First," and Harry Palmer's cartoon comics, offer variety enough to satisfy even the most critical of picture fans to be found.

Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, for the week are "Feathertop" and "Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player," the first from the Gaumont studios and the second a Thanhouser production. "Feathertop," founded partially on Nathaniel Hawthorne's immortal story of the same title, presents Marguerite Courtot as the featured star, in a dual role, supported by Sydney Mason, John Reinhard, Mathilda Baring, James Levering, Gerald Griffin, Charles Graham and others of equal note, several of whom were especially engaged by Director Henry Vernot, director of this production.

"Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player," the second Masterpicture, De Luxe, of the same week, is a timely subject in view of the Shakespearean tercentenary which is now absorbing the nation's dramatic and literary interests. Miss Florence La Badie is featured in this production, supported by an exceptional company of players, headed by Lawrence Swinburne, who gives an interesting portrayal of the Bard of Avon.

"Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player," is not a costume play as the title might imply. A large part of it is of today, with considerable of the story centered in and about a military post along the Mexican border. The production deals with a young married couple—the wife, a student of Shakespeare and having her own views on the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy, and her husband, a young army officer, more interested in his profession than the question of whether Shakespeare or Bacon deserved the credit for the literary masterpieces generally attributed to the former's remarkable brain. The play, or that part of it referring to the Elizabethan rule, has been worked out with Thanhouser fidelity in costuming and locations.

The three-act feature releases for the week include "A Man's Sin," a stirring Thanhouser production featuring Grace De Carlton and Daniel Leighton and a timely drama from the Mustang studios entitled "Realization," with Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh.

Among the two-part offerings are "His Masterpiece," an American, with Edward Coxen and his new leading lady. Lizette Thorne, in the principal roles. "The Girl from Chicago," a detective play from the Thanhouser studios, featuring Gladys Hulette, the diminutive star, and George Marlo.

The laugh-makers for release the week of the 17th include "The Sailor's Smiling Spirit," featuring Walter (Fatty) Hiers, and "Simple Simon's Schooling," with Claude Cooper and Gladys Leslie, released under the Falstaff brand; "Counterfeit Love," featuring Rube Miller, who also directed the piece, and Madge Kirby, and "Slipping It Over on Father," with Rena Rogers, the "little blonde lady of the cinema," and Arthur Moon, a newcomer, both from the Vogue studios; "Number, Please?" starring Carol Halloway and John Sheehan, and "The Bookworm's Blessed Blunders," with Oral Humphrey, "Beauty" comedies, and the Cub comedy entitled "The Conquering Hero," with that funny man, George Ovey.

Mutual Weekly, No. 67, contains a number of interesting pictures of timely topics photographed in all sections of the country along with the several interesting events from the Mexican border, "See America First," includes views of the Continental Divide and Cripple Creek, Colorado's famous mining centre.

SELIG'S GENERAL FILM RELEASES.

Systematically observing the policy instituted by William N. Selig that no thought, care nor expense shall be sacrificed in the production of shorter length films, the Selig Company announces two unusually noteworthy productions for release through General Film service. On Monday, April 24, "The Woman Who Did Not Care," a multiple reel feature drama, will be presented. This drama features Eugenie Besserer, Edith Johnson and Harry Mestayer. The story is an unusual one, having to do with the remorse that comes to a woman who, under a nom de plume conducts a spicy column of society gossip in a newspaper. "The Woman Who Did Not Care" is replete with exciting and unusual situations, beautiful scenic effects and strong action. On Saturday, April 29, "Badgered" will be released through General Film service. Harry Mestayer takes the leading role and is ably supported by Edith Johnson, Al W. Filson and James Bradbury. A year ago William N. Selig stated in an authorized interview: "There will always be a market for picture plays in one, two and three reels." Since that time the policy of the Selig Company has been to make every production better than the previous one. This policy has succeeded, for Selig business in shorter length films has tripled during the past few months. The demand for worthy picture-plays of shorter length cannot be supplied at this time.

H. J. Aldous

H. J. ALDOUS, who for three years has been secretary and treasurer of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, was recently elected secretary and treasurer of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago.

Mr. Aldous will continue to perform his executive duties in the Industrial Moving Picture Company, which is now operated in direct combination with the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, and the commercial and auditing departments of the latter company will be under his personal supervision.

H. J. Aldous.

Mr. Aldous has won an enviable reputation in financial circles and he is an acknowledged authority on credit and factory systems. His early business training with the Merchants Bank of Canada, supplemented by years of active participation in the conduct of big American enterprises, has been strengthened by a close and analytical study of moving picture conditions. He is already an important factor in the industry and is going strong.

Mr. Aldous is a member of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, and is prominent in circles connected with national business organizations.

EMMA K. OSWALD, PICTURE MAKER.

One would think that Miss Oswald would be the last person in the world to produce a picture on tuberculosis; there is nothing about her to suggest any interest in such a topic. If ever there was a picture of perfect plump and rosy health it is this same young successful business woman and artist all in one. She is one of those Los Angeles artists and has a studio on the Pacific Coast, but is at present in New York with her latest picture, "The Invisible Enemy," a five reel offering presenting in story form a lesson to the people on tuberculosis and the cure of it. She has opened an office, E-K-O Film Co., at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

The picture has been reviewed for this paper. It was made with the help and suggestions of Miss Tate, secretary of the Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. In a letter to Miss Oswald, assistant national secretary, Philip P. Jacobs, Ph.D., says:

"I enjoyed the exhibit of your picture, 'The Invisible Enemy,' and wish to congratulate you upon its present general appearance. With the few minor changes that I have suggested and which you are putting into effect, this picture will be of great service in the educational campaign against tuberculosis."

Miss Oswald furnishes another example of what a young woman can accomplish by pluck and perseverance. She has worked up a business of her own and has just turned out a creditable five-reel picture dealing faithfully with a subject that in itself was no small undertaking.

Bluebirds for May

General Manager Hoffman Selects Four Subjects—A Florence Lawrence Production Among Them.

FOUR Bluebirds have been chosen, by General Manager M. H. Hoffman, from a numerous assortment of five-reel offerings, to constitute the May section of the still comparatively new, but firmly established, program. Widely varied are the subjects that introduce new stars to the Bluebird family. On May 1, Ella Hall will be advanced to prominence by being featured with Robert Leonard in "The Crippled Hand."

The ensuing release will be Louise Lovely in "The Full Cup," a play of numerous sensations, provided by Ida May Park's scenario, with Joseph De Grasse the director. This will be Miss Lovely's fourth contribution to Bluebirds and she is called upon to play a "double" of a more difficult and different type than she has been seen in since she began with Bluebirds to appear upon the screen in America.

On May 15, Florence Lawrence returns to the public that made her such a favorite in the earlier years of motion picture progress in "Illusive Isabel," by far the most sensational work turned out thus far on the Bluebird program. It is related that in original form this feature ran to eight reels, because it was difficult to extract the more sensational and gripping incidents until the work was screened. Then the editing reduced it to five reels, encompassing the pick and choice of the excitement that had been involved in the three extra reels.

"A Son of the Immortals" is the release for May 22 with J. Warren Kerrigan making his second appearance as a Bluebird star. His leading woman will be Lois Wilson and again Maude George appears as an adventuress, the type she so excellently fills. Sensationalism is the strong point of "A Son of the Immortals" in which the conquest of a mythical throne is the moving factor. The selection for release the fifth Monday in May has not, as yet, been announced, but there are numerous candidates from which to select.

Famous Players Engage H. R. Durant

Well-Known Fiction Writer and Editor Now Accumulating Material for Future Productions.

FOLLOWING out his determination to maintain without interruption the standard in the selection of screen material which has always distinguished his company's course, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, has determined to concentrate one branch of his activities upon the thorough sifting of the highest grade of modern fiction available for motion picture purposes. To that end he has engaged H. R. Durant and has placed him in charge of the editorial department.

For several years before joining the Munsey staff, Mr. Durant was a well-known free lance writer for the best magazines and has close to two hundred short stories to his credit. His story in McClure's, "The Unknown," still remains the American prize ring classic.

During his five years with Munsey, Mr. Durant was editor of the All-Story Magazine and saw it grow from a circulation of forty thousand to over a million a month. While editor there. Mr. Durant wrote many photoplays for the Reliance-Majestic studios, and his contributions to the legitimate stage were: "A Man and His Mate," produced by H. B. Sire; "The Road to Power," by H. H. Frazee; "Something for Nothing," by Al. H. Woods, and "O'Shea, the Rogue," by Chauncey Olcott.

Mr. Durant has also the unique distinction of being the only American author who ever had a Napoleonic play accepted for a Parisian production. His play, "L'Homme Meme" ("The Man Within") won for him a coveted membership to the Society of Authors and Composers of France.

Thanhouser Benefit Ball

Receipts from New Rochelle Festivities Will Form Nucleus of Fund for Incapacitated Players.

THE nucleus of a very commendable movement for film folk is the forthcoming Thanhouser minstrel show and ball at Germania Hall, New Rochelle, on Thursday, April 27. The proceeds of the affair will make the foundation for the Thanhouser Relief Fund. This fund will be in the custody of a committee of players and will be used for the relief of any players who in the course of their work at the New Rochelle studio are either incapacitated or otherwise in need of aid. The admirable feature of the plan is that the helping hand is not confined to regular workers only. Should an "extra" be injured, or should the plight of anyone who only occasionally engages in the work call for succor, they will be given the same consideration as players who are on the regular payroll of the company. This is entirely separate and apart from any benefits that may accrue to a performer by virtue of accident or liability insurance.

Florence La Badie, escorted by Mayor Griffing of New Rochelle, will head the grand promenade, which will be made up of the film stars who will attend. She will also take part in an old time minstrel torch light parade through the streets of New Rochelle the night before the ball. Gladys Hulette will be there in her usual radiance and other players who will make the ball a memorable occasion are Grace De Carlton, Kathryn Adams, Ethyle Cooke, Carey Hastings, Gladys Leslie, Doris Grey, Isolde Illian and Frances Keyes.

The outlook for a good lump sum to found the fund is cheery. There is a large advance sale of tickets. Perry Horton, chairman of arrangements, promises a big time for the visitors. The show will be a surprise, too. Lindsay Morrison is stage and musical director, and a feature of the evening will be the playing of compositions by Frederick Sullivan, a Thanhouser director. Frank Grimmer and William Swan, respectively, treasurer and secretary of the fund, are hard at work getting things in shape. Captained by Lydia Meade, the prettiest girls available will cater to the guests.

BOARD OF REVIEW SEES "RAMONA."

On Tuesday evening preceding the day of formal public showing of "Ramona" at the Forty-fourth Street theater the National Board of Review and its friends were the guests of the W. H. Clune Film Company. Cranston Brenton, chairman of the board, made an address to the audience of 500 just before the opening of the performance.

"It is a pleasure to welcome tonight the members and guests of the National Board who have gathered to see a picture which marks the very highest development in the motion picture art," said Mr. Brenton in part. "We have had very few pictures that are anywhere near in the same class. We are to see a production that stands for all those things that the National Board is trying to develop. This great voluntary board seeks to act not as censors but merely to review, to advise, giving constructive opinion, trying to voice public opinion.

"There is a menace to the whole motion picture industry of the nation, meaning to all the people, in the feeling that is growing in favor of legalized censorship of motion pictures. If this feeling grows and spreads the finest efforts of the producer will come to nothing because the men who are responsible for the financial success of such pictures as we are to see tonight will not risk encountering ignorance and prejudice, and consequently some of the greatest works of literature will be kept from the screen and the public.

"'Ramona' is the type of picture for which the constructive work of this board stands. It is for the encouragement of this type of picture that the National Board exists—and also to protect the trade against the sort of picture that brings discredit upon the whole industry."

"Salvation Joan"

Vitagraph V-L-S-E's Seven-Part Story Featuring Edna May Is a Strong Subject and Played by an Unusual Cast.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE is nothing in the work of Edna May in "Salvation Joan," the Vitagraph V-L-S-E seven-part subject, to indicate that it marks the screen debut of the star. She holds her own with a star cast, for "Salvation Joan" might have been written around Harry Morey, L. Rogers Lytton or Dorothy Kelley—not forgetting Donald Hall or little Bobby Connelly. The one-time famous musical comedy artist can act; she plays naturally, without affectation. A decade in the lap of luxury has sharpened her faculty for portrayal; rubbing elbows with culture and wealth has not diminished her sympathy with those less fortunate. It has enhanced it if we may judge her by her performance. Marguerite Bertsch has written a story that gives Miss May splendid opportunity to portray life in surroundings that are not strange to her, that are an every-day matter, and also in an environment of the Lady Bountiful, the one who does good works for the pleasure of doing it. Wilfred North has finely directed the production.

Harry Morey has a big part, one that he fits to a t. The revelation of his identity at the closing constitutes one of the surprises of the drama. He is accepted through four-fifths of the story for what he purports to be—a denizen of the underworld, a companion of crooks, a potential crook himself, one of those men balancing on the thin edge that divides the straightforward from the vicious, one who through slight association with a good woman seems to have been drawn toward the former.

L. Rogers Lytton as Ralston, the secret agent of a mythical government, adds to his list of successes in similar roles. His Ralston is dominating, masterful, never seemingly more at home than when deep in intrigue whether this be an affair of politics or of the heart—the personification of suavity or of brutality as the exigencies of the moment may require. Dorothy Kelly, the young wife of the diplomat, plays with a strength disproportionate to her youth. It is an emotional part, that of Mrs. Ellison, and she skilfully portrays it. Too much lip rouge, however, kills illusion in close-ups. Donald Hall is the convincing husband who is compelled to go away on government business, leaving his wife to the untender attentions of Ralston, his pride preventing him from warning her of danger. Little Bobby Connelly is great—that's all we've got to say about him. The types are selected with care.

With the exception perhaps of one spot, the interest holds tight. The culminating events of the house party, where Ralston has laid plans to break open the safe and extract therefrom the papers of Ellison, seem extended—there is a feeling of absence of directness. The tension is attenuated.

There are many scenes of strength, some that stir, others that move. The riot in the mission, when the thugs set out to break up the agency that is so rapidly depleting the dive downstairs, will thrill. The denouement is real drama. It is the interview between Joan and "Bill," now plain secret service man, following the exciting attack on the safe, the arrest of the strong-arms and the killing of Ralston. It is the big situation of the story, and it is splendidly told.

"Peg o' the Ring"

Promising First Installment of New Serial by Universal, Featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A SCENE occurs in the second reel of the first episode of "Peg o' the Ring," which at once arouses great interest. In the middle of a love scene, the heroine, whose mother was lacerated by an angry leopard before her birth, is seized with a mad impulse to rend and tear everybody and everything in sight. She scratches her lover's face and rushes frantically through the house and gardens attacking all who come in her way. She at length falls in a faint and is rushed on board a passenger train, which the hero pursues in an automobile.

The theme of prenatal influence has been used effectively in fiction, perhaps the most notable instance being in "Elsie Venner," by Oliver Wendell Holmes. It makes a weird, uncanny motive and one that is certain to hold the interest closely.

Grace Cunard appears twice in this number, first as La Belle, the unfortunate wild animal queen, and later as the daughter. Francis Ford appears as the hero. He falls in love with Peg, without knowledge of her history. It will be interesting to see how the complications are worked out, as to all present appearances they are children of the same father.

La Belle, the girl's mother, was secretly married to the owner of the circus, portrayed by Mark Fenton. After her injuries in the claws of the leopard, the child is born in a hospital and the mother dies. The father fails to divulge his parentage and Peg is raised by an old clown, a friend of the mother's. The father marries a second time, and twenty years later the son falls in love with the daughter. The second wife, having found a letter left by La Belle, knows her husband's secret.

The circus settings are pleasing and the first reel is entirely devoted to circus stunts and some amusing comedy.

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, who have appeared in other successful serials, are strong in the leading roles. Others in the cast are Mark Fenton, Peter Gerald and Jean Hathaway.

Biograph Comedy and Drama

"The Spring Chicken," a Three-Part Production Made by Del Henderson—"Celeste" in Two Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"The Spring Chicken."

GENERALLY staying on the right side of the line separating the merely ridiculous from the humorous, "The Spring Chicken," produced by Del Henderson when he was a member of the Biograph Company, is a lively three-part farce-comedy, brightly acted. The plot is almost foolishly fantastic; but a picture of this description depends least upon the story and most upon the comic quality of the situations and the acting. That the experiences of "The Spring Chicken," played by Dave Morris, and those of the burlesque company, headed by Gertrude Bambrick, are entertaining enough to assure the moderate success of the production is undeniable.

The odd nature of the central character is accounted for by the strange influences following his birth when he is placed in an incubator along with several dozen eggs that are being hatched. From infancy he is insane on the subject of chickens and in maturity becomes dangerously susceptible to the charms of young women. With the appearance of a burlesque company in town, the peculiar youth strays far from the path of caution, as marked for a man possessing a wife unwilling to forego her rights.

Played in the spirit of burlesque and with many really humorous bits of incidental business, contributed by members of a large cast, scenes in the lobby of a hotel, on a bathing beach and even more particularly at the theater during the staging of the performance, are certain to draw thoughtless laughter. Miss Bambrick, who in this picture bears a striking resemblance to Mabel Normand, heads a most attractive assemblage of show girls, revealed in varied costumes of alluring design. "The Spring Chicken" was adequately staged, carefully directed and in all respects should make an acceptable comedy offering.

"Celeste."

The larger part of this two-reel drama was enacted in choice locations on the California coast, and the production profits immensely in consequence. Long stretches of rock-bound beach, when perfectly photographed, as in the present instance, never lose their charm. And the story of "Celeste" requires just such a fishing village as that indicated in the backgrounds selected by Director Walter Coyle.

Washed ashore on a raft, a little girl, the one survivor of a wreck, is rescued by the fisherfolk and reared among them, in ignorance of her father living in Paris. Of course, she has two admirers, a dissolute fisherman and a worthy young artist who visits the little village in search of inspiration. The rivalry between these two results in a struggle on the edge of a cliff over which the artist is hurled but not killed, for the conclusion requires a reunion in Paris, with the girl, her artist-lover and her father in happy accord.

Vola Smith as Celeste, Jack Mulhall as the artist, Ivan Christie as the fisherman, and Charles Perley as the father, are the chief figures in a smoothly-developed photoplay of sustained interest.

A STORY of an Alaskan dance hall is bound to contain much that is unpleasant, much that is unwholesome; but it has also the mystic charm of a life into which few of us have entered. The cast appearing in this five-part production made by the Peerless Co. consists of Robert Warwick, Frances Nelson, Leonore Harris, Alec. B. Francis, and Albert S. Hart, all of whom interpret the roles allotted to them in a satisfactory manner.

According to the story by Emmett Campbell Hall, Robert Hendricks, a wealthy young man, in frequenting a Bohemian resort, falls in love with a dancer of loose morals, who, left alone in his apartment one day, calls in her pals to help her rob Hendrick's safe. His return earlier than expected is the cause of a struggle in which the lover of the dancer is killed accidentally by her hand. The scene then shifts to Alaska, where Myra the dancer has opened a dance hall in a mining camp. A young girl who has in some way happened into her clutches is the one beautiful thing in sight, and after a series of adventures in which a big Swede tries to buy the girl from Myra, Hendricks appears on the scene, and the story closes with the death of both Myra and the Swede and the betrothal of Velma, the beautiful stranger of the camp, and Hendricks. For a story of this kind the production will be found entertaining. The action of the play does not flag, and the interest is maintained throughout. Emile Chautard directed the picture.

"The Shadow of a Doubt."

Produced by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, Shannon Fyfe's story of how two brothers, by force of circumstances, follow widely divergent paths, makes a favorable impression. The photography is not all that one could wish for, but the development of the story is such as to awaken thought on the subject of environment and the influence of circumstances.

Carlyle Blackwell is featured in this five-part production with Jean Shelby, George Anderson, Lillian Allen and Frank Beamish in the supporting cast. The story opening in an English orphan asylum shows the older of two boys being adopted by a rich but childless couple, who educate him and eventually leave him their wealth. The younger brother plods along on the lower level and after marriage sails for America, where he is unable to get work. Driven to desperation by surrounding circumstances, he yields one night to an invitation of some crooks to help rob a safe, is caught and sentenced to prison, leaving an invalid wife to exist on charity. It so happens that the wife of his brother, who is now a lawyer in New York, takes pity on the poor woman, not knowing of the family relationship, and helps to keep her alive with nourishing food. At a later date, on the release from prison of the younger brother, the wife of the lawyer borrows money for the performance of an operation on the sick woman, a circumstance which leads to a confusing situation. The close of the story shows the one brother arrested by the other in the act of robbing his safe, and the recognition by a locket containing a photograph of the mother of the men. Ray Physioc directed the production.

"The Invisible Enemy"

E-K-O Film Company Presents Five-Reel Tuberculosis Picture for Use In Stimulating the Fight Against the Dread Disease.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WHILE this film produced by the E-K-O Film Company has many points of merit, notably the drawing of public attention to the necessity of taking every precaution against the dread disease whose germs breed in countless numbers in dirty unventilated living quarters, the handling of such an important subject, should be done by experts in order that the force of the truths intended to be conveyed may reach their goal. Also, in order to carry a five-part production based on the idea of prevention of disease to a successful climax, it is essential that the story of the film be made entertaining, and above all that its construction be above criticism.

Unfortunately, in the present instance, after one reel of events that interest by their pathos, the remainder of the production resolves itself into a series of scenes that fail to interest either by way of dramatic value or by consistency of development. A number of individually important items such as the contrast between the growth of a plant on well fertilized soil and one reared on barren soil, have been presented indiscriminately throughout the production. "The Invisible Enemy," although it cannot be denied that it has its mission, embodies a clumsy presentation of a subject of tremendous importance. A careful reconstruction of sub-titles will help to clarify the intention.

"Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque on Carmen"

The Long-Awaited Essanay-V-L-S-E Four-Part Subject Fails to Yield the Usual Chaplin Spark.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

VERY likely a goodly proportion of the legions of Chaplin's admirers will be disappointed in "Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque on Carmen," the four-part Essanay subject issued through the V-L-S-E on April 10. It is the first release of the comedian's for many months, it is doubtful if there ever has been a picture about which exhibitors for so long a time have been on the qui vive, or one that by and large has been so thoroughly publicized. Adding to the curiosity of every one who knows films has been the knowledge that the last three Chaplin subjects, taking those as an example, have been of unusual Chaplin merit. It is only necessary to name "Shanghaied," "A Night Out" and "The Bank" and you will see sparkle the eyes of the Chaplinite.

The "Burlesque on Carmen," as we said, is in four reels—and therein lies one part of the trouble. Were the subject in two reels or in 2,500 feet it would be vastly stronger. In the fight near the close between Don Jose and his rival one situation is plainly duplicated—the inference being that the stunt was done twice that the better of the two might be chosen.

There are laughs, to be sure, but they are far apart. There is an absence of the snap, the slambang to which we are accustomed. Chaplin opens his bag of tricks, and so long as only one of a kind is extracted, all is well. It is only when two of a kind are drawn that the fount of mirth runs dry. Edna Purviance as Carmen has never figured to greater advantage than she does in this role. She is given abundant opportunity and she goes to it.

In the final scenes it is a novelty to see Chaplin in tragedy. In the last meeting slapstick is for the moment laid aside and we see the apostle of broad farce in a really serious role. And finely he plays it. It is another demonstration—just as in one of the situations in "The Bank"—that the comedian is not limited to the comedy division of portrayal.

motion picture audiences are with her in this production. She combines youth, beauty and fearlessness in charming proportions. Of the work of Victor Moore nothing more need be said than that he is at his best in this film. He manages to get into complicated situations consisting of strange mixtures of humor and pathos and he utilizes his opportunities to the utmost. Humor and sensation are the two dominating characteristics in this film and they make the feature highly acceptable to every audience.

The story is quite simple, but it is not at all hackneyed and it leads to a number of amusing "denouements." The father of the daring auto girl gives a splendid portrayal of the inventor, who absorbed in his work loses all sense of proportion and even responsibility. Exciting scenes abound; they all grow out of the plot quite naturally and the law of dramatic probabilities is never flagrantly violated. The scenes showing the race and its thrilling incidents will hold every audience. Altogether "The Race" deserves a good place in the galaxy of Lasky successes.

Blue Blood and Red

Lively Five-Reel Fox Comedy in Buckeroo Backgrounds—Good Offering of Well-Known Kind.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is fun and good hearty laughter in these five reels by the Fox Company, "Blue Blood and Red." It is a kind of picture that has been put on often, but is quite enjoyable. The people like to see the good old things again, and a large audience at the Academy of Music in New York City showed quite plainly that they liked and approved of this picture. It is old only in kind, not in the matter it is filled with—not in the jokes nor the incidents; but in the general outline of the plot.

George Walsh and Doris Pawn have the leads, the former as an athletic, but not studious, son of blue blood, and the latter as the charming daughter of a rich ranch owner—red blood. George gets relieved from study by the decision of the faculty; they think it not worth while to teach him longer. His father gives him another boost. He takes Peterkin, the butler, and goes west as fast as his high-power auto can take him, and arrives at a ranch. Our good old friend, Alkali Ike, is cook at the ranch, and from that point he and Peterkin help each other about the ranch. The foreman of the ranch, who has been first in the graces of Doris, begins to get sore, and as George shows his ability to ride and begins to cut him out, he gets sorer.

The foreman has a friend, a gambler. The two cook up a scheme to steal a lot of money and get George accused. It works so well that, in a short time, each of the ruffians has killed the other and the buckeroos have a noose around the head of George and are going to hang him. The girl hears and comes in the auto he has taught her to drive; but she doesn't rescue him. He has already attended to that.

It is the unexpected twists and sharp turns in it that please, and these are intermixed with the kind of stuff that Alkali Ike and Peterkin can do to make us laugh. It is quite successful. R. A. Walsh directed it.

"Ramona"

The Big Clune Production, With Stage Accessories, Begins New York Run Before Enthusiastic Houses.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

SO MANY elements enter into the production of "Ramona" as it is shown at the Forty-fourth Street theater in New York that it is not possible with accuracy to resolve them into their component parts, to set apart to each its just proportion of the sum. In the first place, there is the picture, twelve reels in length, made by the W. H. Clune Film Company, under the direction of Donald Crisp. Then there is the musical accompaniment, selected by General Manager Lloyd Brown, arranged by Emil Berman and executed by more than two score musicians under the baton of Carlos De Elinor, the young chief of the orchestra of Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles and also the musical conductor of the Clune forces. There is the staging, the three great atmosphere-creating sets shown before the prologue and the first and second acts, peopled by types of the period, Indians, musicians, singers. Through it all could be seen the hand of Mr. Brown, to whose keen showman's mind Mr. Clune gives credit for the inception and execution of the project as a whole and of the many details which go to make this presentation of a motion picture a real theatrical entertainment as contrasted with the showing of straight pictures. It is no exaggeration; it is expressing a plain fact, to say that "Ramona" as it is seen at the Forty-fourth Street marks a distinct advance in the motion picture industry.

Aside from the embellishments and taking the subject solely as a motion picture "Ramona" is a faithful portrayal of Helen Hunt Jackson's story of the Mission Indians of Southern California. It was a story with a purpose, that of bringing to the attention of the American people the injustice with which the Indians had been treated by the government at Washington. Through it all runs a romance filled with heart interest. Of the spectacular, the melodramatic, there is not much. It is a simple tale of life, from 1845 to 1881, staged in a picturesque country and treating of the love of Alessandro, a full-blooded Indian, and Ramona, the daughter of a Scotch father and an Indian mother.

Allessandro and Ramona dominate the picture. Ramona, the daughter of Angus Phail, is portrayed by Adda Gleason. Hers is a personality that grows in strength. She has marked faculty for inspiring sympathy, she has magnetism, charm. She seems always to do the right thing in the best way. She has the fire of youth, the light and speedy foot characteristic of the Indian, the tenderness and the affection of the white. Matching Miss Gleason in art is Monroe Salisbury, the Alessandro. Mr. Salisbury's portrayal of the head of the sheep shearers is of great force. He has the dignity of the red man, the red man broadened by the education of the white man.

Scene from "Ramona" (Clune).

His delineation of the creeping insanity, the result of multiplying injustice, is finely drawn.

Richard Sterling and Mabel Van Buren are Angus Phail and Ramona Gonzaga. Mr. Sterling is equally effective whether portraying the youthful skipper in love with the first Ramona or the broken, gray-bearded husband of the Indian. Miss Van Buren, too, as maiden and matron, shows by contrast the marked change in the spirit of the blithe, sunny coquette when disappointments transform her into a saddened woman. The scenes where she takes to her heart the infant Ramona brought to her by Phail contribute to the gayety and also to the pathos of the story.

So many characters enter into the making of what practically is three pictures in one that space forbids the extended mention deserved. Among the notable performances are those of H. M. Best as Father Salvierderra, Miss Lurline Lyons as Senora Moreno, Red Wing as the squaw wife of Phail, Alice Morten Otten as Starlight, the Indian maid of the first Ramona; Anna Lehr as the four-year-old Ramona, N. De Brullier as the grown Felipe, E. Valencia as Juan Canito and Mrs. Davenport as Marda. The name of James Needham on the program cannot conceal the well-known figure of Director Crisp in the role of the brutal Jim Farrar, the murderer of Alessandro. Farrar is one of the few "heavies" in the story, and Mr. Crisp makes the character stand out. From the beginning to end "Ramona" is naturally acted by players chosen with unusual skill for their fidelity to "type."

Scene from "Ramona" (Clune).

As to the stage settings which precede the showing of the prologue and the first and second acts. The first represents the entrance to the Santa Barbara mission, the second shows the south veranda of the Moreno hacienda, the third is a remarkably picturesque canyon in towering San Jacinto. The music, which in itself is a great factor in the entertainment, has been chosen with an eye and an ear to the Spanish, the Indian and the Hawaiian—as in the Mission Indians there runs a strain of the Kanaka due to intermarriages by the natives of the Sandwich Islands brought in the old days to the whaling station near San Diego. The singing of the sunrise song as on the screen we see the members of the Moreno household at their windows will linger in the memory.

The photography, for which Enrico Vallejo is responsible, is of remarkable quality. Much of it is stereoscopic. In distance, depth and composition it is unusual. There are many big fields which stirred the fifteen hundred in the house Wednesday night to enthusiasm. The scenes of the sheep—thousands of them—were educational in themselves.

As to the staging, it may suffice to say that ten acres were devoted to the sets. Just to name two there are the Santa Barbara mission and the village surrounding it and the great Moreno homestead with its spacious patio.

"The Dumb Girl of Portici"

Anna Pavlowa Appears in Seven-Part Adaptation of the Opera, "Masaniello," Made by the Smalleys for Universal.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"THE Dumb Girl of Portici," introducing Anna Pavlowa and her ballet Russe to the screen, is a magnificent production that cannot be judged fairly by ordinary motion picture standards. Beyond a doubt it is the most artistically ambitious and in some respects the most notable contribution of the Universal Company to the screen, and this is said with due consideration for several memorable productions of an earlier date. The interest attaching to the appearance of a dancer of such acknowledged pre-eminence as Pavlowa is, of course, paramount, and it is eminently fitting that she should be presented in a sympathetic interpretation of Auber's opera "Masaniello." Strictly speaking, this is a photo-opera rather than a photoplay and should be considered in that light.

Lois Weber wrote the scenario and no doubt assisted Phillips Smalley in producing scenes that frequently are marvels of beauty, and remarkably successful in creating the illusion of life in Italy in the seventeenth century when the inhabitants were crushed under the rule of Spanish Viceroys. Pavlowa is a dancer and not an actress; her perfectly fluent movements almost demand a musical accompaniment, and the colorful romance of a story such as we find here. Seemingly, the intention of the producers was to catch the mood of Auber's famous work and to give to the picture something of the aesthetic appeal which marked the original, a purpose wonderfully well seconded by the Russian dancer. For the role of Fenella, the dumb girl of Portici, the Universal company could have made no better selection than Pavlowa; likewise it would have been difficult to find a more suitable vehicle for a display of the strange personality and extraordinary grace of the dancer. She would be quite lost in a story of so-called modern realism.

The drama in "The Dumb Girl of Portici" is the drama of a tragic story intended to be presented in conjunction with emotionally appealing music, such as that arranged by Adolph Schmidt, and with a sumptuous scenic investiture, such as the Smalleys have supplied with scarcely a flaw. In the costuming of the many characters, in the locations for the quaint fishing village, in scenes in the public square of Naples, in a dungeon, or in the palace of the Viceroy, one finds the same care for accurate detail and a disregard for expenditures. Apparently, everything humanly possible was done to make the picture a correct transcript of the scenes Auber had in mind when he wrote the opera. And in the selection of the cast care was exercised in finding suitable types, Rupert Julian playing Masinello with cantagious dash and spirit, Douglas Gerrard giving an altogether satisfactory interpretation of Alphonso, and Edna Maison, perhaps the least successful of any of the important players, appearing as the Princess Elvira.

Preceding the opening of the story proper, Pavlowa is effectively introduced in a dance given in conventional ballet costume, a pleasing exhibition that, at least, suggests the quality of the dancer's wonderful art. The first two reels, somewhat burdened by sub-titles necessary for the presentation of the characters and an explanation of conditions existing in Italy at the time, move rather slowly; but there is a distinct turn for the better when attention is focused on the love affair developing between Fenella and Alphonso, son of the duke. Dancing on the beach of the fishing village with Alphonso among the admiring spectators, Pavlowa is a fascinating figure, and very sincere in her playing of the scene in the woods culminating in her surrender to the ardent love of the young nobleman. The advisability of retarding the progress of the story to present the Ballet Russe is questionable from a dramatic standpoint, though the dance is justified as a gorgeous spectacle.

Cast into a dungeon and flogged on the day that her lover marries a princess and all Naples joins in the celebration, Mlle. Pavlowa is distinctly appealing in a succession of scenes presenting some of the most effective dramatic contrasts in the picture. The wedding festivities are an excuse for Bacchanalian revelries, elaborately staged and giving a plausible excuse for the viceroy's increasing the already burdensome tax to meet his extravagant tastes.

During preceding reels the audience has been acquainted with the restlessness of the populace, swayed by Masaniello, Fenella's brother, so the uprising, resulting in a raid on the Viceroy's palace and the sacking of the city has been adequately forecast. These scenes of rioting, the burning of the buildings and the ruthless slaughter of innocent women and children, all superbly produced, account for the most sensational moments in the production. There is a truly tragic climax when Fenella, in attempting to save Alphonso from the murderous assault of her brother, is fatally stabbed.

That the photography in this picture and the tinting and toning of the scenes are of the best, need scarcely be mentioned, for in their insistence upon artistic workmanship, the Smalleys need give precedence to no producers in America. Presented with an adequate musical accompaniment, "The Dumb Girl of Portici" will prove an artistic treat for cultivated audiences.

"The Mishaps of Musty Suffer"

Review of Nos. 8, 9 and 10, Which Complete George Kleine's Famous Comedy Series, the Laugh-Breaking Record Being Sustained Until the Final Fade-Out.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"JUST Imagination" is the title of No. 8 in the George Kleine series of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," and in it Harry Watson, Jr., rushes us through a whirl of amazing happenings that are brimming with laughter. These happenings are so unusual, so strangely weird at times, that they remind us of the tales in the Arabian Nights.

Musty Suffer has just succeeded in liberating himself from hard work on the rock pile when, in answer to his wish for a good job, a strange being—all tramp save the coryphee costume around his middle—springs from nowhere and puts him in touch with Doctor Hickory and Doctor Nut, specialists in imagination, who are represented in the flesh by Dan Crimmins and H. H. McCollum. What these worthies do to poor Musty soon makes him a fit subject for a nut factory. He eats and drinks, yet does neither; and he is convinced that he has slept 12 hours, though he has never had a wink. He watches the chairs and table and the bed in his room engage joyfully in a waltz or jig, and soon becomes so accustomed to his surroundings that he can sit on a large block of ice in a room and experience all the exhilariation of a sleigh ride, not excepting the merry tininnabulations of the sleigh bells.

But these are only trifles. We also see him play a game of pool and make the most dfficult shots, although our mortal eyes fail to catch sight of the table, the balls or the cue, just as we see him marking the score, but fail to see the figures. And then, exhausted with his efforts, he and the two doctors, who have initiated him in these mysteries, help themselves to liquid refreshments with jovial good humor, although we ordinary mortals are unable to see the glass or liquor, or where they come from.

When the famous specialist shows Musty a glimpse of his future wife, he comes back to earth with the exclamation: "No, it wasn't a dream. Just imagination!"

No. 9 of the series bears the title "Out of Order," in which Musty appears with his wishing horseshoe. Here he wishes himself into the trying activities of the Busy Bee Amusement Arcade, of which Dan Crimmins is the boss; Della Connors, the ticket taker; H. H. McCollum, Prof. Hypno, and Mayfield Moree, the bouncer.

As for Musty, he is man of all work. He is a spieler of no mean order, an attendant in the shooting gallery, a shoeblack and heaven knows what else!

In the shooting gallery one of the marksmen mistakes Musty's face for the target and shoots him in the jaw. After violent efforts and contortions Musty succeeds in coughing up the bullet—just like that! A cripple, who berates Musty for using white paint instead of blacking on his shoes, is mollified by a whack on his sound leg with his own crutch. The escalator used to convey patrons upstairs to the theater and the manner of its working furnishes wild merriment. So does the manner of bouncing the unwary customer who attempts to beat his way into the show.

"Coming Down" is the tenth and last of the series, and it is one of the merriest of the lot. The scene is the same as in No. 9, with the same principals, only that H. H. McCollum appears as Woof Woof, the wild man, while Wm. Thomas, Jr., appears as Leonarde, the lion, the merry antics in which the wild man, the lion and Musty take part cannot fail to evoke prolonged laughter from young and old. I think that this film will prove the most delightful one of the series for children. Adults will make merry over it, too; but the children will go into ecstasies over it, and it should be especially advertised for them.

I have seldom laughed more heartily over anything than at the Hindoo Spot Remover in this reel. I shall not spoil the laugh it will bring by any explanation.

"The Gay Lord Waring"

J. Warren Kerrigan Is Starred in Bluebird Version of Story by Houghton Townley.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WITHOUT being in any respect a notable picture, "The Gay Lord Waring," made into a Bluebird Photoplay by Otis Turner from a scenario by F. McGrew Willis, is acceptable entertainment. Perhaps it would be yet more acceptable if the sub-titles were fewer in number and less wordy, for the meaning of the scenes is reasonably clear and does not call for an extraordinary amount of printed explanation. At all events there will be no cause for an audience to complain of a plot not easily comprehended.

The most exceptional twist in the story concerns an agreement between Lord Arthur Waring and his half-brother, Mark, whereby Lord Arthur offers his life as security for a loan of $100,000, the understanding being that if he is unable to return the money with interest at the end of six months, he will commit suicide, thereby transferring the coveted title to Mark. This odd contract is accounted for by Lord Arthur's determination to raise money for the care of an injured girl, whose father is thought to be unable to afford expensive medical treatment. Obviously, the predicament of a penniless man, who sees no way of escaping the forfeiture of his life, is likely material for the creation of suspense, that with a little skillful handling may be maintained almost to the concluding scene.

Not until the last reel is well underway does the audience guess at the events devised for the salvation of Lord Arthur, and then the spectacular force with which everything happens prohibits a lessening of interest. With the expiration of his contract only a few hours off, the young lord tries his fortune in a gambling house and loses; he rejects the offer of Countess Imani to sell herself to a money lender, and is prepared to fulfill the bargain when kindly providence comes to his aid. He rescues the crippled girl from a fire in which her miserly father is killed, and later receives the not unpleasant news that Mark has been hurled from a carriage and mortally wounded.

Scenes in the burning building and the accidents resulting in the injury of Helene and the death of Mark, are parts of the picture deserving particular mention. In its entirety, the production was capably produced and intelligently acted by Mr. Kerrigan, Lois Wilson, Maud George, H. Holland and Bertram Grassby.

"The Eternal Grind"

Mary Pickford Is Seen in Interesting Five-Part Famous Players Subject Treating of the Toilers.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players released on April 10 "The Eternal Grind," a five-part subject written by William H. Clifford and featuring Mary Pickford. John O'Brien has well staged this story of the tenements—of toil and struggle and temptation on the one side, of avarice and worse on the other. It is a simple human story of today, and as such will have interest for those on both sides of the line separating the very poor and the very rich. The characters and the situations have been drawn without exaggeration.

Miss Pickford has the role of Mary, one of three sisters, all employed in a sweatshop, which is reproduced on no small scale. Mary follows the straight path. She tries, and for a time fails, to keep Jane from going contrary to it, and also fights to keep alive Amy, who has fallen a victim to long hours and lack of ventilation. Miss Pickford has a part in which she perfectly fits.

There is a lighter phase to this story of grind. That is the love of Mary and Owen Wharton, the latter of whom, a settlement worker, in disagreement with his grasping father, secures work in the shop where Mary is employed. Wharton is played by John Bowers, a youngster of wholesome appearance. Ernest Wharton, the elder brother, is played by Robert Cain. Mr. Cain makes an intersting deceiver. Ernest is let eventually to see the light through the persuasion of the revolver Mary has taken from the hand of Jane, thereby precipitating a marriage and preventing a murder. This is one of the sterner situations, another is the colloquy between Mary and the elder Wharton, who when he pleads with the young woman to come to his home and save the life of his son is met with a refusal, justified by Wharton's previous disregard of Mary's plea to help her invalid sister. The employer promises a new factory and higher wages and Mary goes to her lover's side. J. Albert Hall is Wharton, the unpopular capitalist, and he gives a strong performance.

"Bonds of Deception"

A Three-Part American Based on Story of Unusual Character Features Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of this production was written by Kenneth Clarke and is an interesting one and considerably out of the ordinary. A fine cast has been intrusted with the characterization including Winnifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen, Dick La Reno, and George Field.

As the story runs the son of Major Baring, after having been sent west to start life anew, commits a crime for which he is sentenced to a long term in prison. The pretty wife of Will Baring and beloved of her father-in-law is kept in ignorance of her husband's disgrace. The solicitation of the old man for the happiness of the innocent party who, if she knew the truth, would be a sharer in the unhappiness caused by her husband's crime, is splendidly portrayed, and much credit is due Dick La Reno for his impersonation of the character of Major Baring.

An opportunity to blot forever out of the woman's life the shadow that menaced her happiness presents itself when in the list of those killed in a railroad wreck the major finds a name similar to the one adopted by his son on his removal to the west. Calling in the editor of one of the city papers he persuades him to print an announcement of his son's death. Later the editor falls in love with the woman, and a strained situation arises on account of his knowledge of a circumstance of which she is ignorant. The actual death of the convict clears the situation.

that saving grace, that rare good quality, originality. Though the development is along familiar lines, there is a praiseworthy attempt to present a new characterization, a relief from the stale and hackneyed. But it would fail without Fairbanks in the title role. He is the only one who could put over his own play, as it is decidedly weak in other characterization than his own. Pretty Bessie Love, for instance, has almost nothing to do but roll her lovely eyes and submit to being hauled around roughly from beginning to end.

Mr. Fairbanks is very intense, and he is almost as strenuous as Ex-President Teddy, but he should give the girl a chance to do something other than adore him and throw a little opportunity in the way of his faithful support. His theme is all right—it is delightfully altruistic—but it quickly fades, like a morning star, when Phoebus Apollo Fairbanks brings his spotlight into view. The story moves swiftly, and its large cavalry action toward the close suggests what may be going on this moment in Mexico. The types are all good and the tout ensemble so satisfactory, that the story will probably win, but it is all Phoebus Apollo Fairbanks.

"His Wife's Mistake.

"His Wife's Mistake" confirms opinion expressed long ago that Roscoe Arbuckle is a whole play in himself. He has caught the idea of what gets the laugh and has developed it to a fine art. Yet all that he does is so intelligently performed that there is no evidence of effort. To the contrary, it has the appearance of spontaneity so rare in comedy of any kind. Nothing stagey, nothing artificial, mars his interpretation of stupidity, and nothing that offends. Even the farce has a story, and the concluding scenes are of a decorative wealth rarely seen in serious drama. "His Wife's Mistake" will rank high among the best of its kind.

Margaret Gibson in "The Leopard's Bride."

The charming Horsley (Mutual) actress is making a tremendous success for herself in her interpretation of "Nadje" in the Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe Edition, "The Leopard's Bride."

Miss Gibson has been considered most charming in "Rag" or sympathy roles. She has been seen most frequently in tense ingenue leads, and her many friends will be delighted to see her in her new type of characterization.

"The Leopard's Bride" gives ample opportunity for the expression of the talents of William J. Clifford and Nan Christy, who appears in Miss Gibson's support. It also features the Bostock animals.

"Doctor Neighbor"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Features Hobart Bosworth in Story Dealing with Medical Ethics.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS subject takes up in pictorial form the mooted question as to whether a doctor should under any circumstances take the life of a patient in order to save unnecessary suffering, when death is but a matter of time, or the patient doomed to a shattered mentality in case of recovery.

The story is written by Agnes Hay and is enacted by a good cast, which includes besides Hobart Bosworth, in the name part, Dorothy Davenport, Gretchen Lederer, Emory Johnson, Adele Farrington, Charles Hickman and Margaret Whistler.

Dealing as it does with the problem of human suffering, it contains many scenes that are far from cheerful, and yet the theme is presented in a manner that avoids skillfully the merely sordid or depressing.

Doctor Neighbor is the guardian of Hazel Rogers, a young heiress. Though he himself is in love with her, he stands back when she gives her hand in marriage to a younger lover.

Scene from "Doctor Neighbor" (Universal).

The latter proves later that his love was largely inspired by a desire to gain her fortune. But the vital feature of the plot is reached when the young wife meets with an automobile accident. This scene is well staged and furnishes about the only dramatic episode in the first four reels.

An injury to the spinal column makes it problematical whether the girl will live, but it is understood that in case she does her mind will be gone. The doctor refuses to bring about her death, in spite of her frequent entreaties. The nurse, her dearest friend, administers the fatal overdose of morphine which ends her misery. The last scenes, when the doctor is on trial and the nurse confesses to clear him, are impressively handled.

This is very interesting as a study of medical ethics. The plot moves a little slowly at first and the minor characters are rather shadowy for the reason that they have but little to do.

"Feathertop"

An Attractive Five-Part Production for the Program of the Mutual Masterpictures de Luxe.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THIS picture is not as might at first be supposed an adaptation of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Feathertop." It is merely a pretty story written by Paul M. Bryan, which found its origin in the predilections of three brothers, and its main thread in the love story of Elsie, the pretty daughter of one of the brothers. Elsie, the daughter of the brother who loved flowers and chose the life of a horticulturist, during her first visit to the home of her uncle who is a banker in the city, sends to her country lover a copy of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Feathertop," and later when her father has died of sorrow at her careless manner of living in the city, the reading of the story of "Feathertop" paves the way for a thorough realization of the similarity of her unscrupulous city lover to the man with the pumpkin-head in the story. The scenes which have been interpolated from "Feathertop" have been very nicely done, and in fact the entire production which is sweet and clean will be found very pleasing in spite of the fact that its construction is not of strict technical excellence.

In the cast are pretty Marguerite Courtot, Sydney Mason, James Levering, Gerald Griffin, Charles Graham and Mathilde Baring. The director Henry J. Vernot, has looked well to the little human details in which lies much of the appeal of the picture. There are also some good comedy touches of the finer sort which find their origin in the home of the sea captain brother who lives in the South Sea Islands and employs two comical negro lads as his personal servants.

HERMAN SUDERMANN'S drama "Johannisfeuer," which Nance O'Neil produced on the spoken stage in this country under the title of "The Fires of St. John," has been adapted to the screen by Alfred Hickman, and given the hyphenated name of "The Flames of Johannis." This version, in five reels, has been produced by the Lubin Company and Nance Scene from "The Flames of Johannis" (Lubin).

O'Neil repeated her finely dramatic portrayal of the dual role, Marika, a foundling, and Zirah, her gypsy mother.

Like most of Sudermann's dramas, "Johannisfeuer" is a work with a serious purpose. The life of the gypsy waif, although marked with self-denial and every other commendable effort on her part, ends in a tragedy. She is separated from the man she loves by her mother, a thieving, drink-sodden old wretch, who dies within the walls of a prison, begging with her last breath for a drop of the fluid that has been her curse.

As adapted for the screen, the drama commences when a wealthy Pennsylvania farmer, named Vogel, adopts the son of his brother George, and, on the same day, buys the infant child of a gypsy woman that he rescueus from death when he finds her helpless from the cold on the public highway. The child grows up to womanhood loving her foster brother, who loves her in return. The Vogels, however, are anxious to have George marry their daughter Gertrude. Out of gratitude to her foster parents, Merika attempts to keep George at a distance. He is piqued and proposes to Gertrude. As the marriage approaches, Merika realizes she has broken her own heart. George also finds that he loves Merika more than Gertrude. On St. John's eve, according to an old Pagan custom, Merika permits George to embrace her, but the thought of her mother and her degradation steels her heart against the pleadings of her foster brother. The marriage between George and his cousin takes place, and Merika leaves the farm and devotes herself to her mother until the gypsy woman's miserable death.

In spite of the scenes being laid in this country, the play is essentially German in spirit and, in its present form, makes its greatest claim to popular favor by the opportunities for powerful acting offered Nance O'Neil in the dual role of mother and daughter. Miss O'Neil played the degraded old gypsy with startling realism and tragic power. She was equally successful in denoting the fine womanliness of the daughter. The rest of the cast was uniformly excellent and included George Clarke, Eleanor Barry, Ethel Tully, Victor Sutherland, Irving Dillon, Mrs. Carr, James Cassady, Violet Exzell and Rosemary Carr. The production, directed by Edgar Lewis, has been given every benefit of artistic supervision in the acting and the settings for the scenes.

"The Greater Wrong."

The writing and directing of this three-reel photoplay is an achievement of considerable moment. Aside from taking full advantage of the law which governs the dramatist's use of the coincidence device, George W. Terwilliger has built up a convincing story peopled with human beings whose joys and sorrows are of interest and whose lives furnish examples from which may be drawn lessons that are worthy of time and thought. The picture contains only one brief cutback.

James Cannon, an ambitious young man anxious to better his condition, marries an heiress, although in love with another woman. The manner in which the author works out the triangle and brings down the consequences of their wrongdoing on the heads of the three human beings, forms a skilful and absorbing drama. Assisted by a splendidly-balanced cast, he has done full justice to his task as director. The names on the roll of honor consist of Leslie Austen, Octavia Handworth, Margaret Adair, Adelaide Hayes and Herbert Fortier.

"A War of Wits."

THE fourth instalment of "The Social Pirates" contains a striking example of the well-known criminological fact that even the cleverest rascal has a weak spot in his defense against detection. "A War of Wits" also illustrates another great truth in connection with the trapping of masculine law-breakers; they are often ensnared with hardly an effort on the part of a clever woman. The male being who is caught in the net by the two heroines of George Bronson Howard's series of two-reel dramas is a certain doctor with an unsavory reputation in police circles. The gentleman's specialty is administering a drug which puts a patient completely under his control. His latest victim is an elderly widow of means, who is stopping in the same hotel as the two fair avengers. They discover that the doctor will bear watching. Mona obtains the position of lady's maid with the widow, while Mary devotes herself to the conquest of the wily physician. She soon learns that the gentleman has another weakness, aside from his fondness for the opposite sex—he is a reckless and unskilful gambler. The money he obtains from the widow while she is under the influence of the drug is quickly lost at the gambling table. Mary puts a stop to this wasting of the widow's money by inviting the doctor to her rooms for a social little game with a friend of hers, said friend being a card sharp of high renown. Separating an infant from a lollypop is the proper simile to employ in conveying a full realization of the ease with which the doctor is disconnected from his ill-gotten roll. This treatment is repeated with success, until Mona procures the evidence necessary to convict the medical man of robbing the widow.

Many of the details of this story are worthy Gaborieau, and the picture has the same sprited action and touches of humor that were such important factors in the success of the first three numbers. The twin stars shone as brightly as before in their congenial roles, and Marin Sais looked fetchingly demure as a lady's maid. Thomas Lingham contributed a well-rounded study as the doctor, and Frank Jonasson and Paul C. Hurst were of marked assistance in giving strength to the cast.

"Romance and Riot."

Rose Melville, her supporting company and the director are now so nicely adjusted to their task of creating the "Sis Hopkins" comedies that all their efforts have that smoothness and unison so necessary to the best results. "Romance and Riot," written by John E. Kevan, will have no difficulty in maintaining a position of equality with the best of the series. It has the touch-and-go method of action that should always be associated with broad farce, and the plot, while ample and of the right quality, is not permitted to impede traffic when the actors are driving full speed after a laugh. Miss Melville squirms, twists, grins and stumbles through this reel with the persuasive awkwardness that is the chief charm of Sis, and exhibits a surprising readiness to risk life and limb in the performance of any stunt that the director is able to suggest. Henry Murdock's knock-about comedy work is still a feature of the supporting company, and Frank Minzey, Arthur Albertson, Mary Kennedy, Richard Purdon and Olive West are concordant players in the remaining roles.

less," "At Bay," and "New York" are all strong productions from his hand, with "Big Jim Garrity," slightly if any less powerful, following in their trail.

"Big Jim Garrity" is a tremendously human drama, with the character impersonated by the male star standing out in bas relief from among weaker and sometimes ignoble types. Robert Edeson gives a fine interpretation of this central character with Eleanor Woodruff playing opposite him in the role of a sweet, trusting woman whose unfortunate contact with an unscrupulous doctor has caused her to yield to the drug habit. The contrast between the two men is well delineated, and splendid dramatic situations flock one on another toward the close of the picture where the stronger personality of "Big Jim" forces the doctor to confess to a murder for which the former has been convicted and has spent a term in prison, and where the same strength of personality rescues the woman from final downfall.

One of the spectacular scenes of the production occurs during "Big Jim's" mining days. Through the influence of the same drug-infected doctor who was a nephew of the old man who left Jim his mining property, a conspiracy is hatched by which Jim and his associates almost lose their lives in a flooded mine tunnel. The type of man impersonated by Robert Edeson will have a strong appeal and the production which is attractively set, typifying life in the Georgia mining district, as well as life among well-to-do New Yorkers, will be found very interesting.

Canada Likes Kalem Features.

Though Kalem discontinued the production of four reel features some time ago to devote entire attention to the short pictures that are in such demand, words of praise for the Kalem features that are still being shown are constantly received. Following is a letter from the branch manager of the Vancouver, British Columbia, General Film exchange last week: "Kalem's 'The Pitfall,' in four reels has been the subject of unusually favorable comment among exhibitors of B. C. who have used it. In fact, there have been commendations received, not only verbally and by letter, but also by telegram on this and other Kalem four reelers, for example, 'The Runaway Wife,' and 'The Pretenders.' Kalem is to be congratulated accordingly and, no doubt, will be incited to accomplishment of other similar successes."

Mary Fuller in Two Reels.

Mary Fuller is back at work in a two-reel. The plot was such a good one that Miss Fuller begged her director to put it on. Mrs. Catherine Carr was the author and the story, which is called "The Mystery of the Limousine," is of the surprise ending kind.

Miss Fuller is shown done to death at the opening of the picture and then the action switches to the story of her life. William Welsh appears as her first suitor. She is finally wed by a banker, played by Joe Gerard. He became jealous of Anthony Merlo's attentions to his wife. Merlo is the last one to be seen with Miss Fuller before her "death." But responsibility for the murder is not clear until the very close of the picture.

THREE FRIENDS (Biograph), April 3.—Henry B. Walthall and Blanche Sweet are the leading players in this one-reel reissue, directed by D. W. Griffith. There is one of those told-in-action stories to the reel, for which the producer is famous. The scenes are laid in a New England shoe town.

THE FATAL BEAN (Lubin), April 5.—Boston will love this one-reel comedy for its glorification of the toothsome bean. Other and less fortunate mortals who were not brought up on Boston's favorite food, will enjoy the humor of the situations and the amusing comedy acting of D. L. Don and Patsy DeForest.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 27, 1916 (Selig), April 3.—The capture of Juan Sanchez, a Villa bandit, at Deming, N. M.; five thousand bales of cotton burn, Houston, Tex.; scenes in the trenches near Verdun, France; taking war supplies to the Allies, Seattle, Wash.; flood at Riverside, Ill.; American troops near Namiquipa, Mex., launching destroyer Rowan, Quincy, Mass.; Carranza troops at Saltillo, Mex.; Stanford University crew at practice, Redwood City, Cal.; arrival of troops at Camp Columbus, N. M.; arrival of army biplane from Mexico at Columbus; U. S. troops starting into Mexico.

HER PARTNER (Vitagraph), April 3.—A strong suggestion of the Bret Harte brand of humor runs through this one-reel western comedy. The part played by Mary Anderson is one of those self-reliant, unkempt but lovable little heroines that have always been favorites with theatergoers. Miss Anderson looks and acts the part satisfactorily. Webster Campbell is a good second as the hero and Otto Lederer is seen in one of his skillfully acted character parts.

FROM ALTAR TO HALTER (Kalem), April 4.—The situations in this one-reel comedy are tried and true friends of the comedy writer. In the present case, they have been used with skill, and Ham and Bud and the rest of the cast see to it that not a laugh is lost. The two heroes are supposed to take unto themselves wives, or rather, a wife each. After the experience of the two ladies it is small wonder that Woman's Suffrage is a power in the land.

ANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 8 (Essanay), April 5.—The Wallace A. Carlson burlesques on the News Weeklies have made a unique place for themselves among animated cartoons. Their humor is irresistible and they are also excellent examples of the art of drawing. The present number is up to the standard in its presentation of timely topics. A western scenic is on the same reel.

TRAPPING THE BACHELOR (Kalem), April 5.—William Beaudine is the producer of this one-reel comedy in which Ethel Teare enacts the heroine. It is an amusing offering and is spiritly played by Miss Teare, Victor Rottman, Jack MacDermott and Mrs. Davenport.

THE PICKLE FIDDLER'S FINISH (Kalem), April 7.—Rose Melville is the star of this one-reel comedy, although Henry Murdock has the title role. The producers and actors concerned in the making of this series of comedies have struck their gait, and "The Pickle Fiddler's Finish" is equal to the other numbers in its power to amuse. Miss Melville's Sis is a comic creation of uncommon merit and Henry Murdock is a clever grotesque comedian. Arthur Albertson, Frank Minzey, Richard Purdon, Mary Kennedy and Olive West complete the cast.

THE RECORD RUN (No. 74 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), April 8.—A review of this picture was printed in the issue of April 8, page 282. The thrill performed by Helen Gibson is a daring bit of work and the entire picture is without a dull moment.

OUT OF THE QUAGMIRE (Vitagraph), April 1.—The unclean side of politics is brought to light in this three-reel Broadway Star Feature. Donald I. Buchanan is the author of the photoplay, and the plot shows how an upright man who consents to run for mayor of his city is ruined by his opponents. In order to point his moral with greater force, the author has sacrificed the happy ending. The picture has the benefit of a strong cast, which includes Joseph Kilgour, Julia Swayne Gordon, Eleanor Woodruff, Robert Whitworth, John T. Kelly, Ned Finley, Adele Kelly and Arthur Cozine. Able direction by Theodore Marston.

THE LIGHT-BEARER (Essanay), April 8.—The ethical purpose of this three-reel is most praiseworthy. It tells the story of a fight against tenement house evils, by an athletic young clergyman, and shows how he administered moral suasion to a bully by knocking him out in a fair fight and no favor, and driving him from the neighborhood. The picture lacks dramatic action except that supplied by the fight, but deals with existing conditions of life, and is acted with earnestness and skill by Richard C. Travers, Roderick Laroque, Frank Hamilton, Wm. Burke, Jack Dale and Betty Brown.

MYRTLE THE MANICURIST (Vitagraph), April 8.—The adventures of the heroine of this three-reel farce, as revealed by Paul West, account in a large measure for the constant inrush of prepossessing maidens from the rural districts to O. Henry's "Little-Old-Bagdad-on-the Subway." The truthful Mr. West has set down romantic doings, humorous doings and other diverting doings, in which Myrtle is the shining figure. She even becomes a moving picture actress. Jewell Hunt plays the part in the proper spirit. Templar Saxe, Harold Foshay, Edele De Garde, Harry Fisher, Ned Finley, Paul Kelly, Arthur Cozine, Frank Beula and A. Robinson complete the cast.

General Film Company Specials.

ALIAS JIMMIE BARTON (Biograph), March 28.—The story of two young men who temporarily change names and rise to positions of importance in a large factory. An acceptable two-part offering, carefully produced and adequately acted by Jose Ruben, Vola Smith, Jack Mulhall, Gretchen Hartman and Jack Drumeir.

MADELAINE MOREL (Biograph), March 29.—An excellent three-part adptation of Augustin Daly's play, with Betty Gray giving a sympathetic interpretation of the title role. A story of good quality is materially benefitted by picturesque settings perfectly photographed. William Russell, Alan Hale, Gretchen Hartman and Jack Drumeir are in the cast.

THE HOME BREAKERS (Knickerbocker), March 31.—Although never going beyond the obvious, this three-reel Star Feature photoplay has certain human qualities that will commend it to many people. The married life of a young couple is almost wrecked by a pair of adventurers, a faithful old family servant being the one to straighten things out. The scenario was written by Anthony W. Coldewey, and the leading roles were taken by Margaret Landis, Fred Whitman, Daniel Gilfether, Charles Dudley and Madeline Pardee.

THE SPIDER'S WEB (Essanay), April 1.—A victim of the drug habit who fights and conquers his craving for morphine, is the leading character in this three-reel drama. The story is told with cleverness, and the love interest is well sustained. Bryant Washburn has the principal role and acts with fine reserve force. Elizabeth Burbridge, Gertrude Glover, John Junior, John Lorenz and Grant Foreman are useful members of the cast.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, NO. 11 ("The Raid") (Essanay), April 3.—In this instalment of the Essanay serial the evidence of Police Sergeant Cunningham clears up the mystery of Mary's being found in the station house by the reporter the morning after the gambling house raid. The officer describes all the events of that night, and their visualization makes very interesting testimony.

THE CORSICAN SISTERS (No. 2 of "The Social Pirates") (Kalem), April 3.—The second number of the George Bronson Howard series of two-reel dramas strengthens the favorable impression made by the opening number. The merit of the work itself and the thorough production given it by the Kalem Company make it unusually entertaining. A review of the picture appeared in the issue of March 25, page 2027.

UNDER ROYAL PATRONAGE (Essanay), April 4.—This two-reel reissue has a formidable array of names in the cast. Francis X. Bushman, Bryant Washburn, E. H. Calvert, Beverly Bayne, Betty Scott, Jane Paddock, Thomas Cummerford, Lester Cuno, Arthur Stengard, Harry Dunkinson and Chas. Hitchcock are included, the scenes being laid in a mythical kingdom, and a dashing young American is prevailed upon to impersonate the son of the ruler. Excellent romance of the George Barr McCutcheon school.

THE RETURN OF JAMES JEROME (Lubin), April 4.—There is action and suspense and an interesting story in this two-reel photoplay, written by Maud Thomas and directed by Edward Sloman. The settings are varied and Lamar Johnstone, George Routh, Melvin Mayo, Jay Morley, William J. Spencer, Violet MacMillan and Ada Gleason form a highly satisfactory cast.

PATHS THAT CROSSED (Biograph), April 5.—A three-part drama of sufficient interest, produced by J. Farrell Macdonald with a company including Charles Mailes, Hazel Henderson, Claire McDowell, Vola Smith and Jose Ruben. A review appeared in the issue of April 8.

THE SCARLET CHASTITY (Lubin), April 6.—The finish of this three-reel drama is unconventional. It being necessary to remove the wife of the central male character in order that he may marry another woman, the author has her accidentally shot by her five-year-old son. Many of the situations are over-drawn and unpleasant, the story being a new version of East Lynne. George Routh, Helen Wolcott, Josephine West, Alan Forrest, Sydney Deane, Adelaide Bronti and Ben Hopkins give a good account of themselves in the different roles.

THE MILLIONAIRE'S SON (Knickerbocker Star Feature), April 7.—This picture of three parts is based on a labor problem. The production is rather crude in make-up, however, and the story is not a clearly defined one. There is nothing unwholesome about the picture; it is merely not up to the standard constructively and artistically speaking.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 28, 1916 (Selig), April 6.—Colors of Canadian regiment being blessed, Toronto, Can.; "Bird of Doubt"; collier Mars at Washington; English women handle hay crop, Stratford-on-Avon, Eng.; Mrs. Mary M. Horton, New York; N. Y. C. wreck at Amherst, Ohio; Royalty visiting soldiers' club, London; war scenes, Saloniki, Greece; war scenes in Mexico; Harvard students drilling at Cambridge, Mass.; scenes of camp life and on the march after Villa.

MAMMA'S BOYS (Vim), April 6.—Plump and Runt are the juvenile heroes of this one-reel farce. They are anything but angel children and are at all sorts of tricks, one of the most amusing is playing golf with hen fruit for balls. The reel will bring the laughs.

IN THE RING (Vim), April 7.—A lively mix-up in the squared circle with Pokes and Jabs taking active part furnishes most of the laughs in this one-reel farce. It is a funny knockabout skit in every sense of the word.

FREDDY THE FIXER (Vitagraph), April 7.—E. J. Montague has turned out a neat bit of work in writing this one-reel comedy. The complications are cleverly put together and are the cause of much merriment. William Dangman plays Freddy with easy assurance, and Lucie Crane, George O'Donnell, Virginia Nordon and Florence Natol are well cast. Frank Currier produced the picture.

A WISE WAITER (Lubin), April 8.—Billie Reeves is the star, Clay M. Greene the author, and Earl Metcalfe the director of this one-reel farce. It is a comedy of situations and the author has devised an amusing series of mix-ups. John Shermer, Francis Joyner, Eleanor Blanchard and Margaret Moore have the other roles.

ALONG THE BORDER (Selig), April 8.—Another of the spirited one-reel dramas of western life that Tom Mix writes, produces and acts with such excellent results. Mr. Mix is assisted in the acting by Victoria Forde, Sid Jordan, Joe Ryan, and Joe Simkins. As usual, the dash and skill of the horsemanship show in the picture is one of the best features of the reel.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE GREAT PROBLEM, April 17.—The pleasing appearance of Violet Mersereau is the best feature of this production, having prison reform for its theme. If the story lacks strength, the charm of the leading player may suffice to hold the attention. Review in the issue of April 15.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 66 (Gaumont), April 5.—Paris fashions, movement of American troops to Mexico, a Palm Beach celebration, New York Central wreck and other features are included in this number.

THE WINNING PUNCH (Cub), April 7.—A George Ovey comedy that will be found very acceptable. Jerry this time gets into the prize ring and when he realizes that the man he has to fight is almost twice as tall as he, he takes to his heels. The comedy is clean and will please any audience.

SAPVILLE'S STALWART SON (Falstaff), April 10.—A city club man, who is something of a bore, makes a bet that he can return to his old home town as a tramp and be received in royal fashion. He tries it and is thrown in jail. The idea is amusing, but the presentation is not exceptional. It makes a fair number.

PEANUTS AND POWDER (Beauty), April 12.—This is a very acceptable comedy in which the daughter of an inventor of a new explosive which he encases in peanut shells, is kidnapped along with a bag of the peanuts. The father and lover of the girl take up the chase, following a trail of peanuts made by the girl spilling them out of the bag as the auto spins along the road. A pet monkey in the house in which the girl is imprisoned eats some of the peanuts and the house, after the rescue of the girl, is blown to atoms.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 31 (Gaumont), April 12.—"Historic St. Augustine, Fla.," is the subject of this number. Many historic spots in this vicinity have been photographed and presented herein. A delightful number with a cartoon finish entitled "Watchful Waiting," by Harry Palmer.

WATCHFUL WAITING (Gaumont), April 12.—An amusing cartoon comedy, in which Uncle Sam is represented dreaming in blissful ignorance until a few unpleasant probes from the Mexican side, and from Germany arouse him to exasperation.

ALMOST RIGHT (Cub), April 14.—A slapstick comedy that is rather amusing. Billy Armstrong is featured in the production. A couple of detectives go to a ten-cent lodging house, and later end up in a cabaret, where they distinguish themselves by getting on the trail of a crook who steals a lady's purse. A fairly good number.

THE OVERWORKED OVERSEA OVERSEER (Falstaff), April 15.—A comedy number, in which an English valet comes over to manage an American estate. The caretaker and his friends try to scare him away, but he turns the tables on them. This contains considerable humor and is quite entertaining.

THE IMPROBABLE YARN OF McQUIRK (Beauty), April 16.—Orral Humphrey plays the role of an old sailor in this film. McQuirk is fond of telling stories of his early life on the seas, and relates to a boy who listens attentively the story of how he was once captured by cannibals and escaped being eaten by them through lack of tenderness of flesh. This is a clean number and rather amusing.

THE SAILOR'S SMILING SPIRIT (Falstaff), April 17.—Riley Chamberlain and Fatty Hiers appear in this amusing comedy. The former is a grocer who covets the latter's wife. He places bombs in the sailor's vessel, but the latter turns up unexpectedly after his supposed death. This is a quietly amusing subject. The homecoming is a good scene.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

BONDS OF DECEPTION (American), April 6.—An excellent three-part drama in which a father whose son has proved a disgrace to the family, and after being sent west commits a crime for which he is sent to prison, persuades the editor of a newspaper to print a notice of his death. The wife of the young man is thereby spared the knowledge of the disgrace brought on the family by her husband. A peculiar situation arises when the editor falls in love with the young woman. The actual death of the convict clears the situation and the story ends happily. Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen play the principal roles. Kenneth Clarke is the author of the play.

TWO BITS (Mustang), April 7.—A two-part drama with Anan Little, Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson in the leading roles. "Two Bits" is a young orphan girl who lives in a cabin in the west which was left her by her father, and who sells flowers for a living. A maker of counterfeit money is in love with "Two Bits" and with the saloonkeeper plots to force her to marry him by pretending that her cabin must be confiscated for a debt of her father's. A young secret service agent, also in love with the girl, saves her from the villain and marries her himself. A very attractive offering.

UNDER AZURE SKIES (Mustang), April 8.—An attractive three-part production featuring Art Acord. Playing opposite him is Rhea Mitchell. The picture is not constructed along technical lines but pleases by its rather unique method of presentation. "Bill" the cowpuncher, who came east and lost his money among a bunch of crooks, getting into a hospital in the bargain, later is able to recommend a pretty young nurse to his employers back west. Of course he marries the nurse, giving a fitting close to an interesting story.

THE ROMANCE OF THE HOLLOW TREE (Thanhouser), April 11.—A two-reel subject, written by Crittenden Marriott. An orphan girl finds some money in a hollow tree, which had been placed there by a thief. She thinks it was some money hidden by her father before his death. Later she meets the owner of the money and restores it to him. A romance results. The story is quite pleasing in plot, and worked out naturally. There is not much dramatic strength in it, and certain points are not cleared up. It makes, on the whole, an average release.

FEATHERTOP (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe—Gaumont, No. 93), April 17.—An attractive five-part production made at the Gaumont studios, and directed by Henry J. Vernot. Marguerite Courtot is featured therein and is especially charming. The main fault of the picture is that it is rather poorly constructed. That this defect stands very little in the way of its entertaining value is a tribute to both director and players. It contains a dainty, artistic touch with those very human moments that an audience loves to see. Most audiences will like this picture.

REALIZATION (American), April 22.—A prettily produced three-part picture, featuring Vivian Rich. The story is of how a young girl, who, finding an opportunity to star in musical comedy, barely evades the clutches of a bad man. Her lover a violinist in the orchestra, rescues her from injury when she faints on the stage, causing some Chinese lanterns to ignite part of the scenery. The story is nicely developed and will please.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE ETERNAL GRIND (Famous Players), April 17.—Mary Pickford is featured in this story of east side and Fifth avenue life that will interest. It is reviewed on another page.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 25, 1916 (Pathe), March 25.—Interesting items of this number are students of California in a series of athletic exercises, a wreck on a bridge over the Tennessee River, the 7th battalion at London, Ont., receiving the colors, and the third squad of United States Cavalry leaving for Mexico.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 26, 1916 (Pathe), March 29.—Among the most interesting items of this number are America's first navy dirigible, D N I, the American Legion at Toronto, Can., troops in parade in the streets of Hamilton, Can., the opening of the San Diego International Exposition, and some attractive new style gowns in colors.

SKYLIGHT SLEEP (Starlight), April 5.—This farce comedy will be found quite amusing. Heine and Louie, hearing of the arrival of a certain European professor of medicine, decide to steal his latest discovery, "Twilight Sleep." Their endeavor to make use of their new possession, or rather Heine's endeavor, is amusing. The close of the comedy finds all hands asleep.

THE WATERFALLS OF IDAHO (Pathe), April 8.—A beautiful scenic divulging the beauties of a portion of Idaho, and showing Twin Falls, Milner Falls, Salmon Falls and others of equal beauty. On the same reel with "The Coal Mines of Hongay."

THE COAL MINES OF HONGAY (Pathe), April 8.—A splendidly detailed account of how the work in the coal mines of this portion of French Indo-China is carried on.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 6 (Pathe), April 3.—"The Spotted Warning" is perhaps the most thrilling of all the episodes of "The Iron Claw" exhibited hitherto. Still in pursuit of the scrap of paper, Legar sends to Golden the "spotted warning," which is a message of death. To save Margery from his clutches, Golden sends her to her grandmother. She is waylaid by agents of Legar, who are thwarted in performing their mission by the laughing mask, who rescues Margery and takes her to her mother. A struggle in the tower of a skyscraper between one of Legar's agents and Davy, Golden's secretary, is a thrilling sight. In the struggle the paper just delivered to the Legar agent by Golden is lost and the agent himself thrown from the tower to the street below by Davy.

BIG JIM GARRITY (Gold Rooster Play). April 18.—A five-reel production presented by Al H. Woods to the Pathe Gold Rooster program. Robert Edeson is featured with Eleanor Woodruff playing opposite him. This number, which has been reviewed at length in this issue, will be found to be a powerful play, and tremendously interesting. It was produced by Geo. Fitzmaurice, who directed "New York," "At Bay" and "Via Wireless."

Triangle Film Corp.

HIS WIFE'S MISTAKE (Keystone), April 2.—A highly amusing story of mistaken identity with some gorgeous settings and Roscoe Arbuckle even funnier than ever.

LITTLE MEENA'S ROMANCE (Fine Arts), April 9.—A beautiful story of a simple girl's pure-minded love, which wins a coveted prize because of the tender charm of its appeal. An exquisite production.

THE ARYAN (Kay-Bee), April 9—The story of a rude Western character redeemed by an innocent girl, with William S. Hart obtrusively in the lead, though well supported by Louise Glaum and Bessie Love. A rather dull variation of the usual Hart vehicle.

THE STEPPING STONE (Kay-Bee), April 16.—A story of deep and powerful motive admirably interpreted by Frank Keenan, Mary Boland and an exceptionally fine cast. Away from the ordinary.

SOLD FOR MARRIAGE (Fine Arts), April 16.—A story of Russian life at home and in America, very realistic and well acted.

HOODOO ANN (Fine Arts).—A mildly amusing hodge-podge lacking in continuity of interest, with Mae Marsh in the title role.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

HIS NEIGHBOR'S WIFE (Nestor), April 17—A comedy number by Neal Burns who appears with Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Harry Rottenberry. The young bachelor pretends to be married to get a salary raise and has to borrow his neighbor's wife and chicken dinner when his employer calls. Trouble follows. Somewhat conventional but nicely presented and amusing.

LOVE LAUGHS AT DYSPEPSIA (Imp), April 18—An amusing low comedy number, by Hal Clotworthy, featuring Jane Bernoudy and Victor Potel. She is love sick and he has indigestion. A tiny cupid takes part in the love scenes. This is different and pleasing, in a nonsensical way.

THE GAMBLER (Laemmle), April 20—An entertaining variation of the Enoch Arden theme by Lynn Reynolds featuring Myrtle Gonzalez, Fred Church and Val Paul. The girl marries the young gambler, who deserts her and is supposed to be dead. Later he returns to find the girl being married to his brother; he then drowns himself. The settings and presentation are very good and the offering an appealing one.

EDDIE'S NIGHT OUT (Nestor), April 21—A number by A. E. Christie featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Betty Compson, Stella Adams and others. The young married man henpecked by his mother-in-law slips away for a night's frolic. He has trouble reinstating himself, but finally subdues the mother-in-law. This proves quite amusing in numerous incidents.

JUST YET BUT NOT QUITE (Joker), April 22—A farcical low comedy featuring Ernie Shields and Marcia Moore. There is a rapid fire elopement in which the old man follows with a shot gun. The latter situations in the hotel are quite funny and bring a number of laughs.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE DOUBLE'S TROUBLE (L-KO), April 16—A two-reel burlesque comedy which winds up in a laughable climax and contains nothing that will offend. Alice Howell doubles as a countess and a chambermaid, whose affairs become entangled. The number has considerable plot and is above the average of the type. The closing scenes are very funny.

HER BITTER CUP (Red Feather Photoplay), April 17—A five-reel number by Kathleen Kerrigan, featuring Cleo Madison as Rethna, a girl raised in a sordid slum district. She nurses the sick and even steals for them. Later the elder son of the factory owner fancies her and fits her up an apartment. The contrasts of life are pleasing here, but the relations of the girl with Harry Burke are not made clear. In fact, at this point a number of mixed motives and obscurities creep into the story. The crucifixion of the girl's body at the close seems revolting. The story is quite strong in some respects but certain features seem to lack proper significance. Edward Hearne and Wm. V. Mong are also in the cast.

THE PHOTO BADGER GAME (Universal Special Feature), April 17.—No. 19 of the "Graft" series. Richard Stanton, as Mayor Harding, takes a vacation at the beach, where he discovers the other principals of the series. He collides with Tracy, head of the battleship trust, and his ancient enemy, Stone. The photograph feature is a good one, with more comedy in it than has characterized this series. The fire scene at the close, with the rescue of Dorothy, is well staged.

THE BEST MAN'S BRIDE (Gold Seal), April 18.—A pleasing comedy, based on a story by Alice MacGowan and Malcolm Strong. The girl takes the best man to her grandmother's unoccupied home and takes care of him, he having been drugged. In so doing she compromises herself and the result is she marries the best man instead of the one she intended. The situations are handled delicately and the offering holds the interest closely. Herbert Rawlinson and Francelia Billington play the leading parts attractively.

ROYAL LOVE (Victor), April 19.—A three-reel story, made in England and enacted by an English company, including Patrick Noonan, Charles Vanse, George Scott, Daisy Cordell and others. The scenes from court life, picturing the murder of one king and leading up to the revenge of his son years later, are somewhat melodramatic in tone. The costuming and settings are not quite what they should be to carry a strong illusion. The plot has considerable interest, but is not developed with any great degree of strength. The offering as a whole is only fairly good.

THE HAUNTED BELL (Imp), April 21.—A pleasing two-reel mystery offering, based on a story by the late Jacques Futrelle. King Baggot, Edna Hunter and Frank Smith play the leading roles. It is rather a relief from stories depending entirely upon swift action for their interest.

THE PASSING OF HELL'S CROWN (Bison), April 22.—A two-reel Western number, featuring Harry D. Carey, Olive Fuller Golden, C. Raymond Nyle, L. M. Wells and Neal Hart. Carey plays the part of Lightning, a bad man who shoots up the town frequently until love brings an awakening. The shooting scenes are perhaps a little overdone in some instances, but this man has the typical Western atmosphere and settings and it is well up to the average of its type.

World-Equitable.

THE SHADOW OF A DOUBT (Equitable), April 17.—Carlyle Blackwell is featured in this production of five parts. The story draws attention to the influence of environment on the lives of two brothers. The two boys start out from an English orphan asylum following two entirely dissimilar walks of life. A later meeting of the brothers brings about a happy ending to the story. A full review of the picture is given elsewhere.

HUMAN DRIFTWOOD (Peerless), April 17.—A five-reel production in which Frances Nelson and Robert Warwick are featured. It is the story of how a young man of wealth and once a frequenter of Bohemian resorts goes to Alaska and finds at a mining camp an evil woman with whom he had been formerly associated. He rescues and marries a beautiful young girl whom she is about to sell to a brawny Swede.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 26, 1916 (Vitagraph), March 31.—Fifty die in explosion of Paris arsenal; public funeral of victims; Chicago students build hut for Gen. Funston; big fire at Paris, Texas; war scenes, Salonika, Greece; baby show, New York; cavalry regiment entrain for Fort Meyer, Ga.; Harvard crew practice at Lynn, Mass.; Carrazana soldiers at Ague Prieta, Mexico; Mexican officers; U. S. troops entering Mexico; fashions; "Do You Know this Man?" cartoon by Powers.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 27 (Vitagraph), April 4.—U. S. supply trucks being sent from El Paso to Columbus, N. M.; wagon train returning from Mexico to Columbus; motor supply train starting for Mexico; army water wagons arrive at Columbus; fire among New York skyscrapers; Houdini performs feat in midair, New York; N. Y. C. wreck at Amherst, Ohio; Von Kaenel, Chicago steeplejack, climbs building; Bob Burnam wins auto race at San Diego; war scenes at Salonika; Greek donkey convoy on road to Salonika; fashion; Krazy Kat cartoon.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S BURLESQUE ON CARMEN (Essanay), April 10—This four-part subject lacks the accustomed Chaplin snap. It is reviewed on another page.

SALVATION JOAN (Vitagraph), April 10.—This seven-part subject, which is reviewed in another column, features Edna May, known in other days as the star in "The Belle of New York." It is a good picture.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 28, 1916 (Vitagraph), April 7.—Honoring army heroes at El Paso, Tex.; Genessee River flood, Rochester, N. Y.; fishing on the ice, Lake Erie; raising rabbits, Los Angeles, Cal.; volunteer company drilling, Grand Rapids, Mich.; launch at full-rigged schooner, Bath, Me.; fire, Houston, Tex.; fashions; "Krazy Kat, Hero."

Miscellaneous.

THE FOLLY OF SIN (Great Northern), April.—A well staged, clearly photographed and interesting, though somewhat conventional, dramatic photoplay, in which the chief roles are played by Joan Peterson and Charles Wieth. A review appeared in the issue of April 15.

THE FOLLY OF REVENGE (New York Film), April.—Melodramatic in the extreme, this five-reel picture is likely to entertain audiences unaccustomed to productions of a higher type. It was reviewed in the Moving Picture World under date of April 15.

THE INVISIBLE ENEMY (E-K-O), April.—A five-reel production which has been modeled as propaganda in fighting the dread disease tuberculosis. A similar effect could have been obtained by a use of fewer reels of film. The story of the production drags too much, resolving itself into a series of disconnected scenes. The film at the same time contains a great many very valuable facts that might have been presented forcefully. The first reel of the picture will be found very interesting and full of pathos.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Variety in Kalem Series

"Social Pirates" Adventures Vary Widely with Each Release —Coming Episodes.

NOVELTY of plot and wide variety of themes are the outstanding features of the episodes of "The Social Pirates," announced for release during the next few weeks. The Kalem series by George Bronson Howard is now well on its way, and the benefit of telling a complete story in each episode is made evident by the widely varying themes of the coming issues.

Three of the two-reel episodes of the series announced for release during the next few weeks are, "A War of Wits," "The Millionaire Plunger" and "The Master Swindlers." The stories continue the adventures of Mona and Mary, played by Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby, who are modern crusaders, pitting their wits against the unscrupulous schemes of "Social Pirates."

Scene from "The Millionaire Plunger" (Kalem).

"A War of Wits" finds the girls crossing swords with a character know as Dr. Hyoscine, from the fact that he uses that drug to aid him in extorting money from his wealthy patients. Hyoscine is the drug used in the famous "twilight sleep" operation, and its faculty of completely effacing from the memory all events while under its influence is used by the crafty swindler.

In the following two-reel release of the Kalem series, "The Millionaire Plunger," which shows the fascinating heroines teaching a stern lesson to a wealthy idler, a novel twist is given the well known "wire-tapping" swindle. The girls' antagonist in this episode is Tomlinson Gerry, who was brought to their attention by his heartless refusal to aid the penniless victim of his father's stock-jobbing manipulations.

Another theme of timely interest is the basis of the plot of "The Master Swindlers," scheduled for release May 1st. George Bronson Howard has really in this story built his action around the disappearance of the famous Mona Lisa from the Paris Louvre. Indeed, with slightly disguised details it may be seen that the playwright has offered his solution of the baffling mystery. Marin Sais and Allie Kirkby fight a desperate struggle in combating the clever crooks of the art world who find easy victims among the millionaire art-lovers.

"THE MAN FROM MANHATTAN" (Mutual).

A midnight fire, the glow of which could be seen for miles, adds greatly to the realism of "The Man from Manhattan," J. Edward Hungerford's five-reel picture, Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, of country newspaper activities, now nearing completion under the direction of Jack Halloway at the American studios.

The story moves swiftly and contains excellent roles for William Stowell, Rhea Mitchell, Jack Prescott and Warren Ellsworth. A number of small roles give good characterization chances, especially the tramp printer as depicted by Perry Banks.

STRONG CAST FOR "THE HEART OF TARA."

The release as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition of the David Horsley five-reel production of Theodosia Harris' story, "The Heart of Tara," marks the first appearance as co-stars of two players—Margaret Gibson and William Clifford—who heretofore enjoyed stellar honors individually. The merger of the two players in one organization is a tribute to Mr. Horsley's desire to present, in each release, the most suitable cast that could be gathered.

Prior to beginning work on this feature, Miss Gibson was featured by Mr. Horsley in a number of pictures, among them "The Arab's Vengeance," "The Winning of Jess," "The Homesteader," "Marta of the Jungle," and "The Soul's Cycle." Mr. Clifford has also had the feature in earlier David Horsley productions, including "The Terror of the Fold" and "The Bait," another Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition.

Besides Miss Gibson and Mr. Clifford there are in the cast Marvel Spencer, Sherman Bainbridge, Marie James, Walter Spencer and Edward Alexander.

ROLIN FILM COMPANY MOVES.

The Rolin Film Company, who make comedies for the Pathe program, are moving to their new studio, 5813 Santa Monica Building, Hollywood, Cal., where they will have a spacious stage, first-class dressing rooms, and every modern studio appliance. A large force of carpenters is actively engaged in putting in fine properties and scenic effects. This expansion is the natural result of the greatly increased business being done by the "Lonesome Luke" comedies.

"THE THREE WISE MEN" (Selig).

"The Three Wise Men," directed by Colin Campbell, from the story written by Wm. Anthony McGuire, will be released by the Selig Polyscope Company, through General Film Service on Monday, April 17. This wonderful film drama features Bessie Eyton, Thomas Santschi, Guy Oliver and Edith Johnson.

William Owens, a wealthy roisterer, tires of the beauty of Madge Fields and casts her aside. On Christmas Eve, while Owens, his friend Horace Johnson and others are celebrating in a cafe on Broadway, they encounter Nellie, a Salvation Army lassie. She refuses to drink with them, but tells the story of the Three Wise Men, who followed the star in the East and came to Bethlehem. Owens, remembering the teachings of his mother in years gone by, finds a sudden distaste for the revelry and leaves the cafe. Seated alone in the park, in imagination he is escorted through Galilee. On one side are his tempters, and on the other is the Salvation Army girl. He awakens to the Christmas morning bells carrying the message of peace and good will to all men. Standing there before him is Nellie, of the Salvation Army. Led by the girl, Owens goes in search of Madge Fields, finds her and life's real happiness begins for both of them.

Scene from "The Three Wise Men" (Selig).

Colin Campbell, who produced "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "Thou Shalt Not Covet," etc., has presented an extraordinary series of beautiful scenic effects in "The Three Wise Men." Scenes of Biblical days are reproduced faithfully to every detail, and there is no hesitancy in the action, which proves unusually interesting from beginning to ending.

"THE LAST ADVENTURE" (Essanay).

This three-reel Essanay fits Lillian Drew so aptly as to add materially to the author's conception of the piece. This Essanay leading woman who is an adept in roles of the adventuress type, handles the part in "The Last Adventure" fully up to the standard she created for herself in the recent feature, "Vultures of Society." John Lorenz is well cast as the man who uses the woman to gain his own ends, and Edward Scene from "The Last Adventure" (Essanay).

Arnold as the honest man who finally marries her, carries his role with customary ability. Lorenz takes the country girl, who displays unusual talent on the harp, to the city and introduces her among his friends at the club. He forces her to exact gifts from them. These he sells and thereby lives. Finally Arnold, as the new-made Alaskan millionaire, appears and falls in love with the girl and marries her. There is a climax which ends in the death of the villian without entangling the happily-wedded couple. The piece was written by Emily Brown Heininger and directed by E. H. Calvert.

"THE LAW DECIDES" (Vitagraph).

"The Law Decides" is the title of a new seven-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, scheduled for release April 24. The story points out the intrigue in disposing of a large estate and the complications of love and indiscretions which arise in idle rich families; and was written by Marguerite Bertsch, a Vitagraph staff author.

In the cast are Harry T. Morey, Dorothy Kelly, Donald Hall, Bobby Connelly, Louise Beaudet and Adele Kelly.

Scene from "The Law Decides" (Vitagraph).

In collaboration with Director William P. S. Earle, Miss Bertsch produced the picture. This was her first attempt at the other phase of the game, and she succeeded so well that she will, in the future, not only direct her own work but that of others as well.

Miss Bertsch's success and her keen grasp on the finer and more artistic part of picture making is indicative of the big field open to women in the picture game aside from "registry," on the screen. Certainly there are few lines of endeavor open to women with greater possibilities.

CALIFORNIA EXTENDS STUDIO FACILITIES.

Because of the elaborateness and size of the scenes incident to "The Woman Who Dared," the adaption from C. N. and A. M. Williamson's novel in which Beatriz Michelena is now being starred, the California Motion Picture Corporation is rushing work on a still further extension to the big sunlight stage at its San Rafaael plant, and, according to advices, this new improvement will be completed, enclosed in glass for protection from the wind, and otherwise equipped for work before the week's end.

By this extension the California people are more than doubling a stage capacity, that in the past, has been adequate for the accommodation of such pretentious production as "Mignon," "The Unwritten Law," etc. Moreover, in addition to this sunlight stage, there is an enclosed stage electrically lighted. The combined floor space is said to give the California producers more extensive stage room than any other concern engaging but one company at a time.

"The Woman Who Dared," which is immediately responsible for the enlargement, will, according to advance reports, be distinguished for the expansive wealth of its sets. The story concerns itself with intrigue in the highest court circles in Europe, and consequently must depend on surrounding of ultra-elaborateness for much of its atmosphere. An opera house interior with a complete company assembled on the stage is among the big scenes mentioned.

This elegance will find an effective contrast in another angle taken by the story, which carries it to the less polite intrigue of thieves and crooks in Rome's underworld. The coincidence by which these two threads, one spun close up to the throne and the other in the gutter, cross gives the plot much of its dramatic interest.

THOMAS JEFFERSON IN "THE LONESOME HOUSE" (Universal).

Joseph Jefferson's famous son, Thomas Jefferson, appears in the Universal-Big U drama, "The Lonesome House or The Old Schoolmaster," which will be released on April 26. So do half a hundred children of employees of Universal City who are now attending the primary school established in the only moving picture municipality in the world.

Scene from "The Lonesome House" (Universal).

A careful scrutiny of the group of children reproduced herewith reveals many familiar child faces which have appeared in Universal productions in the past. In the front row, third from the left, is little Zoe Beck, co-star with Mr. Jefferson in this charming play of childhood.

Among the schoolchildren are many Mexican boys and girls, sons and daughters of refugees from the other side of the border. Several of the boys' fathers are now playing Mexican roles in Universal productions. Buster Emmons, who is little Zoe Beck's sweetheart, is the very aggressive young gentleman with the slate and school books at the extreme right of the front row. This lad did excellent work in "John Needham's Double," the Bluebird feature in which Tyrone Power played the lead.

"QUALITY OF FAITH" GAUMONT'S FIRST RELEASE.

The first release Gaumont makes in May of a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, comes the first day of the month when "The Quality of Faith" will be given to the screen. This is a five-reel photodrama which has a number of situations of a "punchy" nature, any one of which would serve to make the production popular. In combination they make "The Quality of Faith" a silent drama of absorbing interest.

Alexander Gaden is the minister. He last had such a role in Gaumont's "The Drifter." Miss Gertrude Robinson is co-star with him. In "The Quality of Faith" a strong supporting cast has been provided in which are Charles H. Travis, John Reinhard, Henry W. Pemberton, Alan Robinson, John Mackin and Lucille Taft.

"UNDER AZURE SKIES" (Mustang).

When Art Acord, as the hero of "Under Azure Skies," is about to be lynched by a crowd of cattle rustlers, and is rescued in a new and sensational manner by Nita Davies, a big "punch" is put in the three-reel drama, which has just been completed by Director William Bertram. Art Acord does some wonderful riding in a thoroughly realistic way, and the entire story is typically western. The American cowboys have a splendid opportunity to display their ability, as a great herd of cattle are handled in several scenes, and stampeded for the benefit of the story and camera. The heroine is a winsome nurse of a Salvation Army hospital and gives good characterizations to Lawrence Peyton, Dick LaReno and Madeline Fordyce.

This Mustang, "Under Azure Skies," is a three-reeler, and is one of the best produced by the American Film Company, will soon appear as a Mutual feature.

EXHIBITOR INTRODUCES NOVELTY IN SHOWING "SOCIAL PIRATES."

Manager Michaels, of the Academy Theater, Buffalo, originally booked "The Social Pirates" for one day. Following the scenes at the opening performance when the crowds forced the police to close the doors at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the engagement was extended to three days and a standing order placed for a three day run on all the following episodes. But so many of his patrons came to the manager during the closing days of the week and declared that they had been unable to see the opening episode and that they were anxious to do so that Mr. Michaels introduced an innovation with the showing of "The Corsican Sisters," the second two-reel episode by booking the first release again for a three-day showing.

"I figured rightly," says Manager Michaels, "that the word of mouth advertising given the first release, "The Little Monte Carlo," would make that a big drawing card alone for those who had missed seeing it, while the second episode was sufficient to draw the patrons who had seen the first. The rebooking wasn't at all necessary to help towards an understanding of the plot because each story is entirely complete. I just proved to myself that most exhibitors are neglecting too much the value of word of mouth advertising on the features they show successfully for short engagements."

SAMUELS SELLING RAVER PICTURES.

Twenty-eight reels of film consisting of six subjects is now being marketed by the Raver Film Corporation. In addition to their own picture "The Other Girl" adapted from Augustus Thomas' successful play in which James J. Corbett is starred, they are marketing three Ocean pictures "Life Without Soul," taken from the novel "Frankenstein" by Mrs. Mary W. Shelley; "Fortunate Youth," from William J. Locke's novel and "Driftwood," Owen Davis' play featuring Vera Michelena. These four subjects consist of five reels each.

In addition to this the Raver Film Corporation is also handling the two-reel war picture "Austria At War," the official pictures of the Austrian government endorsed by Emperor Franz Josef. Another war picture "Fighting in France," the official pictures of that nation are also being marketed by Raver. This subject consists of six reels. These latter pictures were played in the various big cities in the United States by the large daily papers in those cities.

When Frank E. Samuels leaves on a trip this week for the Raver Company he will have with him all of these pictures. This is considered to be the largest number of reels that has ever been carried by a salesman on a states right campaign. Mr. Samuels will visit all the buying centers of the country. He will take in such cities as Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Kansas City, Minneapolis and other cities through the south and west.

KING BAGGOT IN TWO PARTS.

King Baggot in his Universal-Imp Company under the direction of Henry Otto, has returned from Savannah where the finishing scenes of "Half a Rogue" were taken. Strange as it may seem, "Half a Rogue" is the first five-reel picture in which King Baggot has ever appeared.

At the present time this company is working on a real unique production which will be called "A Borrowed Identity." In this picture Mr. Baggot plays two parts, but the parts are not of the usual double identity kind where one man plays his own twin brother, etc. Each character is a totally different person with natures varying to the two extremes of goodness and badness.

This picture will be a two-reel secret adaptation of one of Robert Thomas Hardy's short stories which appeared recently in "Snappy Stories" magazine, Miss Edna Hunter, regular leading lady for Mr. Baggot, will play opposite him.

THROUGH THE LOWLANDS OF LUZON (Paramount-Holmes).

Two things make the Lowlands of Luzon an Oriental wonderland in the largest island of the Philippines—rare tropical beauty and the hemp which supplies the world. In the twelfth release of the Paramount-Burton-Holmes Travel Pictures for the week of April 17th, Mr. Holmes will show his fellow travelers this "beauty spot" of Luzon from every angle and each stage of the Philippine hemp industry from the moment the hemp is cut, through its preparation, to its sorting, bailing and shipping to all parts of the world, including the method by which it is woven into Jusi, a fabric utilized by the Filipinos as extensively as linen is used in America and Europe. Tropical beauties at their weaving; the Negritos, lowest species of human beings in existence; an exclusive native dance under lovely trees are among the features which make this film exceptional for its beauty and industrial interest.

WARDA HOWARD IN "THE SCOUT."

Warda Howard, Essanay leading woman, is exceptionally well fitted for her part in Essanay's forthcoming feature, "That Sort." The play takes her all through the European watering places including The Riviera, Monte Carlo and other famous places. Miss Howard has visited all of these places and has made a close study of the life of the habitues.

"I have made it a practice to study life and conditions every place I go," said Miss Howard, "as I never know when I shall be called upon to take such a part in a photoplay. My study of conditions and the people at the European watering places will stand me in good stead in this picture."

The play is taken from the celebrated stage production of the same title written by Basil McDonald Hastings and will be released shortly on the V-L-S-E program.

MARY FULLER IN "THROWN TO THE LIONS."

Nothing better these nice spring days than having tea in a den of lions. Here is Mary Fuller having a bit of bohea with a couple of kings of the jungle. Mary appears to be looking right into the camera, but don't believe appearances. Right out the corner of her right eye she has both them there mankillers covered and if they were to make the slightest suspicious move Mary would scream with all her might and grab the big pistol on the table. Mary is a dead shot, or at any rate she ought to be considering the number of weapons she has handled since joining out with the pictures.

Seriously, this is very dangerous work. There's no double exposure about it, either. Mary's little heart is right up in her little larynx. In fact, as Irvin Cobb says, her knees are cleaving to the roof of her mouth and her tongue is knocking together. She did it, however, just to make "Thrown to the Lions," the five-reel Universal Red Feather feature, a success. And those who have seen Director Henderson's picture pronounce it just that and more, too. It will be released on the staunch old Universal program on April 24.

Scene from "The Long Arm of Law and Order" (Paramount)

Scene from "The Long Arm of Law and Order" (Paramount)

"The Long Arm of Law and Order"

The Long Arm of Uncle Sam Has Reached Out to Crush Villa.

After months of patiently watching and waiting, the boys from the army have invaded Mexican territory with the idea of putting an end to the terrors that have been instigated through the perverted ideas of the bandit Villa.

The accompanying cartoon is the manner in which C. R. Bray, cartoonist, expresses himself on the subject in the Paramount Pictographs.

In this animated cartoon Uncle Sam is standing on the frontier watching a crowd of Mexicans acting in a manner which determines the staid, calm old gentleman to stretch forth his arm and from out of the mountains bring forth Villa, only to crush him and drop him into a rubbish can, in which also reposes Aguinaldo.

"THE CHILDREN IN THE HOUSE" (Triangle).

NORMA TALMADGE, hitherto featured with other Griffith players in Triangle plays, is to be the sole star in "The Children in the House," when that new Fine Arts picture is released early in May. As in "Martha's Vindication" with Tully Marshall and Seena Owen she will have the support of the well-known juvenile performers who respond so readily to the direction of the Franklins. In the principal grown up roles Alice Rae, Jewel Carman, William Hinckley, W. E. Lawrence, Eugene Pallette, Walter Long, George Pearce and Alva D. Blake will be seen. Roy Somerville wrote the scenario.

"The Children in the House" tells a consistently dramatic story of a young woman separated from her sweetheart by a lie circulated by an unscrupulous admirer, who weds her when she yields to a fit of pique. But the old love still burns, and finally sweeps away the restraint which her babies have imposed. She is about to elope when a driving electrical storm drives them in fright to seek shelter in her protecting arms. This brings the prospective elopers to their senses and they renounce each other forever.

Eugene Pallette, De Wolf Hopper's son in "Sunshine Dad," has the role of the brutal husband. William Hinckley, who played opposite Miss Talmadge in "Martha's Vindication," is the jilted lover.

Scene from "The Children in the House" (Triangle).

"THE CRIPPLED HAND" (Bluebird).

With Robert Leonard and David Kirkland directing, Mr. Leonard and Ella Hall playing the leading roles and a scenario from the pen of Calder Johnstone, plus the facilities of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., for making a production complete and advantageously, "The Crippled Hand," set for release May 1, bears assurance, in advance, of containing the important elements necessary to a successful creation.

While it is in no sense entirely a fairy play, the story of "Cinderella" is drawn upon to interject some of the most beautiful photograpy of the current period. There is a promise from the Bluebird management that "The Crippled Hand" will surpass in scenic and photographic beauty "Undine," the feature that scored an almost unanimous verdict of approval from the critical press and the paying public in the early releases on the same program.

Although dividing the honors with Mr. Leonard in being featured, this film brings Ella Hall into her first great prominence as a star, after three years of constantly improving artistry, displayed in almost every type of roles. In "The Crippled Hand" she has a part which might have been especially written for her—a little girl, "dreamer of dreams," who works hard by day in a department store and at night, in her dreams, rambles in fairyland.

Gladys Rockwell, a most beautiful leading woman; Kingsley Benedict, Marc Robbins, Lule Warrenton, Betty Schade, Carmen Phillips, Ernest Shields and other Bluebird photoplayers are principals in a cast that enlists scores of supernumeraries in the manifold scenes of fairyland splendors and the more material pictures as the plot progresses.

AT WORK ON SCENES FOR "THE ISLE OF LOVE."

Under the direction of Edwin Middleton, Miss Gertrude McCoy is now working on the "South Sea" scenes in the Gaumont Mutual Masterpicture in which she is to be starred. Although this big five-reel feature is not to be released until May 15, it is now well under way. Excellent locations for that part of the story depicting the life of the heroine and her rescuer on what they found to be an unhabited island have been found near Jacksonville, Fla.

One of the big features of "The Isle of Love" is the burning of an ocean liner in mid-ocean. It is in these scenes that Earl O. Schenck, as the wireless operator, rescues Miss McCoy first from the fire and then from death by drowning as they flounder in the water. Other picturesque scenes advance the story at a small seaside resort where the heroine first meets the man whom later she scorns and then learns to love. Miss Iva Shepard, now starring in Gaumont's "The Haunted Manor," has an important role in this production.

Others in Miss McCoy's support are Robert Clungston, Charles W. Travis and W. J. Butler.

PATHE SERIAL DEPARTMENT BUSY.

The Pathe Serial Department is flourishing like the proverbial green bay tree. G. A. Smith, the serial director, has added to his staff Irving Weil, a well-known newspaper man and for a number of years connected with the editorial department of the New York Evening Journal. Harry J. Walsh will also aid in the Serial Department in addition to his work in the Advertising Department, of which P. A. Parsons is the manager.

Four men are now traveling throughout the country lining up the newspapers in every important city and town on current and future serials.

The new series, "Who's Guilty?" will be released on May 8th, and is evolved from an entirely new idea and one that will arouse wide-spread interest. Another big feature is also under preparation to be released at the close of the highly successful "The Iron Claw." Several very prominent players have been engaged for this production, but the details are being kept secret for later release.

Thanhouser's April Drive

Unusual Schedule of Plays and Players in New Rochelle List.—Some Novel Releases.

FLORIDA sunshine and northern snow furnish variety to the Thanhouser program for the month of April, and Florence La Badie and Gladys Hulette carry the happy burden in the New Rochelle five-reel offerings. Of exceptional interest is the release on the twentieth entitled "Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player." This is Mr. Thanhouser's contribution to the Shakespeare Tercentenary Celebration, and Florence La Badie will be seen in the star role. It is a unique offering since, without being a play from the pen of the Poet of Avon, it nevertheless brings into play the characters he made famous. Around Miss La Badie, as a girl of today, revolves the Baconian controversy. In writing the scenario Philip Lonergan hit upon the novel plan of visualizing Shakespeare and Bacon. They both "appear personally," and the direction of Frederick Sullivan brings them to life startlingly, as he also does the characters from Shakespeare's plays. At the same time the offering is not a costume piece, for the events about Miss La Badie blend the world of today with that of Shakespeare's time. There's U. S. army posts and action on the Mexican border, lending all the novelty that could be desired.

Another five-reeler is Lloyd Lonergan's story, "The Traffic Cop." This stars Gladys Hulette, in a play replete with thrills. To make it, Director Mitchell worked in conjunction with the police department of New York, and secured some concessions which make the film really a civic drama. Miss Hulette never looked more captivating than as the little sweetheart of the big mounted cop. Police Commissioner Woods is highly gratified with the portions of the film dealing with serious police activities.

There are laughs in abundance in the April Falstaffs. Director Ellery has struck a fast comedy gait and his sure fire keeps him to the fore as an expert in legitimate comedy. From Florida, Director Howell contributes laughs via Riley Chamberlin, Walter Hiess, Louise Emerald Bates. The "Oscar and Conrad" Company, Cooper and McNish, will now take the Southern trip for a change of atmosphere.

Mr. Thanhouser will soon announce a new five-reel offering, made by Ernest Warde, featuring Valkyrien (Baroness Dewitz). Mr. Warde achieved unusual distinction by his handling of "Silas Marner," in which his eminent pere, Frederick Warde, played the title role. The beautiful Baroness will hereafter appear in five-reel features almost exclusively.

Universal Not in Merger.

New York, April 7, 1916.

Dear Sir: Will you kindly deny the story that has been published regarding the proposed merger of moving picture companies, at least as far as the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is concerned.

This company knows nothing of such a merger, nor is it interested in any manner whatsoever. Our name has been included in the list of companies reported to be merging and we feel that the effects have been harmful to our business.

We have been receiving queries, not only from our employees but from the public, as to the truth of the story, but our vigorous denials do not seem to be able to keep up the pace set by the rumor itself. It is more than probable that many of your readers will be interested in knowing the exact truth—and the truth is that the Universal is not in any way, shape or manner connected nor interested in any merger, real or imaginary.

To drive this fact home and without any intention of boasting, I submit the argument that the equipment of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is now so complete that it could produce all the pictures that are now being made in the United States without having to merge with any other concern to accomplish it.

Sincerely yours,

CARL LAEMMLE,
President.

Hearst Has No Interest in Wharton's.

Ithaca, N. Y., April 8, 1916.

Moving Picture World,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: We desire to correct a statement that appeared recently in certain newspapers to the effect that William Randolph Hearst has become financially interested in this company. While we would deeply appreciate this fact if it were true, we feel that in justice to Mr. Hearst, it is only right to deny it. We have no desire to make capital of Mr. Hearst's name nor have him annoyed with unnecessary inquiries.

The actual fact of the matter is that we are affiliated with the International Film Service (of which Mr. Hearst is president), as contracting producers. We are proud to acknowledge this and hope the affiliation will be of long standing.

Yours truly,

WHARTON, INC.
Theo. W. Wharton,
President.

Foco Adjustable Seats

The A. H. Andrews Co.'s New Picture Theater Seat Can Be Made Into a Child's Seat in Minute.

ONE naturally looks at new wrinkles that some up in the interested but rather skeptical way at first. One would be perfectly safe in his skepticism if he were sure that his competitor would also remain skeptical. The rub comes when we find that he has adopted the novelty and made his house just so much more attractive than ours. Exhibitors may be inclined to regard the new Foco chairs in this way. But these Foco chairs make a house more attractive to those who are bringing children to the show. For, if grown-ups will think a minute, they will realize how often even they have to crane their necks to get a full and unobstructed view of the screen while the little tots sitting down in the hollow of their tender years, must perforce lose a lot of the action. They haven't got the long necks to crane. The Foco chair puts them on the same plane with their parents.

The A. H. Andrews Company, of 115-117 Wabash avenue, Chicago, has issued an interesting little booklet describing the new Foco chair it is putting on the market, and this same little booklet is a bit of advertising literature that the up-to-the-minute exhibitor can hardly afford to neglect.

The same chair is used by the parent when it is in one position and by an easy manipulation, the height of the seat is increased to that the child seated in it has his eyes brought to the same level with the parent's eyes, and so he sees the screen to much better advantage than before. It is worth looking into.

NEW $500,000 FILM COMPANY FORMED.

Articles of incorporation have been filed for the Great West Film Company. Capital stock was given as $500,000. The corporation will make its headquarters at St. Paul, with a western branch at Malta, Mont.

The incorporators were: Harry K. Jones and Edmund G. Campbell of St. Paul, and Wallace D. Coburn, the cowboy poet of Malta, Mont. Chicago motion picture men are interested in the company.

The object of the corporation is to produce motion pictures, particularly those of a Western nature. Outdoor work will be performed on a tract of land embracing nearly 250,000 acres near Malta, Mont. Offices and a studio will be established in St. Paul.

Charles W. Hitchcock, formerly of the Essanay Film Company, probably will be hired as director. An option has been obtained on his services. D. C. Bennett of Chicago will be associated in the company.

"THE QUALITY OF FAITH" A STRONG FEATURE.

When Gaumont releases May first "The Quality of Faith" as a Mutual Masterpicture, de Luxe Edition, the screen will present a remarkably vivid picture of labor conditions, the pressure exerted on an upright minister by the wealthiest member of his congregation, and a story of misplaced affection that finally finds responsive answer in the heart of a girl whom society had banned. Alexander Gaden appears as the minister, and the girl is played by Miss Gertrude Robinson. A strong supporting Gaumont company has been provided, including Lucille Taft, Charles W. Travis, John Reinhard, Henry W. Pemberton, Alan Robinson and John Mackin.

Scene from "The Quality of Faith" (Gaumont).

"The Quality of Faith," which was written by Charles T. Gardner, has many of the sterling qualities which made Winston Churchill's novel, "The Inside of the Cup," a "best seller." It boldly faces some of the biggest problems of society. As the minister, Mr. Gaden is enabled to demonstrate his versatility. Marna is played by Miss Robinson.

Dustin Farnum Twice a Famous "David"

To Appear Shortly as "David Garrick" and "Davy Crockett" for Pallas Pictures.

Both in the motion picture and the stage drama Dustin Farnum has responded to most every surname there with the possible exception of "David." As if to make up for Dusty's long neglect of this name, he will be presented on the screen shortly in the title role of two well-known subjects—"David Garrick" and "Davy Crockett." Although Garrick and Crockett were both baptised "David," these two personages, as is well known, are widely different characters, all of which affords Dustin Farnum particular opportunity to display his rare versatility.

The productions will be under the direction of Frank Lloyd. The costumes are exact duplicates of several extravagant heirlooms of the period and the sets are the result of consultations with authorities on the subject. One of the features of the photoplay is a full sized reproduction of the stage of the old Drury Lane theater as it was in 1742, when the boxes ran nearly to the backdrop and clusters of candles were used in place of the present footlights. A replica of Drury Lane itself has been faithfully produced.

In "Davy Crockett," Frank Mayo's story of a hundred years ago, Dustin Farnum offers another characterization of a historical personage. Under the direction of William D. Taylor.

In both "David Garrick" and "Davy Crockett." Winifred Kingston appears in the principal supporting role opposite Dustin Farnum. Herbert Standing, the veteran English character actor, who has just recovered from an accident, also appears in support of the star in both photoplays, which will be seen on the Paramount Program shortly.

TRIANGLE GETS BIG CONTRACTS.

The Triangle Film Corporation reports that its New York branch has just ended a record breaking week for the increase of its service in the distribution of the picture features of Griffith, Ince and Sennett. Alfred Weiss, district manager, and S. Eckman, Jr., manager of the New York branch, were the collaborators. Each obtained five additions on circuits which have already tested the drawing powers of the Triangle plays. Weiss got five new theaters of the Marcus Loew chain and Eckman gets credit for increasing the Proctor-Triangle theaters to eleven.

Loew will put the new service into his Broadway house, the New York at 45th street, also the Eighty-sixth street Circle and Murray Hill theaters; the Lexington Avenue, New Rochelle; and the Globe in Boston. Proctor, who has been using Triangle at the Fifth Avenue, 23rd street and 125th street theaters in New York, and in his houses in Elizabeth and Plainfield, N. J., adds two theaters in Troy, the New and the Griswold, the Leland in Albany and the Proctors of Mt. Vernon and Yonkers.

Fox, Keith and Poli have been using Triangle for several months. Mr. Eckman is now serving 300 theaters from the New York exchange and plans a great spring drive that will increase this number to half a thousand at least.

"COLONEL HEEZA LIAR WINS A PENNANT"

(Paramount-Bray).

Single-handed and alone, Colonel Heeza Liar wins the Battle of Dead Man's Hill and saves the map of Europe in the 13th release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon for the week of April 17th.

From a private trench at the top of Dead Man's Hill No. 23, he takes a hand in the war's progress and satisfies himself that his marksmanship has played havoc with the enemy. He settles down to enjoy himself by picking flies off a battered village house ten miles away, but the enemy disturbs his peace of mind by destroying his trench. Hopping on a passing cannon ball the Colonel retires hastily, but discovers that his men either have been shot or have deserted.

An idea restores the Colonel's backbone just as the last remaining cannon has been shot to pieces. Pulling the small end of the cannon barrel from the wreckage he bats the oncoming missiles of the enemy back on their heads until the men are in full retreat. He pulls down the pennant on the enemy's ruined fortifications just as reinforcements arrive.

BOOKINGS FOR "NE'ER-DO-WELL."

The Orpheum theater in Cleveland, through Manager F. P. Woda, booked 'The Ne'er-Do-Well" for three weeks, starting Monday, March 27. The critics in the newspapers were liberal in their praise of the picture and devoted a special section to the attraction.

A two-weeks' booking has just been concluded with the Tabor Grande in Denver for a showing of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," at prices of 25 and 50 cents.

Henry Corn, manager of the Aetna Amusement Company, operating the Olympia theater, in Broadway, New York City, in a letter addressed to the V-L-S-E, Inc., states that on Saturday and Sunday, March 25 and March 26, at advanced prices, the house was packed to more than seating capacity on both nights. Mr. Corn has booked the film for a return date.

"JOCKEY OF DEATH" FOR STATE RIGHTS.

Preparations are just being completed for the marketing on the states rights plan of "The Jockey of Death," the sensational screen melodrama which has created such a furore in England during the past few months. The distributing company will be known as Signet Films and will be directed by J. L. Kempner, the well known film man whose previous activities with "The Drug Terror" and as an executive with the Kinemacolor company, will be recalled by exhibitors throughout the country.

"The Jockey of Death" is the product of a big concern who are dedicated to the policy of making not more than one big feature picture a year. It was conceived and produced, it is said, with the one thought in mind that the motion picture industry was becoming hungry for real screen thrills. A pair of daring European circus acrobats were engaged for the leading roles and given "stunts" to do that are said to represent the most extraordinary performances of the kind which have ever been atempted. The production called for the construction of a big European circus, a number of the scenes being laid in a building which would suggest Madison Square Garden, New York City, as it is to be found at this present writing with the big Barnum & Bailey performances going on in it. A number of the milder thrills are staged in the circus but the big ones, it is said, come in the last two of the five reels of the picture which show the trained circus acrobats using all of their skill, daring, and cunning in eluding capture at the hands of their enemies. At one point the pair slide down the side of a mountain on a cable put up for the purpose of hauling fagots of wood. At another place an escape is made over a wire cable stretched across a river when the girl tears the rubber tires from an ordinary bicycle and rides the machine across the cable with her companion hanging on behind.

"The Jockey," it is said, is to be offered here merely as a startling melodrama, demanding its place in the sun merely for the excitement it creates. Gaumont owns the rights for Great Britain and, it is said, has played the feature with such good returns that it has been spoken of as the biggest money-winner in the British Isles during the past year.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

TO INSURE the best photography possible Essanay has more than one camera working on all feature photoplays. The best negative of the scene is selected. It is only on the smaller scenes that one camera alone is used. On the larger, two machines are trained on the set, and for the massive spectacles now possible in Essanay's great studio three cameras are frequently used.

Preparations are under way at the Gaumont-Mutual studios in Flushing for the reception of the great army of players who have been working during the past five months at the winter studios in Jacksonville. Among the newcomers to Flushing, after the closing of the Southern studios, will be Gertrude McCoy, Alexander Gaden, Marguerite Courtot and several other stars, all of whom have been engaged since the opening of the Jacksonville plant.

"The Day of Days," a two-reel comedy drama, is nearing completion by Director William Worthington, with Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon in the leading roles. Others in the cast are: Helen Wright, Ruby Cox, T. D. Crittendon, Jack Conolly and William Canfield. The story is written by F. McGrew Willis.

A triangle within a triangle has been discovered in Shannon Fife's latest Triangle release, "The Habit of Happiness," written especially for Douglas Fairbanks. For Fife wishes to emphasize that he wants the star and the director, Alan Dwan, to share all honors with him, making it a Dwan-Fairbanks-Fife picture. The picture has proved to be the most interesting of all of the Fairbanks Triangle releases because it shows "Doug" not only as a deep-thinking, serious philosopher, but as a care-free, cut-up, happy-go-lucky comedian as well.

The nineteenth episode of "Graft," which serial has been suggested by various authors and prepared for the screen by Walter Woods is being filmed by Director Richard Stanton, who also plays the leading role, with Jane Novak opposite. The nineteenth episode tells of the well-known badger game of the crook.

Demands made on the publicity departments of the Mutual for portraits of Charlie Chaplin have been so great that since announcement of his signing with the Mutual was made more than 1,200 have been forwarded to newspaper editors in all sections of the country. Fifty Chaplin portraits, for which he posed while on his recent visit to New York, have been sent to London publications, twelve to newspapers throughout the British Isles, and four to papers published in Australia.

Miss Bessie Eyton has a wonderful make-up as Virginia Carvel in the forthcoming Selig production of "The Crisis." In her hoop skirts and mittens she might have stepped right out of some old-fashioned portrait. Miss Eyton designed all of her own gowns for the late fifties.

Having enjoyed her "wild, bare-footed existence" in "Audrey," Pauline Frederick was enthusiastic when told that she was to play a Gypsy in her next Famous Players production on the Paramount Program, "The Moment Before," which is based on Israel Zangwill's play of that name.

"The Tale of a Coat" gives opportunity for some of the comedy work of Orral Humphrey, the American (Mutual) star. A long, plain, severe coat is the cause of all the trouble —or rather, the life-saver—since it disguises the leading man as a missionary.

* * *

The Smalleys, within a few days, will have completed the five-reel feature, "The Eye of God," which was written by Lois Weber and in which Tyrone Power plays the feature lead, with Miss Weber opposite, and a large cast of Universal City actors in the support. This is a story of a man who commits a crime and seeks the wild life in order to forget it, but is followed by the eye of the Almighty until his electrocution.

* * *

Cables from England to George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, tell that a shipment of the new feature plays has been safely received and that the pictures have sprung into speedy favor. "The Misleading Lady," "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," "The Daughter of the City" and "Vultures of Society" were recent releases included in the consignment.

Jimsey May is a new Balboan. In private life she is the wife of Director Eason.

Monte Carlo, mad and dashing, is the setting for an entertaining comedy entitled "Peanuts and Powder," now being produced by Archer McMackin at the American (Mutual) studios. The peanuts explode in a most annoying way, and cause a lot of merriment for the spectators. Carol Halloway, John Sheehan and John Steppling are the stars.

Ernest Maupain takes one of the principal parts in "Sherlock Holmes," supporting William Gillette. As the leader of the London crooks, this Essanay heavy actor has a part which he enjoys and which gives him every opportunity to display his ability. Mr. Maupin is thoroughly conversant with the part, having played it before on the stage in Paris.

* * *

"The Millionaire Engineer" has been completed by Director Henry McRae, and he is now engaged in filming a two-reel railroad drama entitled "Holdup of the Harding Special." Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill play the leading roles.

* * *

Sydney Mason has been featured in Miss Courtot's support in both "The Dead Alive" and "Feathertop." In the new photoplay as yet unnamed, the strongest male role will go to Henry W. Pemberton, since he is the ideal type for the unusually strong part which is the foil for Miss Courtot's own role. Because of the fact that certain features of the plot are new to the screen, no announcement of the story in its entirety is being made at this time by the Gaumont Mutual Company.

* * *

Lewis S. Stone, who appeared with Gladys Hanson and Bryant Washburn in "The Havoc," a recent Essanay feature, will shortly take the leading part in "According to the Code," soon to be constructed by Essanay.

* * *

Having served her term behind the ribbon counter for "The Saleslady," Hazel Dawn is now in the Georgia mountains cavorting about in her bare tootsies in the interests of her next Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Feud Girl."

Rube Miller, star and director of Vogue-Mutual comedy releases, is in the throes of a prehistoric comedy in which he has invented some humorous business and is gettitg lots of fun out of his own part. Madge Kirby is playing opposite him.

* * *

Director E. J. Le Saint will return to the desert during the coming week to get some more scenes for Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Three Godfathers," in which the leading roles are taken by Harry Carey and Stella Razeto. The company of twenty-five people have already spent ten days at Mojave getting local atmosphere, at which time they secured wonderful sand storm scenes. Later a number of the interior effects and street scenes were taken at Universal City. It will take at least another week to complete the filming of this photoplay.

When Clara Kimball Young begins the production of her pictures for her own corporation in July she will inaugurate a system in studio management by which she will be able to work in two pictures at the same time. There will be two directors, and their work will be so planned that Miss Young's time will always be utilized for one of the pictures in course of production and she will be able to present herself in twelve pictures a year.

Director Robert Leonard has commenced filming a five-reel feature photoplay in which Ella Hall plays the lead, and which is declared to be one of the best stories Leonard has worked on for a long time. It is entitled "Ambrosia."

Director Jacques Jaccard has completed the picturization of "The Cage Man," an underworld drama, in which G. Raymond Nye is featured in the heavy role, with Roberta Wilson playing opposite.

Emil Roe is now a member of Balboa. He has appeared in some of the most notable eastern photoplay productions. Roe is a distinguished-looking man and could easily pass for a South American diplomat.

* * *

Director Jay Hunt has completed filming the five-reel feature entitled "Wheels of Power," in which Adele Farrington is being featured with C. M. Hammond playing opposite. Others in the cast are: Mina Jeffries, Mrs. Jay Hunt, O. C. Jackson, Kingsley Benedict, H. F. Crane and Harry Mann. The story is by Gertrude Nelson Andrews, and from it Hunt prepared his scenario.

* * *

Director Jack Halloway of the American Film Company at Santa Barbara, has finished the production of "The Man from Manhattan," a five-reel picture by J. Edward Hungerford, which again proves the dramatic ability of Rhea Mitchell, William Stowell, Perry Banks and several other American favorites.

* * *

Director Allen Curtis, with his Universal Joker Company, have completed a one-reel comedy, "A Wife for Ransom," featuring Gale Henry and William Franey. Others in the cast are Miss Lillian Peacock, M. Moranti and C. Conklin.

Some Boston Bills

Non-Inflammable Film Bill Re-enacted—A Peculiar New Measure That Will Make Signing of Stage Name to Hotel Register an Offense with Heavy Fine—Bill Against Minors in Theaters Eliminated.

By William Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—The bill to permit the use of cinematographs using only cellulose acetate films in buildings of second or third class construction in the city of Boston was re-enacted without debate by the Massachusetts Senate on Thursday, April 6.

On the same day the Senate passed to be engrossed a bill which, if enacted into law, will subject every actor and actress, who registers at a Massachusetts hotel under his or her stage name, if that name is not their real ones, to a fine of $500. This bill is not aimed at the stage people or film folk. It is part of an uplift movement to correct the morals of a certain class of people in the Commonwealth, but the language of the act may prove embarrassing to actors and actresses stopping or playing in this state. This bill comes up in the House of Representatives this week, where a determined effort is to be made to defeat it or at least amend it so that the purpose of the act will be more clearly defined.

The legislative committee on Social Welfare eliminated moving picture theaters from the bill recommended by the State Board of Labor and Industries, which prohibited the employment of minors in bowling alleys, billiard rooms, theaters and other places. The bill as originally drawn included moving picture theaters and exchanges, but the members of the committee failed to see where the arguments of the members of the State Board held good when it came down to the question of employing children in this sort of amusement enterprise.

BOSTON OFFICE OF HEARST FILM SERVICE.

Opening of International Film Service Under Frank H. Vine.

Boston, Mass.—The International Film Service, the new Hearst organization, has launched its campaign in New England and things are going forward with a rush. Frank H. Vine, former manager of the New England branch of the World Film Corporation, has assumed charge of the Boston office of the International outfit and predicts a brilliant future for the latest New England enterprise.

Mr. Vine is well acquainted with conditions in New England and should prove a valuable asset to the International Film Service. He has as an assistant Forrest Smith, who was also formerly connected with the local branch of the World Film. Harry Finn, another old World man, is in charge of the International Film Service's poster department and Miss Helen Coghlin, erstwhile assistant booker in the Boston Pathe exchange, is doing the booking.

The men on the road through New England for the International include R. L. McIntyre, who was formerly general manager of the Henderson theater circuit in New Hampshire and Vermont. Victor Leon, who asisted in exploiting the "Birth of a Nation" in this territory, and George E. Richardson, who was at one time connected with the Phialdelphia Pathe exchange, and more recently with the local branch of the Universal, are also traveling through New England for the new corporation.

Manager Vine expects to increase his force in a short time and at present is busy exploiting the "Mysteries of Myra," the International's new fifteen-episode serial featuring Howard Estabrook and Jean Sothern. The story is by Hereward Carrington, the scenario by Charles W. Goddard and the film is being directed by the Wharton Brothers.

The New England offices of the International are at present located in the same building with Quigley's Film Exchange. A modern, up-to-the-minute exchange building is being built at Nos. 48 and 50 Piedmont street, which the local branch of the International Film Service will occupy when it is completed, which will probably be around the first of July.

George J. Schaeffer at World Film Helm

George J. Schaeffer, division manager of the World Film Corporation, has been directing the affairs of the Boston office of that corporation since Mr. Vine relinquished its management. Several other changes in the personnel of the New England branches of several of the larger film corporations are expected to take place in the near future and it is rumored that many old faces will be seen in Boston again.

Two Exchanges Move.

Boston, Mass.—The local Pathe exchange and that of the General Film Company moved into their new homes this week, both of which are the latest things in film exchanges. The new Pathe exchange is situated in Isabella street and the General alongside of it, at the corner of Isabella and Ferdinand streets, just on the outskirts of Boston's ever-increasing film district. It is unlikely that Louis B. Mayer, head of the American Features, and who is handling the Metro output in this territory, will be able to move into his new quarters in Ferdinand street before the first of May.

Ernest Horstmann Made Exalted Ruler.

Salem, Mass.—Ernest H. Horstmann, President of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, Inc., and Vice-President of the Olympia Theatres, Inc., was elected Exalted Ruler of the Salem Lodge of Elks on Wednesday, April 5.

In honor of his election and as a token of their esteem, several of his friends in the moving picture business journeyed down to Salem and presented Mr. Horstmann with a beautiful diamond studded Elk's tooth charm. The presentation was made by the Esquire of the Lodge and took Mr. Horstmann completely by surprise. When he had recovered from his embarrassment he made a brief speech in which he thanked the donors of the charm and said he would treasure it all his life.

Among the film men who were present were Louis Boas, of Fall River; Harry F. Campbell, New England manager of the Fox Film; Frank H. Vine, New England manager of the International Film; P. J. Leydon, proprietor of the Imperial theater in South Boston; Manager Malley of Gordon & Lord's Olympic theater, Boston, and J. Lourie, proprietor of the Beacon and Shawmut theaters, Boston.

After all, there is only one moving picture paper that you really need, and this is IT, conducted by the largest and most experienced staff of editors and correspondents.

LOUIS GOLDSTEIN TO ROYAL.

By Jacob Kalter, Special Correspondent, 503 Century Bldg., Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—On Saturday, April 1, Louis Goldstein, an excellent likeness of whom is here reproduced, assumed charge of the Royal Feature Film Exchange, 288 Market street. Mr. Goldstein previously was manager of the Goldstein Film Exchange in the same building. When this exchange was given up, Mr. Goldstein became assistant to Leo Singer in managing the Royal. The new manager has many plans for improving the exchange. He reports that the animal pictures released by the E. & R. Jungle Film Company, have been very successfully introduced in this territory.

New Asbury Park Company.

Asbury Park, N. J.—The V. G. S. Amusement Company has recently been incorporated under the laws of the State of New Jersey for the purpose of conducting places of amusement. The new concern is of Asbury Park and has been capitalized at $10,000, L. Oscar Grenelle, Charles E. Van Wickle and Charles E. Schanck being the principal incorporators.

NORTH CAROLINA NEWS LETTER.

By Clarence L. Lenz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., Washington, D. C.

S. A. Lynch Buys Fine Organ.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.—S. A. Lynch is planning the installation of a new pipe organ at the Galax theater, to be used in connection with the Galax orchestra. It is expected that the organ will be delivered to the theater some time during the month.

L. Blomberg May Build.

Asheville, N. C.—It is reported that L. Blomberg, a well known motion picture exhibitor of this section, and an associate are planning the erection of a one-story motion picture theater on Eagle street, near the corner of Biltmore avenue, Asheville, N. C., which is to be devoted to the showing of pictures for colored patrons exclusively. The house will be of a size sufficient to comfortably accommodate between four and five hundred patrons. It is to be very attractive and modern in every particular. This new theater should be ready for opening on or about the fifteenth of May.

New Goldsboro House.

Goldsboro, N. C.—H. R. Mason, who operates the Acme theater here, is reported planning a new house with a seating capacity of eight hundred to be opened some time in May. This theater will be equipped with a Mirror screen, and it will have a model Wilmont ventilating system.

J. H. Melton Running the Grand.

Enfield, N. C.—J. H. Melton, who formerly operated the New theater at Robersonville, N. C., is now running the Grand theater, at Enfield. He is succeeded in his position at Robersonville by a Mr. Cannon.

North Carolina Theater Notes.

Charlotte, N. C.—The management of the Broadway theater, in Charlotte, N. C., has added materially to the attractiveness of that house by the addition of two handsome entrance doors of upholstered leather with heavy brass trimmings.

Wilmington, N. C.—The Victoria theater in Wilmington, N. C., was closed on March 25, and the doors will not again be reopened until after the conclusion of the Chapman-Alexander revival, which begins on April 9. Upon the reopening of the Victoria, the management announces, something different will be put on.

Asheville, N. C.—The Majestic theater, in Asheville, reports an increasing attendance at the children's Saturday morning matiness, an innovation at this house. This testifies, the management says, to the appreciation of the parents of the opportunity these matinees afford to the younger folks to see well adapted high-grade juvenile productions. The matinee hours are from 10 to 12 a. m.

Winston-Salem, N. C.—The Pilot and Elmont theaters in Winston-Salem have recently been equipped with new silver fiber screens manufactured by the Mirror Screen Company of Shelbyville, Ind.

Winston-Salem, N. C.—The Rex theater, a house exclusively for colored people on East Fourth street, Winston-Salem, has been renovated and redecorated, and a new lighting system has been installed.

Raleigh, N. C.—Aaronson & Brown, operating several theaters in Raleigh, N. C., are soon to have another new house that will have a seating capacity of about eight hundred. This theater will be on the site of the old Crystal, which was burned down during the fire which destroyed the big newspaper plant in that city. It is to be one of the most modern places south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Raleigh, N. C.—Manager Sterling Smith of the Auditorium theater, in Raleigh, has put in two new projecting machines so as to give better projection for his new feature service.

IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Local Theater Notes.

Pittston, Pa.—Louis M. Swaab announces having recently installed considerable new equipment in the Princess theater, Pittston, Pa., J. P. Joyce, manager. Included in the equipment was a Hallberg generator, two Simplex projecting machines, a Caille ticket chopper and many other necessities.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Dr. Steinberg, proprietor of the Strand, Twelfth street and Girard avenue, is about to leave for an extended trip throughout the West and is busy making final peparations for his journey. Many friends in the film industry in Philadelphia wish Dr. Steinberg the best of luck while on the road.

Philadelphia Matters

Local No. 307, Picture Operators' Union, Busy Preparing for Grand Banquet to Commemorate Its Fifth Anniversary—Will Be Held at Hotel Majestic on May 23—Burning of Liberty Motion Picture Plant—Other Items.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Members of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 307 are actively engaged at the present time in making preparations for the banquet to be held at the Hotel Majestic, May 23, 1916, in commemoration of the fifth anniversary of the organization of the local. Efforts are being made to have this gathering surpass any previous affair conducted by the moving picture interests in Philadelphia and the members of the executive committee are spending every idle moment in an endeavor to accomplish this end. Invitations have been extended to many and every indication points to a record-breaking attendance.

B. F. Bache, president of the organization; John J. Stevens, vice-president; Louis Krouse, business agent; S. A. Goldberg, H. B. Johns and Walter G. Murray, secretary, are working industriously to further the banquet, and they are planning a novel surprise for those who journey to the Majestic on the evening of May 23. The above mentioned gentlemen are live wires and when they promise something in the way of a surprise there will be great occasion for arrranging to be present in person. If honest endeavor and conscientious appliance count for anything this event should prove all that is expected and all who can possibly attend should arrange for their seats at the festive board.

Local Growing Speedily.

The Philadelphia Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 307 has experienced an enormous growth in membership of recent date and has steadily increased its effectiveness until it now represents one of the strongest organizations of its kind in the country. It is a remarkable fact that during the entire five years of the history of the local they have never had a breach of any description with the exhibitors and have alweys worked hand in hand with the industry in general.

FIRE IN PLANT OF LIBERTY MOTION PICTURE COMPANY.

Germantown Picture Factory Destroyed —Loss Estimated at $120,000— Whole Town Lighted Up.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The huge plant of the Liberty Motion Picture Company, 20 Herman street, Germantown, was completely destroyed by a fire of unknown origin early on the morning of April 2, causing a loss estimated in the neighborhood of $125,000. The fire, which was of a most spectacular nature, raged with unabated fury for some time and everything of any value was consumed in the conflagration with the exception of about $25,000 worth of films, which were in a vault in the yard in the rear of the plant.

As the flames gained in fury, practically all of Germantown was illuminated in a weird manner and six heavy explosions shook the section as chemicals stored in the studios were ignited. Much valuable aniline dyestuffs, purchased before the outbreak of hostilities in Europe and now almost priceless were consumed by the flames. The neighborhood of the fire presented a remarkable sight as actors and actresses rushed forth from their boarding houses scantily clad in whatever garments they could procure in their hasty exit.

Freeman Bernstein, president of the company, and his wife, known in the theatrical world as Mary Ward, were in New York at the time of the fire and were unaware of the calamity until their return to Philadelphia. J. Burton Mustin is treasurer and general manager of the company, the property being owned by the Sagendorph estate. Readers of the Moving Picture World will recall that the company went into the hands of a receiver a short time ago.

No Bids for National Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The National theater, well known to every Philadelphian as the former home of such plays as "Tracked Around the World," "Escaped from Sing Sing" and many other soul-stirring dramas, Tenth and Callowhill streets, was recently offered at public sale by Samuel T. Freeman & Co., well known auctioneers of Fifteenth and Chestnut streets. Although strenuous efforts were resorted to in order to obtain a bid upon the property no one evidently wished the theater. The property is owned by the estate of Thomas F. Kelley and must be sold in order to settle the estate. It is assessed at $75,000.

Frank Emmett Leases the Madison.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Madison theater, the prominent West End playhouse, located on Chaw street, near Madison street, Allentown, Pa., has recently been leased by Frank Emmett for a long term of years. Mr. Emmett, who is also manager of the Regent and Lyceum theaters, is one of the best known exhibitors in that section of Pennsylvania and it is largely due to his individual efforts that so many high class photoplays have been brought to Allentown. Mr. Emmett intends to operate his latest addition along the same lines as his other theaters, and in accordance with this policy has installed considerable new machinery and other equipment.

William Jones Will Manage the Hart.

Philadelphia, Pa.—William Jones, a member of the Philadelphia Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 307, will manage the Hart theater, Frankford avenue and Norris street, which will open on Easter Monday. The theater has been entirely renovated throughout and will be one of Philadelphia's show places in the future. New equipment has been installed and it is planned to operate the theater upon a first class basis.

Airdomes Preparing.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Marked activity has been displayed of recent date by the management of the various park theaters throughout this section of the country preparatory to opening for the coming summer season. Bookings are being arranged, exteriors remodeled, interiors renovated and an enormous amount of new equipment installed. Judging from the general prosperous condition of practically every line of industry, it is believed that this summer will prove a banner season for recreation centers and places of amusement and plans are being made accordingly.

Sam Roseman's Eight-Pound Baby.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Sam Roseman, of the Philadelphia Film Exchange, was recently blessed with an eight pound bouncing baby boy and is proudly telling of the latest addition to his family in local film circles. Congratulations, Sam.

Penn Gardens Sold

Washington Summer Garden and Theater on Pennsylvania Avenue and Twenty-first Street Bought by Syndicate of New York and Washington Business Men—Price Said to Be $250,000—Theater May Be Enlarged and Improved.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth Street, N. E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Announcement has been made that Penn Gardens, both the motion picture theater and park property, located at the northeast corner of Twenty-First street and Pennsylvania avenue, Northwest, has been sold to a syndicate of New York and Washington business men for a consideration of $225,000. The sale was negotiated by the A. F. Fox Company, and deeds transferring ownership have been placed on record.

The Penn Gardens property occupies a site about 124 feet front by 157 feet deep, covering an area of 20,000 square feet. It includes a winter garden for motion pictures, with private boxes, manager's office, etc., and a lobby with refreshment room and an arcade adjoining. Through the arcade there is an entrance to a large hall, which is used for dancing. It is said that the summer garden seats about 2,750 people and contains a refreshment garden for the dispensing of refreshments to summer patrons. The theater is of cement, brick, stone and structural steel.

The gardens were built originally by Edmund K. Fox who operated them until incorporated nearly a year ago, when it went into the hands of the company which has just turned over its interests to the new company. It is further reported that the new company contemplates enlarging the theater and making a number of other important improvements to the property this month and the theater will be closed for two weeks, during which the interior and exterior will be repainted and redecorated, and a thorough renovation will be given the house. A new concrete floor is to be laid and arrangement will be made for the accommodation of a large orchestra. A new and improved lighting system will be among the important changes that are to be made to the building and a large flashing electric sign will be erected as an advertising and decorative feature on the front of the theater.

Avenue Grand Theater, Washington, D. C.

The taking over of the Avenue Grand is another step looking to the fulfillment of Mr. Crandall's ambition to have a motion picture house in each section of the city. His first enterprise was a small proposition at Fourth and East Capital streets, about ten years ago, when the business here was in its infancy. This place accommodated about 85 people. He later conducted an open-air park at North Capitol street and New York avenue for several seasons, after which he started in the business in earnest. He opened Crandall's theater, at Ninth and E streets, Northwest, and built up a business which has carried his reputation all over the District of Columbia.

Crandall's Theater, Washington, D. C.

Crandall's Apollo Theater, Washington, D. C.

His next step, a recent move, was to secure control of the Apollo theater, on H street, between Fifth and Seventh streets, Northeast. This house is one of the finest appointed and most attractive places in the city. It has a seating capacity of about 800 and is adjoined by a large air-dome.

In the Avenue Grand he has associated with him Joseph P. Morgan, who operates the Princess theater, in the Northeast Masonic Temple building, at 12th and H streets, Northeast.

It was also recently announced through the columns of the Moving Picture World that Mr. Crandall is soon to enter the Mount Pleasant section with a house that is to be up-to-the-minute in every particular.

Mr. Crandall is one of the most prominent and well-known exhibitors in this section of the country. He has been president of the local exhibitors' league for some time and has been active in all sorts of association work. He is a hustler, and it is by his energy that he is making the success that has caused his name to be known among the leaders in the motion picture business.

CLARENCE W. BUNN GONE.

Slipped Away to Chicago—Only Lesser Half Now.

Washington, D. C.—The folks engaged in the motion picture business in Washington were greatly surprised when the news leaked out that Clarence W. Bunn, the popular manager of the local World Film exchange had pulled one over on his many friends here by eloping alone to Chicago where, on April 1, the preacher tied the knot which drew him from the ranks of the jolly bachelors into that of the sedate married men. The fortunate or unfortunate young lady was Miss Mable Larsen, one of the belles of Chicago. While the boys are congratulating Mr. Bunn, they cannot quite overlook the fact that they were not advised in advance of the coming event.

Mr. Bunn came to Washington from the Boston office of the World Film Corporation. Although here but a matter of months he has made a host of friends among the exhibitors and exchangemen of the Washington territory. He has been successful in bringing his office to the point where it leads all others in point of amount of business obtained during a contest operated by the home office and present indications are that he will have won the first prize. It may be that the fact that he has been so successful in this venture is responsible for his entering into a still more important one, that of being a married man.

The wedding was a quiet one, the ceremony being performed at the home of the bride in the presence of relatives of the participants. Mr. Bunn comes from South Bend, Ind.

CRANDALL BUYS THEATER.

Takes Over the Avenue Grand—Other Houses He Owns.

Washington, D. C.—Harry M. Crandall has secured control of the Avenue Grand theater, on Pennsylvania avenue, between Sixth and Seventh streets, Southeast, at an expenditure said to be in the neighborhood of $55,000. The theater up to the present has been elased to Harris & Davis, of Pittsburgh, Pa., but the lease expired Benefit Show at Empire Theater.

Washington, D. C.—Manager Samuel Greenburg, of the Empire theater, 915 H street, Northeast, last week donated the entire afternoon's receipts and divided those of the evening of Thursday with the Mothers' Club of the Edmunds School. The object of the benefit was to secure funds for the purchase of a musical instrument for the club.

Capital City Items.

Miss Florence Hawkins has recently sold out her interests in the Georgia theater on Georgia avenue, Northwest, to C. H. Innes, of Baltimore, Md. This house has since been operated for both white and colored patrons.

The territory of the local exchange of Pathe, Inc., has been extended so as to take in a portion of the State of West Virginia. This newly acquired section will be looked after by C. O. Moss, who now covers Virginia. Mr. Moss is one of the most popular film representatives traveling in this section.

J. D. Hofheimer, who operates a number of theaters in Norfolk, Va., was in Washington recently booking a number of big features in anticipation of the boom which he predicts will strike Virginia within the next few weeks. A good cotton and tobacco season, according to Mr. Hofheimer, means good business in all other lines. The prospects for a big spring and summer business in the motion picture field are very bright.

The Rhode Island theater has been reopened by M. Stein, the F street tailor. The Fairyland, a colored theater, has also been reopened.

The Casino theater on F street near Seventh street, Northwest, in which motion pictures have of late been shown, is again dark. The theater has been operated by a Mr. Faulkner.

Frank B. Spurrier, manager of the local office of V-L-S-E, Inc., is much elated over the showing he has been able to make for the seventy-five or more features on hand during the past week he had every one of the seven-day period. This is an exceptionally fine showing as it represented a working for either the whole or a part of clean slate for the week.

Hampton, Va.—J. A. Webb, who operates the Dixie theater, in Hampton, a colored house, has recently enlarged it and is now running vaudeville in connection with his picture program.

ATLANTA NEWS LETTER.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Fanatic Reformers Never Tire.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.—Declaring that moving picture theaters on Sunday is neither a necessity nor for charitable purposes, John A. Manget, who has brought a number of prosecutions against picture show proprietors and employes for alleged violations of the Sunday laws, this week appeared before the Fulton county grand jury and secured indictments against the following motion picture operators: L. S. Bach, Lyric theater; Nat F. Collins and W. P. Foster, Georgian theater; L. T. Swords and N. L. Liggit, Victoria theater; William and Sam Harvill, DeSoto theater.

Recently Mr. Manget had cases made against the proprietors of several picture shows for alleged violations of the Sunday laws, but all were dismissed when tried in the municipal court.

John McMillan proprietor of the Bijou theater, a vaudeville and moving picture house, was fined $50.00 for an indecent performance in Recorders Court, on a warrant sworn out by Mr. Magnet. Mr. McMillan immediately swore out a warrant against Mr. Manget for perjury. Mr. Manget gave bond and the trial was postponed to next week.

Fox Corporation to Build Here.

Atlanta, Ga.—Ground will be broken this week for a building to be occupied when completed by the Fox Film Corporation, on Walton street. This building is expected to be completed by June 15, and will be known as the Fox Film Corporation building and will be occupied by the Atlanta officials of this company.

The building will be a two-story structure; on the upper floor will be a moving picture theater with a seating capacity of three hundred; it will be used entirely for private showings of Fox films.

The offices of the company, including bookkeeping and shipping departments, will occupy the ground floor.

Headquarters of International Here.

Atlanta, Ga.—The International Film Service has selected Atlanta as its southern distributing point and in an announcement Saturday that its southern headquarters will be under the management of George A. Allison, who for several years past has directed the destinies of leading exchanges here and brought them to a high state of efficiency. Mr. Allison announces he has leased for the company 5,000 square feet in the Hirsch building on Marietta street. Mr. Allison's friends throughout the south give him the glad hand on his appointment and wish him luck.

Piedmont, Atlanta's Newest Theater.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Piedmont, corner of Luckie and Forsyth streets, the newest moving picture theater in Atlanta, opened Monday morning with a continuous program of motion pictures and vaudeville.

Sunday afternoon from 2:30 to 9:30, the Piedmont kept "open house," for Atlantians to inspect the new amusement house. Crowds visited the theater.

Mr. C. E. Tandy, Southern Manager of the Paramount Company in Atlanta, has returned from a business trip out East.

R. M. Wilder, of the Automatic Player Piano Company, St. Louis, was an Atlanta visitor during the week.

Steel City Notes.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—A. C. Raeder, formerly house manager of the Olympic theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has been appointed booker in the local offices of the Pathe Exchange. Manager T. S. Brady has also made several additions to his clerical and shipping forces, in order to care for the steady expansion in the business of the exchange.

Censorship Under Fire

Pennsylvania State Board Makes a Raid on Pittsburgh Exchange men and Exhibitors—Fourteen Cases Brought Up—Twelve Fines Imposed, Ranging from $5 to $75—Publicity Also Questioned—Picture Men May Appeal.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—The latest raid of the censors in Pittsburgh resulted in a clash that portends a most determined effort on the part of the moving picture interests to oust censorship. Following immediately after the launching of the campaign against the evil and the big mass meeting of protest recently, the activity of the censor board's agents has aroused much indignation and will no doubt strengthen the cause. Fourteen cases were heard before Alderman Louis Alpern last week, in twelve of which fines were imposed ranging from $5 to $75. The film men have announced that they will appeal all cases, carrying them as far as the Supreme Court if necessary.

Much lively debate featured the hearings, in the course of which the censors were shown up as they really are—not as Mr. Breitinger would like the public to believe them to be. An important point was made when Alderman Alpern declared that he has "nothing to do under the law but impose fines when the board of censors makes an order under the law." The wrath of the censors was this time visited upon banners as well as films. In one instance a manager was charged with permitting the display on one day outside a theater of posters depicting scenes ordered eliminated from a picture. It was brought out that the complained of advertising matter was used before the ruling of the censors had been received.

The board of censors was represented by Horace W. Davis, assistant attorney general, and testimony was given by Dr. Ellis, P. Oberholtzer, of the board, and Miss Florence E. Wrenshall, an inspector. The defendants in five of the cases were members of the Pittsburgh Screen Club and were represented by Attorney James E. Hindman.

Pictures in Question.

"Acquitted" was the center of the first case called. C. C. McKibben, manager of the Triangle Film Co., was charged with having permitted the picture to be shown without having a certain elimination made—said elimination consisting of a scene in a police Bertillion room in which a man's head was tilted back in order that a picture could be made. Mr. McKibbon was fined $25.

James McAleer, manager of the Picture Playhouse Co. and chairman of the campaign committee of the Screen Club, was charged with distributing "The Pearl of the Antilles" without taking out a title reading: "You must clear my child's name." Mr. McAleer denied that this had not been cut. Assistant Attorney General Davis remarked that the censored portion did not have the appearance of having been shown. Mr. McAleer was not fined, but was ordered to pay the costs, which he refused to do, saying that would constitute a confession of guilt.

Charles Miller, manager of the Blue Bird Company, was fined $50 and costs for sending out "Secret Love," a six-reel feature, without making elimination ordered by the board. He said that under his contract on the picture he could not make the cuts ordered, and to save the picture and his contracts he sent the film out. He was fined $25 and costs for sending out "The Wrong Door" without cutting out a scene showing a man walking into a safe and coming out again with a tray of valuables.

Charles Schwerin, manager of the World Film Company, was fined heavily for using banners that the censors alleged had been ruled out in connection with elimination in several films. Alderman Alpern said he had no authority to decide wether these pictures were immoral or not. He said that under the law he could only pass upon the rulings of the board and that they had ruled against the said posters. Mr. Schwerin was fined $25 in each of three cases. When he announced his determination to appeal one, the aldermen announced that his decision in the remaining cases would be held under advisement pending the outcome of the appeal. Mr. Schwerin was also found guilty of having sent out a film without inserting a sub-title stating that a marriage had taken place in "The Passers By." The imposing of a fine was held over.

Other convictions and fines were M. Teplitz, manager Specialty Film Co.; A. Weiland, manager Weiland Film Co.; Fred Flaherty, manager General Film Co.; W. C. Pearce, manager H. & B. Film Co.; H. C. Bowers, manager Keystone theater.

Will Reopen Federal Theater.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Federal theater, 224 Federal street, Northside, has been leased to Lew Owen and will be reopened in the near future. The Federal has been closed for nearly a year. Extensive alterations are now under way and new seats and equipment are being installed throughout.

New Hotel with Picture Equipment.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The new three million dollar hotel, the William Penn, to its many wonderful features, has added a complete moving picture equipment, for the use of the various conventions held at the hotel and for showing films on special occasions. The machine, booth and screen were installed by Hollis & Smith, of this city.

Augustine A. Graham Dead.

Oil City, Pa.—Sincere regret is expressed in film circles over the recent death of Augustine A. Graham, aged 43 years, proprietor of the Temple theater, Oil City, Pa., and one of the best-known exhibitors in this section. Mr. Graham died following a brief illness from pneumonia complicated with inflammatory rheumatism

Bank Takes Over Theater.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Columbia theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has ben taken over by a local bank, which has charge of the building in which the house is located. The lease of H. B. Miller and A. S. Davis expired March 31, and they served their connection with the thater. Messrs. Miller and Davis had conducted the Columbia with much success for the past three years. The banking concern will continue it as a motion picture theater.

Independent Display Co. Moves.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Independent Display Company, the well-known poster supply house now located at 416 Ferry street, in old film row, is preparing to move May 1, to new and larger quarters at 938-940 Penn avenue.

Will Build in Ellwood City.

Ellwood City, Pa.—Thomas V. Barnes is preparing to erect a large and modern theater in the near future on Lawrence street, not far from his present motion picture house, the Majestic. The new theater will offer, in addition to high-class features, vaudevilel and drama. According to present plans, it will be ready for occupancy about September 1.

Boosting Buffalo Ball

Local Screen Club Will Not Be Outdone by Any in the Putting on of a Film Ball—Actors' Fund Will Get 15 Per Cent. of the Proceeds—Committees Appointed to Take Charge of Floor and Arrangements.

By Joseph McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—A night lettergram was sent to the various film producing companies Sunday evening by the Buffalo Screen Club asking each to send one or two stars to the coming Buffalo Screen Club ball on May 15.

The message was prepared at a meeting at the club's new headquarters. These lettergrams were followed up by personal letters urging the co-operation of the producers. It is expected there will be a hearty response to the invitations. Buffalonians have seen very few film stars in actual life and their presence here promises to attract a heavy attendance to the ball.

An Actors' Fund Benefit.

The event will be held at Elmwood Music Hall, Buffalo. At Sunday evening's meeting of the club a telephone message was sent to Daniel V. Frohman, president of the Actors' Fund of America. Mr. Frohman was notified that the club would turn over to him 15 per cent. of the receipts of the ball. He said he would lend every possible aid to the Buffalo project. Daniel J. Savage, president of the club, says film stars will lead the grand march, and hold a public reception at the hall during the evening.

It is expected that the managers of many theaters in the Buffalo territory will attend the ball and will contribute 15 per cent. of their receipts on May 15th to the Actors' Fund. The club has sent out four hundred slides to exhibitors in Buffalo and western New York points.

The Floor Committees.

The following were appointed members of the decoration and floor committees for the ball: Harry Marsey, H. J. Brandon, J. M. Sitterly, James Morgan, F. S. Hopkins and Al Becker. The musical committee is composed of: J. L. Mulhauser and Harry Marsey.

The Buffalo Screen Club in a body visited the Elks' fashion and flower show at the Broadway Auditorium Saturday evening and extensively advertised the ball. The members are highly pleased with the way the Moving Picture World and other trade and daily newspapers are giving their plans wide publicity. The cafe, luncheon and program privileges, it is expected, will bring considerable revenue. The general admission will be $2 a couple.

The board of governors of the club is very anxious that many exhibitors join the organization. A list of desirable candidates for membership has been prepared and will be submitted to the club at its next general meeting.

MANAGER SAVAGE OPENS SHERRY FEATURE OFFICE

Many Guests Greet Opening of New Exchange in Buffalo—Dinner Follows at Iroquois Hotel.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The formal opening of the offices of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Co., Inc., at 145 Franklin street, Buffalo, was held Monday, April 3. Daniel J. Savage, manager, and his staff greeted a steady stream of visitors during the day and all congratulated him on the excellence of the Paramount headquarters in this city. Among the noted guests was Miss Anna Held, who called in person and tendered her best wishes to Mr. Savage. Miss Held appeared on the vaudeville bill at Shea's theater, Buffalo, last week.

Among the other visitors were Frank Biering of the Paramount office in New York; Henry Carr, manager of Shea's theater, Buffalo; G. H. Christoffers and Ben Brandon, Mutual; F. S. Hopkins, A. A. Schmidt, E. Baird and Art Young, Victor; W. A. V. Mack, Edward Hayes and H. E. Benedict, General; James K. Morgan and N. I. Filkins, Pathe; J. A. Schuchert, a pioneer exchange man of Buffalo; Harry Marsey and J. H. Sitterly, Popular Film Exchange; H. E. Hughes, United Film; Frank Leonard, Mary Page Serial.

Among those who sent elaborate floral offerings with their congratulations were: William L. Sherry, Homer Savage, son of the manager of the new offices, Mrs. Savage; Henry Carr, manager of Shea's theater, Buffalo; Al Becker, Becker Feature Film Co., Buffalo; Mr. Savage's office force and Murphy Bros., this city.

In the evening Manager Savage entertained his staff at a banquet at the Iroquois Hotel. The guests congratulated their host and the enthusiastic remarks of each speaker presaged the future success of the Paramount service in Buffalo. Those who attended the banquet were: Howard F. Brink, Mr. Savage's road representative; J. E. Carr, booker; Earl Brink, shipper; Miss Margaret Powers, secretary; Miss Anna Harrington, bookkeeper; Al Boltham, advertising department.

In point of service, Mr. Savage, who formerly managed the General office here, is the oldest film man in Buffalo.

His main offices, film vault and rewind and repair rooms are on the second floor, and the poster and other advertising matter is on the third floor. His new quarters are noted for their complete equipment and central location.

MANAGER MORGAN PLEASED.

Local Pathe Exchange, Inc., Proves Wisdom of Recent Extension.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Extensive improvements are being made at the Buffalo headquarters of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., at 47 West Swan street. Manager James K. Morgan says the improvements will be completed in a month. The main office will be moved from the second to the first floor. There will be reel and poster rooms at the front, on the second floor, and an elaborate projecting room at the rear. The place will be refurnished throughout.

Manager Morgan came from New York last June and opened the Buffalo headquarters, which were then a distributing office for the company's Syracuse exchange. The Buffalo headquarters were made a main office four months ago. That this change showed good judgment is proven by the heavy Pathe business in this field.

"We are operating in 67 per cent. of the theaters of our territory, which covers twenty counties," said Mr. Morgan. "In other words, everyone of these houses is running something of the Pathe service some time during each week. For instance, twenty-seven of the thirty-six theaters in Rochester are using the Pathe films. Our business in this territory is therefore very satisfactory."

Mr. Morgan is an active worker for the Buffalo Screen Club's ball.

Leo Dee, Pathe cameraman, took pictures of the recent flood in South Buffalo and they were shown Sunday at Shea's Hippodrome in this city.

Charles Bowe Heads the Allendale.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Charles Bowe is manager of the Allendale moving picture theater, Buffalo. He is a pioneer in the film and vaudeville business.

Buffalo Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Several exhibitors attended a screening of "Jungle Comedies" at the offices of the Becker Film & Supply Co., Buffalo, Saturday. The showing was in charge of Charles H. Streimer, representing Greene's Feature Photo Plays, Inc., which has the New York State and New England rights on this production. "Driftwood" was also screened by Mr. Streimer. Both films were warmly received and are being booked extensively here.

Vassar College graduates and undergraduates attended the Elmwood moving picture theater Monday when Fanny Ward was seen in pictures for the benefit of the Endowment Fund of the College.

Manager Moses of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, has added Julius Sommers as first violinist of the Hippodrome orchestra, which now has twenty-three pieces. Mr. Moses had special music, suggestive of frontier life, when he recently showed "Hell's Hinges," a Triangle feature. Elsie Janis and Sam Bernard, who recently appeared in person in different weeks at Mr. Shea's vaudeville theater here, visited Shea's Hippodrome and enjoyed the moving pictures as the guests of Manager Moses.

Mr. Kurtz, manager of the Lyric theater, Rochester, was a recent caller in Buffalo.

Pictures of the Willard-Moran fight were shown by Manager Laughlin at the Majestic theater, Buffalo, last week.

Decorations at Keith's moving picture theater, Buffalo, have been completed and the house presents a pleasing appearance from lobby to stage.

"We consider Keith's one of the brightest and best five-cent theaters in the territory," said Manager Davis. "We are running the Fox, World, Big Four, Pathe and other high-class features and our attendance is heavy.

Cincinnati's Fine Park Theater Sold

Empire Theater Company Buys Northside House—Built a Year Ago—Other Theaters Owned by the Company.

By Kenneth C. Craig, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—The acquisition of the Park theater, in Northside, by Henry Levy and Jesse Meis, marks one of the most important deals which has taken place in Cincinnati for some time, and gives Messrs. Levy and Meis a strong hold on the moving picture business in Northside.

The Park, a popular and well-located house on the west side of Hamilton avenue, near Chase street, has a seating capacity of 600, is provided with its own electric plant, furnishing current for light and power, and has a modern heating and ventilating system. The deal by which it changed hands is said to involve about $50,000. The purchaser was the Empire Theater Co., which is controlled by the gentlemen named, and which already owns the Liberty theater, in Northside, and the Columbia, a big house on Vine street, seating 1,000 people.

Park Hall Airdome.

Cincinnati, O.—The Park Hall Amusement Co., whose big house on Madison Road, in Oakley, is the largest and most popular in that part of the city, has decided to offer its patrons an up-to-date airdome show during the summer, and is therefore preparing to let contracts for work which will cost about $7,000 for that purpose. The Park Hall airdome will be laid out on a big lot adjoining the theater.

Charles Weigel Honored.

Cincinnati, O.—Charles Weigel, manager of the Alhambra, and an active and ardent Rotarian, has been honored by appointment as chairman of the committee in charge of moving pictures at the coming convention of International Rotary Clubs, which will be held in Cincinnati July 17 to 21, inclusive.

Films at the Fairbanks at Springfield.

Springfield, O.—The management of the Fairbanks, the largest house in the city, has stated that hereafter the house will be devoted to moving pictures, possibly permanently. Melton Phelos, formerly of the Rex theater, at Columbus, and James Marakas, of Springfield, will handle the theater as a moving picture house, and Mutual Masterpictures have been contracted for. Two new projecting machines have been secured, and other arrangements are in progress to make the house all that could be asked as a photoplay house.

Iron, "From Mine to Molder."

Springfield, O.—Gus Sun, the well-known theater man of Springfield, O., manager of the Alhambra and other houses, devoted an afternoon at the Alhambra recently to a special exhibit for fellow members of the Rotary Club of Springfield, showing a very interesting picture illustrating the manufacture of pig iron, entitled, "From Mine to Molder." The picture, which is handled by an iron concern, is in three reels, and is considered one of the best strictly industrial pictures ever produced. It proved so interesting to the Rotarians at the Alhambra that an exhibition at the Y. M. C. A., open to the public, was arranged, and was largely attended.

New Producing Company.

The Bagshaw Feature Film Co., with a capital stock of $100,000, is the latest to take the field as a producing company in Cincinnati, and those interested claim some activity in the line of actual work, even before organization, as several films have already been made up.

CLEVELAND NEWS LETTER.

By Herbert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A New Exchange in Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, O.—F. G. Schram, F. L. Greenwald and M. W. Williams, have just organized a company to release big film productions on a state-right basis. They have established offices at 212 Columbia building. Their first release was "Race Suicide," a six-reel social moral drama.

Local Features.

Cleveland, O.—"Blue Blood and Red," at the Standard theater, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," at the Orpheum, "The Sowers," at the Knickerbocker, and "Dollars and the Woman" at the Alhambra theater attracted crowds the week of April 4. The first pictures showing the wrecking crews at work on the Amherst wreck of the New York Central lines, were shown here at the Alhambra and the Mall theaters.

Alhambra Improvements.

Cleveland, O.—Mark Greenbaum, manager of the Alhambra theater, has just announced that summer improvements to be put in the Alhambra, include a balcony which will give the house 2,000 seats instead of 1,400 as at present. There will also be a special tier of auto boxes next to the front railing of the balcony. Practically all the improvements will be installed without interfering with the regular business of the popular house.

Toronto's Film Ball

Over 5,000 Persons Attend Brilliant Affair at the Arena Garden on April 5—Held by Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association—Four Prominent Metro Stars Present.

By William M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TORONTO, ONT.—The most brilliant event in the history of moving pictures in Toronto was the immensely successful Film Ball which attracted over 5,000 people to the Arena Gardens on Wednesday night, April 5. The extraordinary event was held under the auspices of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association. Starfilms, Limited, contributed largely to the success of the dance through arranging for the presence of four photoplay celebrities, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Helen Dunbar and Robert Cumming. These stars were the cynosure of the evening and they truly did their part.

A feature of the special programme was the military exhibition by a picked squad from the American Legion and the band of this unit supplied some of the music. Occupying the boxes were Mayor Church and party, official representatives of the Ontario Government, many prominent military officers, a number of film magnates and others. Mayor Church and Miss Bayne led the grand march which was the crowning event of the ball. Other features included special dancing demonstrations by local exponents of the light fantastic.

The Toronto ball had been widely advertised with the result that many out-of-town exhibitors came to the city for the occasion and, incidentally, to pay calls at the local exchanges. The latter experienced very busy days as a result of the big dance.

NEW UNION IN TORONTO.

Managers Warn Operators of Danger—New Organization.

Toronto, Ontario.—The action of Calgary moving picture exhibitors in securing returned soldiers to take the place of striking projection machine operators has taken Toronto film men by the ears, figuratively speaking. At least several local theater managers have warned operators that similar action would be taken in Toronto if an opportunity presents itself while comments from both managers and operators have been widely varied.

Since the Calgary sensation, it has also become known that a new and distinct operators' union has been organized in Toronto. This new organiaztion, which is in opposition to the International Union, secured twenty-two members in the first week of its existence, it is declared. The purposes of the new union have not been announced but references to it and returned soldiers are being made in the same breath.

Canadian Universal Notes.

Toronto, Ontario.—Believing that the day of special child patronage is fast approaching, the Canadian Universal in Toronto, is making preparations to cater to this public. Arrangements have been made for the holding of an essay contest by children for which a cash prize has been hung up.

J. R. McKinney has been added to the staff of the Toronto branch of the Canadian Universal as a roadman.

Bluebirds in Full Choir.

Toronto, Ontario.—Blue Bird Photo-Plays, Inc., has seven "nests" established in various parts of Canada, according to word issued from the Toronto headquarters, and the drive for business for the Blue Bird features is happily developing during this spring-like weather. Clare Hague of Toronto is in general control of the Canadian business, but the Toronto branch manager is W. A. Campbell.

James Arkney is the head bird at Montreal. G. A. Margetts directs Blue Bird business at St. John, N. B. W. F. Barrett looks after Blue Bird releases at Winnipeg and W. Walkley is in charge at Calgary. Mr. Downey is "the Blue Bird" at Regina, Sask., and Mr. J. Finch is the representative at Vancouver.

Blue Bird features have a strong organization behind them and the progress made since the introduction of the pictures a few months ago has been very satisfactory it is declared.

The New Theater to Reopen.

Toronto, Ontario.—After lying idle for a period of three years because of inability to secure a license for the house, the New theater, Dovercourt Road and College street, has been taken over by Playhouses & Theaters, Limited, and will be opened in the near future. This company has been able to induce the authorities to grant an operating license for the theater, which has a seating capacity of 420.

Playhouses & Theaters, Limited, already controls two theaters in Toronto, the Playhouse, 344-346 College street, and the Dundas Playhouse, Dundas street. The former has seating accommodation for 420 people while the second named will hold 700 persons. The president of the company is Mr. Maurice J. Thayler.

This company has in view the acquiring of a prominent picture house in Toronto and steps have already been taken to secure title of the theater in question. The plans, in this instance, include the remodeling of the building.

Fox Branch in St. John, N. B.

Toronto, Ontario.—The third office for the Fox Film Corporation in Canada has just been opened. So announces Manager Granby, of the Toronto branch here, from whose local staff is selected the man to become director of the new branch. The latest Fox branch has been established at St. John, N. B., and the man in charge is Carl Crawford, formerly a road man in the Toronto territory. Isadore Sourkes of Montreal replaces Mr. Crawford at Toronto.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Colonial Film Will Handle Equitable.

Toronto, Ontario.—Mr. Berman of Toronto, head of the Colonial Film Company, Ltd., distributing World films throughout Canada, announced to the Toronto representative of Moving Picture World that arrangements have been made by him for the handling of Equitable pictures in the Dominion. Subjects are already being released in Canada.

Mr. W. C. Gookin, Canadian manager of the V-L-S-E, has appointed Mr. L. H. Watrous in charge of the Montreal branch of the Big Four, the address of which is 204 St. Catherine street.

Sunday Law at Work

Tennessee's Supreme Court Decision on Sabbath Laws Has Begun to Take Effect —Theaters in Nashville Cannot Even Run Sunday Shows for Charity—No Local Option Left to Cities Throughout the State.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NASHVILLE TENN.—The recent decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, relative to Sunday moving picture shows, has started things moving in earnest, and it is hard to say what the outcome may be.

At a recent meeting of the City Commissioners of Nashville, Mayor Ewing announced that an opinion had been furnished the board by City Attorney Ewing relative to the application made by Roy Shelton, manager of the Strand, to be allowed to operate his theater on Sunday afternoons for the benefit of the East Nashville fire sufferers. The opinion of the city attorney was to the effect that the operation of the theaters on Sunday would be contrary to the law and the city ordinances. Commissioner Stainback thereupon moved that the board refuse the request, and the motion received unanimous adoption.

Later the Strand management proposed an alternate arrangement whereby all of the receipts at the theater would be turned over the fire sufferers if the theater was allowed to operate between 2 o'clock and 6 o'clock. City Attorney Ewing stated that even this would be a violation of the law and that the city commissioners had no right to grant such permission. The city attorney held:

"It is my opinion that the board of commissioners has no authority to grant permits to do that which is prohibited by law or ordinance, and that which is not prohibited by law or ordinance does not require a permit.

"The terms under which the Strand moving picture theater proposes to be operated on Sunday afternoons, in my opinion, is an invasion of the ordinance of the city against Sunday shows.

"I am not speaking of Mr. Shelton's good faith—he may not intend it in this way—but, as a matter of fact, I think that the opening of a moving picture show in which contributions are made, is a violation of the law and an invasion of the Sunday closing ordinances of the city.

Letter from Attorney General.

Attorney General Whittaker, of Chattanooga, recently received a letter from the clerk of the Supreme Court relative to Sunday shows, and Gen. Whittaker at once addressed the following letter to Sheriff Nick Bush, of Hamilton County:

"I have received the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Howell Graham vs. the State (the Sunday picture show cases). The opinion holds among other things:

"'Municipal law looks to something more than merely the protection of the lives, the liberty and the property of the people. Regarding Christianity as a part of the law of the land, it respects and protects its institutions, and assumes likewise to regulate the public morals and decency of the community.'

"So that it will be observed, operating picture shows on the Sabbath for charitable or any other purposes is indictable at common law; please, therefore, notify all parties engaged in this business the effect of the holding of the Supreme Court in the above cases, that they may desist from operating their picture shows on the Sabbath in the future or be subject to arrest and indictment for each offense."

Will Enforce Law in Memphis.

The mayor of Memphis has taken up the matter with the pastors and the council and about 200 citizens were recently asked to the council chamber where the matter was discussed. From general indications Mayor Ashcraft will enforce the closing law in Memphis. The matter is being discussed pro and con, and much legal lore brought to bear upon the subject.

While the Sunday closing law is agitating most districts in Tennessee the moving picture heaters at Harriman have just started showing on Sunday. On Sunday, March 26, the theaters opened in the afternoon and played to capacity audiences without hindrance.

Knoxville, Tenn.—Announcement was made by the Crystal theater, on April 3, to the effect that the management had closed a deal whereby the new Mutual-Chaplin pictures will shortly be shown in the Crystal. The Crystal, under the able management of William H. Wassman, has built up a big five cent business, largely on interesting comedy material.

MUSIC OF QUALITY.

Knickerbocker Theater Making Commendable Attempt to Provide It.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Knickerbocker theater of Nashville during the few weeks that it has been in operation, has been offering music of the better quality. Manager Wassman said many things about his music before and after the opening of the popular new playhouse, and the best part of the matter is that his music has more than made good what was promised.

The department is under the personal direction of Buel B. Risinger, organist and conductor of many years' experience, especially in this particular line. In addition to conducting the orchestra, Mr. Risinger also presides at the big pipe organ during the intermission of the orchestra, and his offerings on that instrument have been unusual.

While the Knickerbocker programs are liberally sprinkled with popular numbers, the general trend is toward standard and operatic works, and the style in which these numbers are rendered is fast gaining popularity for the Reisinger orchestra.

Lexington Ky. Wants Local Censorship

Local Censorship Proponents Discussing Ways and Means and the Kind of Board They Think Needed in the City.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent 1404 Stark Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LEXINGTON, KY.—Those behind the censorship movement at Lexington, are busy drafting an ordinance which it is said will be similar to that recently adopted at San Francisco. The committee working on the plan reports that while the city officials of Lexington have appointed a censorship committee of local officials to view any picture to which objection may be raised, this kind of censoring is not sufficient in a city where the leading houses have daily changes of programs. It is claimed that by the time the officials are called upon to view the films, and orders have been issued to stop their run, it is late in the day.

The backers of the movement are especially opposed to the undesirable publicity which is oftentimes employed in order to attract the curious and morbid to plays which have been condemned by censors in other states. It is planned to so draft the ordinance that a manager's license may be revoked if a play escapes the censors and is of an offending nature. As the city officials are not in sympathy with strict censorship it is doubtful if the ordinance will meet with much sympathy if introduced before the commission.

Just where the reform wave that is settling over Central Kentucky will end is a matter of conjecture at this time. Some of the Bluegrass cities are endeavoring to enforce the old blue laws in connection with Sunday closing. At Harrodsburg, Ky., it is impossible to obtain gasoline, cigars, fruits or anything in the nature of luxuries on Sunday. A movement was rceently started at Winchester to close the drug stores, etc., but has not proven successful.

American Auto-Arc Co. Organized.

Owensboro, Ky.—The American Auto-Arc Company is being organized to market a device for automatically feeding carbons into moving picture machines. Arrangements have been made whereby the machine will be manufactured by the Kentucky Electrical Company of Owensboro, for the new company, which will shortly be incorporated.

Goldberg-Forman Wedding.

Louisville, Ky.—Joe Goldberg, manager of the Hippodrome theater, and editor of the moving picture query department of the Louisville Evening Post, was married to Miss Bessie Forman, of Louisville, at the home of the bride, on Sunday evening, April 9. The young couple left the same evening for Chicago where they expect to spend several days before going on East.

New Cozy Theater Opened.

Louisville, Ky.—The new Cozy theater, owned by M. Switow, has opened for business at Third and Central avenue. The theater is in a thickly populated district, has little competition and is expected to prove a success.

Princess Features to Henderson, Ky.

Henderson, Ky.—Mr. Louis Hayes, owner of a string of houses in Indiana and Kentucky, has transferred his Princess theater feature shows to his other house, the Gem, in Henderson, Ky, and is doing a very fine business. We call to mind that Mr. Hayes had the misfortune to lose his Princess theater by fire some time ago, and it is now persistently rumored that he and his company have closed a deal to open another class A house at once that will call for an investment of about $20,000. However, this could not be confirmed just now.

Sabbath Shows in Hickman.

Hickman, Ky.—Manager Taylor and Manager Colvin, of the two leading picture houses of Hickman, Ky., recently made arrangement whereby the theater will hereafter open on Sunday afternoons beginning at 1 o'clock and closing at 5.30, so that the shows will not conflict with church service. There will be no fuss, spieling or pian playing such as goes on during the week. The houses will be quiet and orderly and it is thought that no objection will be raised.

An Indiana Film Co.

Frankfort, Ky.—The Blackfoot Players have incorporated with a capital stock of $6,000 for the purpose of making moving picture in which the Blackfoot Tribe of Red Men, No. 67, of Frankfort, will take the active parts. The incorporators are E. W. Gullion, Paul C. Gaines, Humphrey D. Harrod, R. P. Dreyer, Fred Montgomery and Stanley Marshall, representing the tribe. Offices have been established in the McClure building. The promoters plan to produce a three or four-reel drama written by Charles Wheeler Bell, of Frankfort, entitled "Who Is Thy Neighbor?"

MICHIGAN NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Benton Harbor's Honorary Board.

BENTON HARBOR, MICH.—Preventive rather than punitive is declared to be the idea of the local censorship provided for by an ordinance passed by the city council. Three censors without pay or, as a local paper puts it, an "honorary board of skeptics," will have a private view of films before the daily shows. Their order to "cut it" will be supposed to be sufficient, although the mayor is the court of last resort. Failure to obey means a $50 fine or thirty days in jail—or both.

Postmaster Doremus' Show.

Lake City, Mich.—Sylvester Doremus, postmaster, has entered the ranks of Michigan exhibitors at the age of seventy. His theater, in the rear of his new postoffice building, will operate Wednesday and Saturday nights and oftener if it pays. A Chaplin film was featured at the opening. Universal service will be used.

Pontiac's Censorship Ordinance.

Pontiac, Mich.—Children under thirteen years of age will not be permitted to attend moving picture shows in Pontiac unless accompanied by an adult, according to the draft of a censorship ordinance made for the city council.

The measure provides for the appointment, by the chief of police, of a local censor, to see all programs at local shows. It will be his or her duty to enter a complaint against improper films. A fine of not to exceed $100 or a jail sentence of not more than ninety days are provided. After the draft was submitted it was tabled until at a meeting exhibitors, church workers and representatives of civic organizations could air their views.

City Inspector to Visit Booths.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—Regular inspection of operating equipment is promised by M. K. Randall, new city theater inspector. The new board of examiners for operators demands framed licenses hung conspicuously in the theater in addition to each operator carrying an identification card.

At Censor Theater.

Albion, Mich.—When spring vacation was on the Censor theater put into its programs some fairy tales which had special appeal to school children.

Michigan Theater Changes.

Coldwater, Mich.—Carter & Son of Elkhart, Ind., have purchased the Happy Hour.

Flint, Mich.—Charles Sneeling of Elsie, Mich., will be the lessee of the new Princess theater which Mrs. W. F. Reckin is erecting on North Saginaw street, Flint. It will seat 350, will have exterior of velvet-face brick and the interior is to be decorated in steel with mahogany effect.

Owosso, Mich.—Plans have been drawn for the new theater to be erected on Washington avenue by the Strand Theater Company at a cost of $30,000. It will be of brick and terra cotta with interior in light relief ornamental plaster. Plans also have been drawn for a theater to be erected on Main street by B. L. Converse at a cost of $20,000. It will be along the lines of the Strand.

Benton Harbor, Mich.—The Bell opera house has opened with a program of moving pictures and musical specialties.

Bay City, Mich.—Lew Newcomb will be manager of Wenona Beach park for the eighth consecutive season. Fred B. Williams of New York city succeeds him as manager at the Bijou theater.

Traverse City, Mich.—Julius Steinberg will erect a 73 x 125, brick, concrete and steel, 1,200 capacity moving picture and vaudeville theater just east of the Grand opera house. The Fitzpatrick-McElroy Company of Chicago, which operates a string of twenty-four houses in the middle west, will take a lease on it. An opening in the middle of June is planned.

The Week in Detroit

Majestic Theater Has Celebration Week Following First Birthday—Flag Pole With Waving Flag Beside Patriotic Picture Applauded—Theater Has Prospered More Than Management Hoped—Other News Items.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit.

DETROIT, MICH.—The Majestic theater, Woodward and Willis avenues, celebrated its first anniversary on April 1st, and as a fitting memorial to the occasion the week of April 2nd was designated as "First Anniversary Week." The theater was especially decorated and there was a special program. Business was tremendous the entire week, breaking all previous records.

The program for the week included "A Day at West Point" during which when descriptive titles were thrown on the screen, an American flag was hoisted on a pole on one side of the stage and was made to wave by means of a fan back of the stage. This brought the entire house to its feet amidst applause at every performance.

When seen by the World representative, Frank Westbrook, secretary of the company, remarked: "We feel very well satisfied with the results of the first twelve months. It is a positive fact that we have done considerably better than we anticipated and every week seems to be getting better. One thing we find that our clientele is that we can't put on pictures that are gruesome or that are too much along sensational lines. They do like good dramas, however ,and good comedies." The Majestic program each week consists of an organ recital; a Weekly; an educational film; vocal selection; feature and a comedy.

In celebration of the success of the first year under the general management of M. W. McGee and the management of R. von der Goltz about thirty of his friends, including some of the contractors who helped build the theater and a number of exchange managers, gave a party at the Pekin restaurant on Saturday evening, April 1st, following the conclusion of the last performance. One long table was arranged to accommodate the party and there was jollification from start to finish. Following the fine dinner, dancing was indulged in until long after midnight. Features of the party were songs and an address by Mr. Franconi, Detroit manager of the Pathe exchange, and a response by Mr. McGee. Several telegrams were read from friends out of town who wishes the Majestic and its management great future success.

Metro Also Celebrates.

The Detroit branch of the Metro Film Corporation celebrated its first anniversary on Saturday night, April 1st, by giving a dinner and dance at the Kramherhoff Roadhouse in Grosse Pointe, which was attended by the entire staff of employes, as well as their friends. Metro pictures in Michigan have certainly become very popular during the past year, and there is hardly a successful theater in the state that is not running Metro features and comedies every week.

R. S. Bendell Has Been Ill.

Robert S. Bendell, manager of Blue Bird features in Detroit, who has been confined to the hospital for the past few weeks, is expected back at the office by the middle of April.

New House in Pontiac.

Pontiac, Mich.—The property formerly occupied by a hotel at South Saginaw street and Water street, Pontiac, Mich., has been transferred by A. J. Marentette and wife, James H. O'Donnell and wife and Harry Goldstein and wife, all of Detroit, to the Oakland Theater Co., of Detroit, which company will erect a moving picture theater on the property along the amphitheater style. The cash consideration was $60,000, subject to a mortgage of $15,000, which was assumed by the purchasers. The Oakland Theater Co. has capitalized for $150,000. The theater will be erected at once to be ready for fall.

Ford Company Makes a Film.

Detroit, Mich.—Through the efforts of A. J. Gilligham, of the General Film Co., Detroit, Eddie Fitzgerald, secretary to Mayor Oscar B. Marx and Mr. Jewett, of the motion picture department of the Ford Motor Company, a film called "The Birth of Aggy-Tation" was shown at the Hotel Pontchartrain on Wednesday evening, March 29, to over 500 people—leading politicians and business men of Detroit. The "actors" in the film were well-known men about town. The scenario was written by "Fitz," the mayor's secretary, and a former newspaperman. The film was humorous throughout and brought laugh after laugh. The film was made by the Ford Company motion picture department.

C. W. Porter Managing Duplex.

Charles W. Porter has been appointed manager of the Duplex theater, succeeding Earl Hennessy. Mr. Porter is extremely well known in the theatrical profession, and particularly in Michigan. He was manager of a house in Saginaw for many years, and for three years was manager of the Miles-Detroit theater. For the past eighteen months he has been associated with theaters in Ohio.

New Orleans Grows

New City Directory Shows Growth of 36,000 in Six Years—Biggest Leap Came During the Last Year—What This Lively Pace Means to Exhibitors—There Are Many Theaters and Still They Come.

By George M. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS.—Exhibitors of New Orleans and in this territory have found food for thought in the 1916 edition of the New Orleans directory. The title page of the book declares that New Orleans now has 375,000 inhabitants, an increase of 36,000 since 1910, when the last United States census was taken. This is an average growth of 6,000 a year, or nearly enough new people to fill a 500-seat house every month. The directory is the biggest and most successful of any yet published. Despite the fact that 6,000 a year is an extremely conservative growth, there is comfort in the fact that New Orleans only began to hit her pace this year, when 100 new pages of names were added to the directory. A directory probably is one of the most important and valuable things for an exhibitor, inasmuch as it is an unfailing barometer to a city's population, business conditions, etc. It contains sordid, cold facts and not a word about Chamber of Commerce dreams or probabilities.

A moving picture man claiming to know something about the local situation through long residence here says that New Orleans must keep up a lively population pace if all the theaters expect to survive. Theater construction in New Orleans broke all records within the past three months, and there are more houses going up now. The crisis will not come until late summer; and then it can be determined whether or not this city is going to support her numerous and fast growing theaters.

And Still They Come.

As this letter goes forward a well defined rumor has it that New Orleans is to be the home of the biggest moving picture theater in the south. New York capitalists are behind the project, it is understood, and further it is claimed that they have closed a lease on the building formerly occupied by the Lehmann Dry Goods Company, in the 400 block in Canal street. The rumor further states that the new house will seat 2,500 people and will be the last word in moving picture construction.

It is also understood that John A. Harris, of 315 Audubon street, is planning to erect a big airdome in St. Charles avenue at the corner of Broadway, although no confirmation could be obtained by the World correspondent as this letter goes forward. If this house is built it will be a substantial addition to what is one of New Orleans' finest residential sections.

Winik-Brock Co. in Central America.

New Orleans, La.—Meyer Simmonds, late of the United Program Film Service in New Orleans, who three months ago left the Crescent City to become Colon, Panama, manager for the Winik-Brock Film Company, returned last week and was "one of the bunch" once more. Mr. Simmonds reported that Winik-Brock had closed up their Colon office, but were opening in San Jose, Costa Rica, in charge of Mr. Winik, the senior member of the firm. His brother, Joseph Simmonds, left New York a few weeks ago to open an agency in London, England, for the Winik-Brock concern. Concerning the likes and dislikes of the Latin race down in Panama Mr. Simmonds said: "They have not yet got used to anything but the sensational foreign stuff, although they like those American films that have vim and go. Charles Chaplin, for instance, is a reigning favorite, and promises to remain so for some time to come."

Josiah Pearce Sick.

Josiah Pearce, local motion picture exhibitor, and one of the most prominent film men in the South, is critically ill at his home, 1019 Audubon street, where he was taken by ambulance from the United Fruit steamer Abangarez on arrival of the vessel here last Monday night. He left New Orleans ten days ago for Panama on a health trip, and was stricken with acute nephritis on the way back. His sons, J. Eugene and Fred W. Pearce, having been notified of their father's illness by wireless, chartered a tug and met the steamer at the mouth of the Mississippi river. Late reports from Mr. Pearce's residence indicate that he is doing well, and the critical stage is passed.

Sam Dembow, Jr., Resigns.

Sam Dembow, Jr., Southern Division manager of the World Film, has resigned from that position. Mr. Dembow will be replaced by C. W. Harden, who comes from the Kansas City (Mo.) office of Fox. Mr. Harden has not yet arrived to take up his new duties in New Orleans, but incidental to his coming, the sound of saw and hammer is being heard in Common street, and it means, according to New Orleans Manager R. E. Barron, that the offices are being enlarged and refitted in honor of the new Southern Division boss.

More Fake Film Producers.

New Orleans, La.—This is the hey day of inflated moving picture values; of "directors" who slap a shingle on an office door, and begin the film business under the auspicious circumstances of having a high-sounding name, usually followed by the word, "Incorporated." In New Orleans this week nothing can be learned of a certain "Baum Film Company," which rented an office in the Queen and Crescent building, and inserted advertisements in local newspapers for women and girls with aspirations to become players.

But the Baum Film Company is not the only one that the New Orleans police managed to run out of the city. They had competitors, the "Florida Film Company," which ran similar advertisements in the newspapers, and gleaned a few of the loose dollars that would-be actresses spread around. At the same time, it is authoratatively stated to the correspondent for MOVING PICTURE WORLD that a similar film company, with a large capitalization on paper, is under the surveillance of the local police; and that, as a matter of fact, its managers have been haled before the district attorney and forced to produce their books before him.

News of New Orleans Theaters.

New Orleans' newest suburban house is being built at Cortez and Cleveland streets. It is a substantial structure and a handsome addition to the neighborhood, which hitherto has been without a moving picture show. James Shepherd, of 231 Telemachas street, is the owner. The house has as yet been unnamed.

Fred W. Pearce, of the Pearce Enterprises, has returned from a five weeks' trip through the North and East, much impressed with the spirit of optimism he declared he found existing among the better class of exhibitors in the cities he visited. While in the North Mr. Pearce made a number of important bookings for his New Orleans theaters, taking the cream of the Metro and Fox productions. While in New York Mr. Pearce was guest of Richard Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, and he expresses himself as being highly pleased with the administrations of that gentleman while in the big town.

OPENING IN ST. LOUIS OF HEARST FILM EXCHANGE

International Film Service, Inc., Office at 3313 Olive—E. W. Dustin, Manager.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—The International Film Service have opened an exchange at 3313 Olive street. E. W. Dustin, who until a few weeks ago was manager of the World Film offices, is in charge of the new branch. Mr. Dustin is well known in film circles throughout the country. He was the first Pathe manager in St. Louis when that organization separated from the General Film and began operating their own exchanges. After a successful season with Pathe, Mr. Dustin assumed management of the World Film offices, which place he resigned to undertake the distribution of the Hearst productions.

Mr. Dustin has also had much experience as a theater manager and as a director and producer of films. The new office is in the new Plaza building. The peculiar construction of the Plaza building makes it possible for the International office to have two street entrances, one at 3315 Olive street, and the other directly opposite on Lindell avenue.

BUYS MIKADO THEATER.

Scherrer Brothers Operated House on Rental, Now Own It.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Scherrer Brothers, Henry and William, who have been operating the Mikado theater at 5955 Easton avenue, on a rental basis for the last two years, have just recently bought the house. Scherrer Brothers, who also own and operate the Palace, on 13th and Franklin avenue, took over the Mikado, which was one of the original O. T. Crawford houses when it was run down and had ceased to be a money maker. They eliminated the vaudeville from the program, started a bill of straight pictures and have made the place a good paying proposition. Henry Scherrer will continue to manage the Mikado, while William will devote his time to the Palace, as usual.

MAY BUILD THEATER.

Grand Avenue and Morgan Street Proposed Site.

St. Louis, Mo.—The lot on the corner of Grand avenue and Morgan street, has been sold by Felix Scalzo to the trustees of the Missouri Botanical (Shaw's) Gardens, who have an offer from a theater man to take a long lease on a theater to be built on the site as soon as the lease on the airdome occupying the rear of the lot expires. The lot is 163 feet facing Grand avenue, by 157 feet on Morgan street, and is now occupied by a one-story building containing stores and shops, and the airdome on Morgan street. The Garden trustees have a number of real estate holdings in different parts of the city, principally in the west end and on the south side, where the Gardens are located, and the site at Grand and Morgan was purchased with the intention of making modern improvements on it.

Birthday Present for the Majestic.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Majestic theater, 10th and Franklin avenue, has just celebrated its first birthday, and in honor of the event Manager A. D. Pappas presented the house with eight magnificent oil paintings, which are reproductions of the old masters. These paintings are appropriately framed and hung at intervals on the walls on both sides of the theater.

Stork Visits Floyd Lewis' Family.

The latest feature to be exploited by Floyd Lewis, manager of the Triangle exchange in the Plaza building, is a little daughter, who arrived at his home last week.

Manchester Tent Show Burns.

The Manchester Tent Show, which was on a lot between 4245 and 4249 Manchester avenue, was destroyed by fire at 3.30 o'clock on Monday afternoon, April 3. The damage was estimated at about $2,500. The cause of the fire is not known. There was no performance going on at the time of the fire.

ST. LOUIS ITEMS.

St. Louis, Mo.—Joe Levy, head of the Fox lair in Film Row on Olive street, has just come back from a trip to "Weeds," where he was out on a still hunt for contracts. He says he got the game all right, and that prospects look very bright for Fox features.

E. E. Erickson, special representative of Kalem Co., has established offices in the General exchange at 3610 Olive street, for the exploitation of the Kalem serial, 'The Social Pirates." He reports splendid progress and says the interest and demand for serials is growing all the time.

M. P. Rosenburg, special salesman, efficiency expert, and general all-around business booster for Blue Bird, has left for Kansas City after a three weeks' stay in St. Louis.

KANSAS CITY NOTES.

New Pathe Traveler.

J. L. Folan is a new traveler out of Kansas City in the northern Missouri and Kansas territory for the Pathe Exchange, Inc. He takes the place of T. S. Bradley, who has gone to Pittsburgh.

New Kansas Theaters.

Kincaid, Kans.—The Commercial Club of this city recently decided that it needed a new theater; consequently a petition was drawn up for a special election to vote bonds for this purpose. The bonds were voted and work will soon start on the theater.

Concordia, Kans.—George Beach, of the Lyric theater at this place, will erect a new house at a cost of $25,000, having a seating capacity of 570 and have it ready for occupancy by June 1.

Phil H. Ryan with K. C. Feature Film.

Kansas City, Mo.—Phil H. Ryan, who has been advertising manager for the Amu Su theater at Muscatine, Iowa, is now representing the Kansas City Feature Film Co. in Kansas.

Arthur C. Melvin Heads Local Kleine.

Kansas City, Mo.—William O. Edmunds, since last November manager for George Kleine at Kansas City, left March 29 for San Francisco, where he will be district manager for the Pacific Coast. The arrangements were made in Chicago, when the plans for Billie Burke were outlined, and Mr. Kleine personally talked over the work with Mr. Edmunds. The new manager at Kansas City is Arthur C. Melvin, formerly with Mr. Kleine at Philadelphia.

W. B. Emrich with Bluebird.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. B. Emrich, for the past 18 months working out of Kansas City and Chicago for the Fox Film Corporation, joined the Blue Bird forces March 27, as traveling salesman. Mr. Emrich is well known in sport and theatrical circles; he traveled in vaudeville with Billy Papke—and therefore must be some boxer; and he was in vaudeville for three years with an act of his own.

Two Bluebirds Pass Through.

Kansas City, Mo.—Ned H. Spitzer and Jerome Abrahams, special representatives from the New York Blue Bird offices, attended the Kansas convention at Wichita.

Protested Censor Fees

Kansas City Exchange Men, by Paying "Under Protest" for Censorship of Films, Have Tied Up State's Use of the Money—Suit Must Follow and State Will Have to Make the First Move.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Local moving picture exchange managers are much interested in the turn of events in Kansas regarding the payment of censorship fees levied by the censorship board of that state, and it is very probable that the legal fight which the exchange men desire will start soon. Last month, but one exchange out of the sixteen that handle pictures in Kansas paid its fee into the treasury without protesting. The other fifteen were "paid under protest." Of the $1,662 collected by W. D. Ross, state censor, $1,376 was paid under protest, only $286 being turned into the general revenue fund. This leaves but $286 with which to run the costs of censorship during the month.

State Will Have to Sue.

By taking action along this line, the state will be forced to ask a mandamus to compel Earl Akers, state treasurer, to hand over this "paid under protest" money into the general revenue fund, where the state can get access to it. As it now stands, no state official will probably care to take the responsibility of turning it into this fund, and then having a mandamus served on him. As it is, the state will probably do this against Akers, who in turn will ask the moving picture men the reason. Then, they will bring into court, the oil decision case regarding inspection, which is very similar to the present argument. They will maintain that the department is being run for revenue and will ask that such be stopped. By protesting fee payment and tying up the profits and income of the censorship board, they believe the state will ask the next legislature to reduce this fee, after which they will attempt to have the law repealed or amended so that the censorship board will be nothing more than an approval board.

FILM MEN BANQUETED.

W. O. Edmonds and C. W. Harden Dined by Kansas City Exchange Men.

Kansas City, Mo.—The exchange men of Kansas City tendered a banquet last week to W. O. Edmonds, who goes to the Pacific Coast to handle the Billie Burke pictures, and Charles W. Harden, who takes charge of the Southern district for the Fox Film Corporation. The event was an elaborate affair, at the Baltimore hotel, with music and cabaret. It was the first social gathering of the exchange men, the first time that their wives had been present at any meeting, and was so pleasant and profitable in good feeling that it certainly will not be the last one.

E. C. Mills, assistant manager of the Mutual exchange at Kansas City, acted as toastmaster, and talks were made by many of the men, and some of the women. The special toasts were to Mr. Harden and Mr. Edmonds, but some were given to the moving picture industry, and to the fight against the censorship.

L. J. Scott Gets the Prize Fob.

A feature was the presentation, by Mr. Mills, of the fob, the prize for getting the largest number of members to the Amusement Association of Kansas, to L. J. Scott of the V-L-S-E.

Mrs. Harden and Mrs. Edmonds were present with their husbands. The other participants were as follows:

E. R. Pearson, manager V-L-S-E, and Mrs. Pearson; Harry Berman, manager Metro, and Mrs. Berman; F. L. Kiltz, manager Mutual; C. S. Edwards, jr., manager Pathe; Richard Robertson, manager World, and Mrs. Robertson; R. C. Cropper, manager Universal, and Mrs. Cropper; E. H. Wachter, manager Fox, and Mrs. Wachter; R. O. Proctor, manager General; Arthur C. Melvin, manager George Kleine; L. J. Scott, publicity manager, V-L-S-E; C. C. Chatkin, manager United, and Miss Marks; C. D. Struble, manager Monarch; C. E. Akers, booker, Kansas City Feature Film Company, and Mrs. Akers; Fred Gettinger, sales promotion V-L-S-E, and Mrs. Gettinger; C. W. Potter, traveler, Universal; A. W. Howell, auditor, Metro; Phil H. Pierce, manager, Rudolph Wurlitzer Company; F. C. Hammond, editor Thespian; A. H. Hull, traveler, Blue Bird; E. C. Mills, assistant manager Mutual.

Charles Harden Promoted.

Kansas City, Mo.—Charles W. Harden, for the past year district manager for the Fox Film Corporation at Kansas City, left Wednesday evening, March 29, for New York, preparatory to taking charge of the entire Southern district of the company, with headquarters at New Orleans. Mr. Harden had been in the show business for 20 years, at various times managing houses in different parts of the country, including Dallas and Houston. He has been an exchange man two years, joining the Fox forces March 15, 1915, as manager at Kansas City, and will be remembered as such—there has been no faltering in his attitude, and because of that the business of the company, and of the exhibitors who have been patrons, has prospered exceedingly.

Chas. W. Harden.

Mr. Harden is succeeded at Kansas City by E. H. Wachter, who has traveled for the General, Mutual and others, and since August, 1915, has been Mr. Harden's right-hand man in building up the business in the territory, being recommended by him for the place.

Will Boost Children's Shows.

Kansas City, Mo.—Miss Anna Gilday, teacher in a local high school, has been elected chairman of the appeal board of the local Board of Censorship. Connected with Miss Gilday are Ernest Barr, vice-president of the Nelson Grain Co., and Battle McArdle, local attorney. A plan Miss Gilday is endeavoring to get the local exhibitors to adopt is that of moving pictures for children on Saturday mornings. The Warwick, Willis Wood and Linwood are three of the largest houses in town that are contemplating such a feature. Miss Gilday decalres her intention of working on this particular phase until it is adopted by the theaters. Fairy stories and beautiful legends that will grip the child's fancy can be produced that will be of inestimable value in character building, is the main feature advanced in favor of the scheme, while the fact that morning performances will keep the children at home evenings is another point.

Harrisonville, Mo.—O. E. McDanel, manager of Brile's Opera House, Harrisonville, was in Kansas City recently, booking "The Girl and the Game." Brile's has attendance every Saturday afternoon of 700 to 1,000 at the free show paid for by local merchants in a town of less than 2,000 people. The free show seems to boost the business of the rest of the week, rather than to hurt it.

State of Film Business

Indianapolis Exhibitor of Prominence Gives Clear-Eyed Insight Into Picture Business as He Finds It Locally—Thinks Some Local Theaters May Find Hard Sledding Soon—Hope for Those Who Stick.

Special to the Moving Picture World from the Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—A. C. Zaring, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League of Indianapolis and owner of two paying theaters in this city, is no irresponsible optimist. Right now, despite his success in the moving picture field—which his friends say is real although he refuses to tell about it—Zaring is out with complaints about business in Indianapolis. Zaring is going so far as to threaten to pull out and says he would if the future looked as dark as the present is in his opinion.

"How's business with the league members?" was a question asked the other day and that was sufficient.

"Business," said Zaring, "business. Well business is pretty good now that better weather has come along, but it is not nearly as good as it might be. Of course we have learned not to expect a great business during Lent, but it could be better."

"What's the matter with Indianapolis business?" Mr. Zaring was asked. "What ails it?"

In the opinion of Mr. Zaring, Indianapolis has played the motion picture game too hard. He says that the town is overloaded with motion picture houses and more are coming.

Things Likely to Happen.

"The business in Indianapolis is rapidly reaching the point where things are likely to happen to those embarking in the business," Mr. Zaring said. "Three years ago each neighborhood had its theater. The house showed three reels during the performance, for which they received a nickel. Now the houses show six reels at an expense three or four times as great and they get a dime. That percentage is fine, but it must be remembered that where one house was located three or four years ago two or three have entered the territory. In one locality in a select residence district of Indianapolis where one show or possibly two were located three years ago nine theaters have been installed and the result is that no one is making money. When the expense of operating these shows become too great for some of them to bear of course they will get out. And that is the thing on which I am building hopes.

Hope for the Man Who Sticks.

"It is my humble opinion that some in the business have taken fliers which is certain to mean ruin to some of them, but like every other young and tremendously successful industry, there must be this period and then—a period of readjustment. So it is with the theater owner. The fellow who hangs on long enough is certain to come out with a fair profit. He is the real moving picture theater owner. But the fellow who has taken a 'flier' and installed temporarily a show place, as it were, will take a sudden tumble.

"Yes," Zaring concluded, "Indianapolis is a good town and has good audiences. We have no kick on our patronage. And business, I think will get better, after we pass through this period of readjustment."

Changes at World Film Office.

Indianapolis, Ind.—This city has a new exchange manager. G. N. Montgomery has been put in charge of the World Film exchange. Mr. Montgomery has been in charge of branches in the south for the World and the Mutual.

Montgomery has appointed R. E. Kerley assistant manager. E. M. Franklin, traveling agent, formerly assigned to the Cleveland Branch, has been brought to Indianapolis and will have charge of the Indiana and Kentucky territory under the direction of Montgomery.

"We have had at least eight releases, which were knockouts, recently," Mr. Montgomery said, commenting on the prospects. "If our service continues to score hit after hit, and there seems no reason why it shouldn't, business will increase proportionately."

At Mutual's Office.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Manager M. M. Miller, of the Mutual, Indiana agency says that exhibitors are "falling all over themselves" trying to get bookings for the coming Chaplin specials.

Indiana Notes of Interest.

Covington, Ind.—A. S. Bower, proprietor of the Family theater at Covington has taken a long time lease on a downtown building of the little city and will remodel.

Terre Haute, Ind.—Benny Van Borssum, manager of the Savoy and Crescent theaters of Terre Haute was one of the first to contract for the Charlie Chaplin specials.

Lafayette, Ind.—Although three have been convicted in the Lafayette Sunday closing case the fight is still on. It has been one of the most bitter fought out in the courts of Tippecanoe county in many years and it has attracted great attention throughout the state. Attorneys for the defense have before the court a motion to discharge three defendants, David Maurice, Luke Balfe and Charles Reichard. They were convicted by the jury which heard the case against them and Misha Rubinoff, who was acquitted. The four men were charged with conspiracy to break the Sunday closing laws and since Rubinoff was acquitted declare that the other three men cannot be guilty of conspiring to an innocent man. If the judge rules against them it is likely the case will go to the supreme court.

Michigan City, Ind.—The Starland voting contest, in progress in Michigan City for several weeks, was a complete success, according to the management. The theater conducted the voting contest, offering an automobile to the most popular woman. Mrs. S. Linkemer was the winner of the machine.

North Vernon, Ind.—The North Vernon Amusement Company has filed articles of incorporation. The capital stock is placed at $10,000. The directors are Joseph H. Miller, Ralph T. Hudson, Orville Platter, William J. Hare and Edward W. Tech. It is announced that the company will build a new theater. Plans are not complete.

Gary, Ind.—Vernon U. Young, announces that he will build, in Gary, Ind., a theater with a seating capacity of 1,000. The theater is to be erected on Broadway and is to have a frontage of seventy-five feet in a downtown location. The theater will be fitted with a stage and vaudeville will have the right of way during the winter months. The theater will be completed within two months it is announced. C. J. Wolf, of Wheeling, W. Va., is associated with Young in the $35,000 project.

Socialist Party Finds Fault With Censor

At Rockford, Ill., the Winnebago County Central Committee Passes Resolutions Condemning Censoring of "New York."

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ROCKFORD, ILL.—The action of Mrs. Margaret Joslin, local censor, in stopping the film "New York" at a local theater, was condemned in a resolution passed by the Winnebago county central committee of the Socialist party.

"We believe there are times when unpleasant incidents are necessary to force and drive home the 'cold facts' and truth," says the resolution, "and if these are portrayed right and in proper spirit may do more to teach and promote more of a moral lesson than the contrary."

The resolution also expressed confidence in the national board of censors.

Max Asher in Illinois.

Springfield, Ill.—Max Asher, the Universal comedian appeared in person at a number of Illinois theaters. He was at the Capitol theater here, the Lyric in Lincoln and a Decatur house.

Changes in Illinois Theaters.

Galesburg, Ill.—A. C. Nelson, formerly an exhibitor at Rockford, Ill., has taken over the Colonial theater in South Prairie street. He will run five reels for five cents. Metro service will play a prominent part in his bookings.

Lemont, Ill.—William Nelson and Otto Lindeneau are now operating the Ideal theater, succeeding C. J. Diesel & Son.

New Canton, Ill.—R. A. Dudley has started a moving picture show here.

Taylorville, Ill.—M. J. Hogan has leased the Elks theater to H. M. Fort and Martin Hile. The latter has been house manager.

Peotone, Ill.—Al. Parker of Melvin, Ill., has purchased a moving picture show here.

Exhibitors and Ideas in Illinois.

Galesburg, Ill.—The Lubin feature, "Her Wayward Sister," and a Kalem railroad picture (Galesburg is a railroad center), was picked for the benefit program for Rebekah lodge at the Colonial theater.

Clayton, Ill.—The Pastime theater, in conjunction with a local milliner, had a style show with pictures and live models.

Monmouth, Ill.—C. D. Tinsley of the Superior Film company of Des Moines, Ia., who made "The Fire Fighters" for the Princess theater here last fall, has been secured to make another local photoplay. It will have a Mexican border setting and Company H, Illinois National Guard, was enlisted for the military touch.

North Henderson, Ill.—The North Henderson band has started its spring term of picture shows. This organization finances itself by supplying the fluctuating demand of a small community for photoplays.

Pekin, Ill.—The Court and Capitol theaters are now using a weekly calendar giving the coming programs at both houses.

Kankakee, Ill.—Manager Reilly of the Princess theater ran "Julius Caesar" on Saturday, with a special morning show for school children.

Champaign, Ill.—Champaign is a bit of a railroad terminal, so the two-reel home-talent photoplay which the Belvoir theater had made glimpsed life in the roundhouse and on the rail. P. C. Norman of the Norman Film company of Chicago produced the picture.

Quincy, Ill.—The remarkable record of "The Birth of a Nation" for good business on return dates was sustained in its six performance run at the Hippodrome.

Oneida, Ill.—The woman's club wanted money for fixing up the park. A night's receipts at Paul Ericson's Cozy theater got it.

Springfield, Ill.—The Grand theater played a two-day return engagement of the Bluebird feature, "Undine."

Bloomington, Ill.—The Castle theater had the Superior Film company of Des Moines, Ia., make a two-reel local, "The Man at the Throttle."

WISCONSIN NEWS LETTER.

Theater Changes in Wisconsin.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, WIS.—Milton Lamb and Walter Schwaner have sold the Palace theater to C. M. Waterbury of Pierpont, S. D.

Antigo, Wis.—All safety features in the plans of the new Palace theater have been approved by the Wisconsin Industrial Commission. Contract for its construction has been awarded to the Appleton Construction company. It will cost about $40,000 and is to be opened about July 1. Manager Hanson made an inspection tour of many middle-west theaters, embodying the best features of each in the plans for the new house.

Whitewater, Wis.—John and Anton Johnson have purchased the interest of their partner, Frank Callahan, in the moving picture theater here.

Two Rivers, Wis.—The Empire theater has been leased by the Gloe-Naidl orchestra which will give moving picture shows Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Hammond, Wis.—Andrew Hope has secured control of the Andress opera house.

Stevens Point, Wis.—J. R. McKinley has had B. S. Scheiderer, architect of Milwaukee, draw plans for a one story brick and tile, 40 x 30, moving picture theater seating 500.

Tomah, Wis.—C. J. Maxwell has purchased the interest of his partner George McCullough in the Unique theater.

Frederic, Wis.—Construction of an opera house will be started here this spring, it is reported.

Racine, Wis.—A moving picture theater is to be opened on the first floor of the Masonic temple at 507-511 Main street.

Jefferson, Wis.—Frank Fischer will manage the moving picture theater which his mother, Mrs. Lizette Fischer, has purchased from R. L. Kathan.

Appleton, Wis.—The Strand theater may re-open under a new management, it is reported.

Menasha, Wis.—Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Droske sold the Idle Hour theater to C. Peterson of Omro.

Menasha, Wis.—The Square theater at Main and Milwaukee streets has been closed and Otto Emmenegger has sold the equipment.

Onalaska, Wis.—R. Weltstern of the Mutual Film corporation of Milwaukee was here and booked the Mutual Masterpictures for every Tuesday at the Crystal theater.

Eau Claire, Wis.—A five cent ticket to the Lyric theater was a premium at the opening of the Sullivan-Considine vaudeville program at the Unique theater.

New House in Superior.

Superior, Minn.—Under arrangements completed today Superior will have a new $100,000 vaudeville and motion picture theater in the near future. The house will be run upon the same policy as the New Grand in Duluth, and attractions of the same class will be played.

M. S. and B. J. Cook, proprietors of the New Grand here, and Manager Frank N. Phelps today obtained a 100-year lease of the property at Eleventh street and Tower avenue, Superior, and they will be joint owners of the new theater.

The house will be arranged with two floors with a seating capacity of 1,200.

The construction and superintending of the entire work will be in charge of Manager Phelps.

Exhibitors and Ideas.

Superior, Wis.—M. S. and B. J. Cook, pproprietors of the New Grand theater at Duluth, and Frank N. Phelps have taken a 99-year lease on a site at Eleventh street and Tower avenue in Superior and will erect a brick, steel and concrete vaudeville and moving picture theater to cost about $100,000. It will seat 1,200 on two floors and will be equipped with playrooms, nursery, smoking rooms and other conveniences.

Ripon, Wis.—Henry Auler, architect, Oshkosh, Wis., has submitted plans for the new opera house here. It will seat about 700. One design is for a combined opera house and armory.

Superior, Wis.—Fred Hensgren has taken over the management of the Drexel theater in the East end of the city.

Fox Lake, Wis.—W. W. Church has purchased the Home theater from Dickson & Collins.

Superior, Wis.—The Grand theater gave a bag of candy to every child that attended a Saturday matinee of Triangle films.

Minneapolis Screen Club

Local Film Men Form Social Organization at Meeting Held in Blue Bird Office—Committee Appointed to Look for Fitting Quarters—Many Leading Film Men Already Interested.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Local film men have a social organization which they have called the Screen Club. The first meeting was held at the Blue Bird office, but a committee now is on the job looking for regular quarters where local and visiting film men can make themselves at home at any time. Those present at the session were D. W. Chamberlain, Thomas J. Hamlin, P. H. Carey, Harry Rathner, G. D. (Dad) Strong, Benjamin Goldman, C. W. Sawin, J. Margoles, Julius Bernheim, Harry Muer, Edward J. Wescott, Lee Horn, Ralph Bradford, J. A. Van Meter, Bert Barnett and Fred S. Meyer. Mr. Meyer was president pro tem and Mr. Hamlin, secretary. The fee for initiation was set at $5 for the next 40 days after which time they will be doubled. The monthly dues will be 50 cents. The next meeting, to be held in the Dutch Room of the West Hotel, was left in charge of Messrs. Chamberlain, Wescott and Sawin.

FORBID SIDEWALK SIGNS.

Mayor Makes Theaters Take in Too Interesting Advertising.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Minneapolis censorship board took a wallop at the picture men of the city in a most unexpected spot several days ago. A woman member started the ball to rolling with a complaint and the next thing the theater operators knew was that Mayor Nye had ordered them to remove all posters, signs and other obstructions from the sidewalks in front of their places of business. The woman censor asserted the walks were continually blocked in the vicinity of theaters by persons who did nothing more than stop to look for a long stretch at the sidewalk ads. The exhibitors brought the matter up at their next meeting in the West hotel, but decided the Mayor was simply carrying out an ordinance which grows more or less rusty at times, but which, nevertheless, still is operative and that an objection would get them nowhere.

Benson Patrons Get Money's Worth.

Benson, Minn.—Patrons of the Dreamland theater at Benson, Minn., ought to vote Manager Christopherson of the playhouse into the mayoralty. This is the treat he gives them with a highwater mark of 20 cents: Monday evening, serial, "The Diamond From the Sky"; Tuesday and Friday evenings, Paramount offerings; Wednesday evening, Triangle; Thursday evening, V-L-S-E, and Saturday evening, Metro.

Minneapolis in Serial Comedy.

Minneapolis is excited over the staging of a photoplay, "Cohen's Triumph" on the city streets by the Minneapolis Motion Picture Studio. Forty aspirants to fame on the screens are taking part in the filming and it is all the police can do to keep traffic moving while the picture man is getting a scene. In fact, one traffic policeman threatened to arrest the entire cast of characters, picture men, director and all when pedestrians gathered so thickly around them on the chief business thoroughfare, Nicollet avenue, during the noon hour the other day. Since all the pictures are taken at busy corners, now and then prominent residents of the city are caught in the picture, which makes it all the better. The scenario was written by Milton Hyman and William Ransford and the 50 scenes are to be shown without subtitles. The first of the pictures already are being shown at the Strand theater and the management says they haven't seats enough to accommodate the crowds who come, many, undoubtedly, in the hope of seeing themselves on the edge of the action in the picture.

Great West Film Company.

St. Paul, Minn.—Wallace D. Coburn, the cowboy poet, who recently announced his purpose to float a film producing company here, has made good, although L. W. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railroad, has denied the rumor which connected him with the organization scheme. Coburn, Harry K. Jones and Edmund Campbell are named as incorporators in the articles filed with the secretary of state. The company, which is called the Great West Film Company, has a capital stock of $500,000. The company will specialize in pictures showing life in the open West as it really is.

New Film Exchange Block Ready.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Northwest Weekly Company, William A. Lochren, president, is the first tenant to move into the new Film Exchange block, a six-story structure. It is expected many other exchanges will take quarters from time to time in the new building. The building is built to comply with all the laws and ordinances and there isn't a ghost of a show for any city officials to start anything. The Northwest made a great hit with a little stunt it pulled off at the convention of 250 Northwest automobile men, who were here for the big Chalmers company get-together. The automobile men had a parade in the afternoon and when they sat down for their evening program a few hours later the hall where they met at the West hotel was darkened and they had a look at themselves in the machine pageant.

Censors Ban "Virtue."

Minneapolis, Minn.—The appeal from the finding of Mayor Nye's sub-committee of screen censors, who ordered "Virtue" kept from the boards in Minneapolis, met the same fate at the hands of the full board. "Virtue" failed to get a chance to show even once in this city.

"Gold and the Woman" shared a portion of the same adverse ruling. The film was ordered stopped by a sub-committee of the censors after it had been on exhibition three days. The play was allowed to proceed by the full board, however, after a deal of pruning had been done.

Ft. Worth Opens Sundays

Victory for Advocates of Open Sabbath Shows in Fort Worth, Texas—Referendum Election Won by Majority of 993 Votes—Statewide Campaign for Local Option May Result.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Special Correspondent, 618 Comal Street, Dallas.

FORT WORTH, Texas.—The election to decide whether theaters should be permitted to open on Sunday in Fort Worth, Texas, resulted in a victory for the proponents of the measure. The result was 3,811 for and 2,818 against, a majority of 993.

While the majority in favor was not as decisive as that polled in Waco recently on the same subject, it was convincing enough, as the opponents of the measure had made a far greater fight than those behind it. Then, too, a feeling of over-confidence kept out many who otherwise would have voted for the proposition.

It is understood that the element against Sunday shows will not let the matter rest here. If they should invoke the state law, there is no doubt a statewide effort will be made to change the law into a local option measure.

A Weather Note.

Texas financially is very much at the mercy of agricultural conditions, and a heavy general rain over the state the last of March presages good crops and therefore good business—consequently exhibitors are feeling good over the prospects for summer and fall business.

Special Showing of "Unwritten Law."

Dallas, Texas.—A special showing was given of "The Unwritten Law," the California Motion Picture Corporation's production, on Sunday, April 2, at noon, at the Old Mill theater, Dallas. Something like forty exhibitors and others were present, and the comments were all very favorable to the picture.

Rights on this picture have been purchased by the Central Feature Film Company of Waco, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana. M. D. J. Byars, a member of the firm of the Central company, was in Dallas, and acted as host at the special showing.

James A. Athas Gets a New House.

Taylor, Texas.—James A. Athas, one of the pioneer exhibitors in Texas, has sold his theater at Taylor, Texas. "Candy Jim's" theater, to The Bland-Hoke Company of the Colonal theater at Taylor. Mr. Athas originally started the theater as an adjunct to his ice-cream parlor. He has leased the Crazy theater at Mineral Wells, Texas, and is at it again. (The theater is not crazy, nor is its owner. It gets its name from one of the larger wells at Mineral Wells, called Crazy on account of its erratic behavior.)

"Victory of Virtue" Goes Well.

"The Victory of Virtue" is going well in this state. It was booked for two days at the Queen theater, Dallas, and before the time was up an extension of one day was secured. The same change was made at Houston.

This picture is handled in Texas by the Progressive Feature Film Company, which has also secured the state rights on "The Melting Pot."

Dallas Territory Notes.

Dave A. Weis of the Prince theater, Houston, was in Dallas last of March. Mr. Weis is working Oklahoma with the "Battle Cry of Peace," and likes the way business is coming in.

T. Fennell, formerly organist for the Colonial theater, Wheeling, W. Va., has come to Texas to enter the employ of E. H. Hulsey, proprietor of a string of theaters in this state. Mr. Fennell's future duties will most likely be at the Queen theater, Houston.

A. R. Allen, in conjunction with C. C. Ezell, is handling the Jack London South Sea Island pictures in this territory.

McAlister, Okla.—The Liberty theater has raised from 5c. straight to 5c. and 10c. and will abandon program service for Big Four features.

San Antonio, Texas.—The Princess theater, San Antonio, Texas, will change from straight pictures to a mixed program, using features and Pantages vaudeville.

San Antonio, Texas.—The Grand Opera House at San Antonio, managed by Jack Burke, started its summer picture run March 20. Triangle and open market features will be the bill.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

New Men in Local Universal.

DENVER, COLO.—Louis Goldstein, manager of the Denver Universal exchange, has announced two changes in his office force. One is the addition of C. F. Calkin to the staff of road men and the other is the abolition of the position of advertising man which was held by E. J. Lowry. In Calkin's case it might be said that he returns to the Universal instead of being a new addition. He was with the Universal people before becoming associated with the Swanson & Nolan Supply Co., which firm he leaves to accept his new position.

New Las Vegas Theater.

Las Vegas, N. M.—Harry P. Brown, of the firm of Brown & Rosenwald, has completed plans for a $50,000 opera house for this city. Work will be started on the new theater within a month. The Opera house will supplant three small theaters that are now being operated by the same firm.

Hoffman Company Gets to Work.

Denver, Colo.—The Hoffman Film Company has started the production of moving pictures, according to the announcement of Arthur Hoffman, head of the company, which is incorporated under the laws of Colorado.

John Predari, well known among European film men, and because of his long connection with the Pathe companies abroad, is to play the leading male roles, while Gladys Fisher, a Denver girl, will be the leading lady. This will be Miss Fisher's first work for the screen. The first effort of the new film concern will be a comedy the scenario for which was written by Predari.

News Notes of Denver Territory.

Colorado, Colo.—Denham Palmer, Western manager of the World Film Corporation has returned to his headquarters at San Francisco after a week spent in Denver on an inspection tour.

Wakenberg, Colo.—Otto Klein has sold the Empress theater to E. M. Radcliff.

Roton, N. M.—Joe Yeager, manager of the Princess theater, at Roton, N. M., has remodeled his playhouse and enlarged his seating capacity 250. He now can accommodate 600 people.

Trinidad, Colo.—Jack Nash has closed his old theater known as the Isis and is now holding forth at the Strand, which he recently completed.

Antonito, Colo.—T. F. Mulvaney has opened his "New Photoplay" theater. It is ideal in every particular.

Trinidad, Colo.—R. W. Davis, of the Photoplay theater, at Trinidad, moved April 1 to his new location on the site of the old Rex theater.

PRAIRIE STATE'S NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Iowa Business Men Favor Sunday Shows.

CHARLES CITY, IA.—The newly organized Business Men's Progressive league passed a resolution protesting against the fight made here on Sunday picture shows. Only a few persons are engaged in the fight and the opposition is not representative of local sentiment, says the resolution.

In order to have a supreme court decision as to whether William Waterhouse, an exhibitor, is violating the law in running a show on Sunday a truce may be called. His opponents have had him arrested three times and he has been acquitted twice.

Sunday Opening Fight in Mason City.

Mason City, Ia.—Mason City has a Sunday show fight with the customary arrests and assessed fines of managers for violation of the Sunday labor laws. The managers refused to plead guilty to a misdemeanor, although admitting their houses were open. Manager J. M. Heffner of the Bijou, J. F. Johansen of the Bijou, and A. Kahn of the Regent are bearing the brunt of the battle.

Iowa Business Men Honor Exhibitor.

Iowa City, Ia.—A good moving picture exhibitor is regarded as a distinct asset to a community by the local Commercial club. W. M. McKenzie, who came from New York to manage the Englert theater, was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by the local business organization. Paramount pictures loom up in the Englert's new policy.

Two Fires in Theater.

Manson, Ia.—Two fires, one close upon the other, hint of enmity to the Gem theater. The second caused considerable water damage to the equipment. Two weeks before the last fire, the front door of the house was found open and the films torn and destroyed.

Youngsters Want to Stay.

Fort Dodge, Ia.—Juvenile enthusiasm for the serial "Neal of the Navy" caused trouble at the Majestic theater's Saturday matinees for children. These have been held in the early afternoon, but there was much interest in the serial that the youngsters could not be moved after the regular afternoon business began and seats were not available. The children's show has been switched to 10.30 a. m.

Iowa Theater Changes.

Center Point, Ia.—Wilhelm Brothers of Garwin, Ia., have purchased the Cozy theater from Merrill & Wheeler.

Dysart, Ia.—Earl Vaupel, who purchased the moving picture theater here, has been making plans for remodeling, including a new front, and installing new equipment.

Sioux City, Ia.—Plans for a new fireproof motion picture theater, 50 x 75, costing $12,000, to be erected at West Seventh street and Market street, were announced by L. Longnecker, agent for the Purslow estate. F. E. Colby & Sons have drawn plans.

Castana, Ia.—R. G. Taylor plans a moving picture and vaudeville airdome.

Oxford Junction, Ia.—A hollow tile moving picture theater 32 x 90, will be erected by Frank Shedek, owner of the Opera house, on a site on Broadway, which he has just purchased.

Alden, Ia.—Hurst & Pettinger have taken over the Star theater which has been operated by H. A. Shaffer.

Washington, Ia.—August Rath has sold his moving picture show here.

Callender, Ia.—Johnson & Lund of Windom, Minn., have purchased the moving picture show of Christian Peterson.

Scranton, Ia.—The Odd Fellows' lodge contemplates the erection of an opera house.

Primghar, Ia.—R. M. Beamsley of Steamboat Rock has purchased the Casino theater.

Dakota Theater Notes.

Velva, N. D.—L. K. Siverston of Carrington assumed charge April 1 of the Isis theater here.

Webster, S. D.—C. G. Rosenbury of White Rock has purchased the Ruby theater from J. L. Jenkins.

Mitchell, S. D.—The Metropolitan theater is now a feature house, showing six big pictures each week.

Aberdeen, S. D.—"Dollars and the Woman" was the opening attraction at the Rialto theater, the handsome house transformed from the old Idle Hour theater by McCarthy Brothers.

Nebraska Theater Changes.

Merna, Neb.—Jacquot & Foster have opened a moving picture show in the Brotherton building.

Chadron, Neb.—The Pace opera house has been opened.

Beatrice, Neb.—Under the new title of the Monogram theater, M. Peyton has opened the house which has been known as the Jewel theater.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

IN CALIFORNIA.

San Francisco Business Notes.

The Excelsior theater on Mission street, near Onondaga avenue, is to be reopened at an early date.

The New Mission theater will be opened on May 4 with Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina."

A son has arrived at the home of Jack L. Warner, manager of the local branch of the New Film Corporation.

Leo Haas has been promoted from the shipping to the booking department of the California Film exchange.

Chas. I. Luntz, manager of the local Blue Bird interests, has returned from a trip through the interior valleys of the state and booked many new accounts.

Frank Hammer, formerly with George Breck, is now with the Pathe exchange as booker, this being his first venture in this branch of the film business.

The Ocean View theater has been sold by Martin Kertzig to Mrs. Nadge M. Cooper, formerly connected with the Sherman theater.

William Fest and Sol Fisher have purchased the Republic theater at Fillmore and Steiner streets, and will continue to feature vaudeville and moving pictures.

Denham Palmer, district manager for the World Film, has returned from a trip through the Pacific Coast territory visiting the various branches. Conditions are reported as being generally satisfactory, with the San Francisco office heading the list for volume of business.

California Briefs.

Eureka, Cal.—The Colonial theater has been sold by J. V. Spaugh to A. Neilsen.

Oakland, Cal.—The Marquee theater has been purchased by J. Hellman, of Hellman's theater.

Alpaugh, Cal.—R. W. Horner has purchased the interests of his partner in the local theater.

San Jose, Cal.—The Liberty theater has been fitted up in better shape than ever, following the recent fire.

San Francisco Censors

New Censorship Ordinance, Most Drastic Yet, Headed Off at Last Minute by Local Exhibitors' Organization—Police Committee of Board of Supervisors Still Considering the Matter.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The inattention of members of the moving picture industry in this city in regard to the activities of local interests outside of the business came near resulting in the passage of one of the most drastic censorship ordinances in effect anywhere without as much as a protest and only an eleventh hour effort warded off the danger. Just how successful this will be in the end remains to be seen as the Police Committee of the Board of Supervisors is still considering the matter. Instead of abolishing the present ordinance, as planned recently, an amendment has been submitted to the Board of Supervisors by representatives of the California Club creating a new advisory (censorship) board of nine members and adding a new prohibitory clause relating to films "inciting race hatred or prejudice."

Public Hearing on New Ordinance.

On the afternoon of March 30th a public hearing of this matter was held before the Police Committee of the Board of Supervisors, consisting of Supervisors Lehaney, Hocks and Deasy. More than one hundred and fifty persons were present at the meeting, mostly film exchange men and exhibitors, and emphatic protests were made against the passage of the ordinance. The clerk of the committee read a communication from the city attorney on the proposed amendment in which he stated that in his opinion the board had power to act on the question but that the measure was far too sweeping and probably could not be enforced.

M. E. Cory, representing the local Exhibitors' League, briefly traced the history of censorship, told of its failure elsewhere, and asked for the passage of the ordinance recently submitted placing moving pictures under the same regulations as the legitimate stage, the press and other mediums of expression. He was followed by Mrs. Nora F. Rasmussen, a former exhibitor, who declared that she had never seen a picture that could offend as much as certain books in the public libraries which are open to all. L. G. Dolliver, representing the Theatrical Federation, said that the American Federation of Labor opposed censorship in any and all forms and recounted some of the accomplishments of this body.

Would Discourage Good Work.

Maurice L. Asher, secretary of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, read resolutions passed this week by this board which cited that the proposed measure would exclude moving pictures of a superior class, that it would discourage the production of fine pictures and asked for the passage of the ordinance referred to by Mr. Cory. Frank E. Woods, of the Fine Arts Studio of the Triangle corporation, told of the efforts of film manufacturers to produce clean pictures and of the manner in which the industry was hampered by local censors. Neil McCarthy, attorney for the Paramount and Lasky companies, gave a clean cut talk on the legal side of the question and declared that producers would welcome advisory boards in every city. He stated that what they objected to was the granting of arbitrary power to any one person, or set of persons, to stop the showing of pictures. The only fair way of deciding whether or not certain pictures were immoral or otherwise, he contended, would be by a jury trial of alleged offending exhibitors. This idea was strenuously objected to by the proponents of the proposed measure. The matter was then taken under advisement by the members of the police committee.

INTERNATIONAL OPENS OFFICE.

H. L. Knappen Heads New Exchange—Chooses Roadman and Booker.

San Francisco, Cal.—The International Film Service, Inc. has entered the local field, having fitted up a neat place of business at 280 Golden Gate avenue, opposite the new home of the General Film Company. H. L. Knappen has been appointed manager and he is now busily engaged in gathering a working force and in getting the new quarters in shape. Mr. Knappen was at one time connected with the local Pathe exchange and later had charge of the Denver branch of this concern, going from there to Atlanta to fill a similar position. He has selected a road man in the person of H. W. Korper and H. J. Henrioulle, well known in film circles here, will be office booker. The first release will be the "Mysteries of Myra," on which an unusually heavy publicity campaign is to be started at once, and April 24 will be the first release date.

Exchange Installs Printing Press.

San Francisco, Cal.—The California Film Exchange has installed a multicolor press and is now in a position to print its own stationery, circular letters and cards. In addition to affecting a considerable saving in cost there is the added advantage of being able to have work turned out on short notice.

General Film Company Moves.

San Francisco, Cal.—The General Film Company has moved from the location on Eddy street, which has been occupied for several years, to its new home on Golden Gate avenue, where an entire building erected for its particular requirements is occupied. A detailed description of this intersting structure will be given at a later date.

Blazon Company Incorporates.

Reno, Nev.—The Blazon Film Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000,000 by M. F. Hurlbut and Joseph Scaffire, of San Francisco, Cal., T. F. Firby, Helene Hough and W. H. Hough, of Oakland, Cal.

Vim Company Changes Plans.

Alameda, Cal.—The Vim Motion Picture Company, organized some time ago to make moving pictures at Alameda and Oakland, has asked the Commisioner of Corporations to revoke its permit to issue stock, having made a change in its plans.

Calmy Traveling for Golden Gate.

San Francisco, Cal.—M. Calmy is making a road trip through Northern California in the interests of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., traveling by automobile and visiting all of the small towns. Business conditions in the interior are improving with the advent of clear weather and a good volume of business is being booked.

Board of Trade Has New Manager.

San Francisco, Cal.—Fred W. Voigt, who for several months has filled the position of manager of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, has resigned and has accepted a road position with the local Pathe exchange. He has been succeeded by F. S. Peachy, well known here through his former connections with the United Film and the Universal companies.

Oregon's Sabbath Up

Exhibitors in State Are Facing an Attempt to Shut Every Theater Tight on Sundays —Petition May Be Circulated to Put Strict Closing Bill on Ballot for Coming November Election—A Danger Sign.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Petitions to place a Sunday bill on the ballot in November are now being circulated among the voters in Oregon. This is the bill fathered by Rev. Tutts and which was described at length in the World several months ago. At a recent discussion of the subject the motion picture men were of the opinion that the Tufts bill provided for the cessation of all labor except on public utilities on one day of the week, but left the regulation of amusements to home rule. This view, however, was not taken by Barnette H. Goldstein, a candidate for the state legislature, in an interview with the writer. Mr. Goldstein declared he interpreted the proposed law to provide for the Sunday closing of absolutely all enterprises except works of public utility.

Voters Must Look Out.

He declared the title of the proposed act to be deceptive and stated that unless the voters were instructed as to its real intent and purpose they might be deceived into voting for something they did not want. He stated that the theater interests of Oregon should thoroughly investigate the true intent of the proposed measure. Oregon, being the first state in the Union to adopt the initiate and referendum, has the reputation of being the home of freak legislation. Mr. Goldstein stated that the proposed "one day of rest in seven" measure was merely an attempt to weave religious fanaticism into the present patchwork of the state's legal fabric.

CENSORS FEAR LITTLE SCREEN.

Think They Miss Things That Large Screen Would Show.

Portland, Oregon.—Of late the screens in the exhibition rooms of the film exchanges have been demanding the censor board's attention. Two prominent exchanges received letters from Mrs. E. E. Colwell, secretary of the board, asking that their screens be enlarged. The Mayor had instructed her to make this request, she said. The reason is that viewers claim that they miss many of the vicious details of the pictures or that the signification of action portrayed is lost when the picture is projected on a screen of reduced size.

But the real reason for the censor board's request, some exhibitors say, is to pave the way for a demand for a central viewing place where a large screen can be had and pictures submitted to minute inspection. The agitation for a central viewing place has been going on for some time.

COOL HEADS PREVENT PANIC.

Pianist and Operator at Grand Theater Show Fine Metal.

Baker, Ore.—Mrs. Maurice Haish, pianist at the Grand theater, Baker, Oregon, averted a panic when a reel of film caught fire in the projection booth March 26. Mrs. Haish played stirring airs which held the attention of the audience and operator Fred Small started a fresh reel in the other machine and operated it until the blaze became so hot that he could no longer stay in the room. Small jumped to the sidewalk below uninjured. The audience left the building quietly and the fire department extinguished the blaze. The loss was $800, covered by insurance.

Maurice Haish, of Haish & Cotter, proprietors of the theater, was in Portland a few days after the fire buying equipment to replace that burned.

W. A. Crank Goes to Seattle.

W. A. Crank, road man for Metro, has left Portland to do road work out of Seattle for the same firm under C. J. Kerr, northwest manager. His absence from Portland is temporary. He has been highly successful in booking Metro in Oregon territory.

Goldstein Leaves the West.

E. H. Goldstein, assistant to general manager of exchanges for Universal, who has been on the Pacific Coast for seven months, was in Portland recently on his way from Los Angeles to New York. Mr. Goldstein has completed his duties on the coast for this trip.

Only Six Days' Work for Women.

Salem, Ore.—It is proposed that women in the state of Oregon shall only work six days a week. In order to determine whether it shall make a ruling to this effect, a committee of the Industrial Welfare Commission has been holding hearings in Portland and examining witnesses. It is a question of vital importance to moving picture exhibitors who employ women ushers and cashiers, and some of them have stated that if the commission makes the ruling, the services of all women in theaters will have to be dispensed with.

Drew Comedies Book Well.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, manager of the Portland Metro exchange, reports heavy demand for Drew comedies and says he has booked first, second, third, fourth and fifth run in Portland. The successive bookings in Portland before placing the pictures out of town is an unusual occurrence in this territory.

Big Four in Portland.

C. P. (Whitey) Merwin, formerly of Seattle, has been employed to represent V-L-S-E in Portland territory and will cover the greater part of Oregon and Southern Washington. He expects to be on the road most of the time. The Big Four will no doubt eventually establish an office in Portland but until they do so, Mr. Merwin will make his headquarters at the Cornelius Hotel. He is well known in this territory having been at one time manager of the Portland General Film office and until recently with General Film in Seattle.

Eastern Oregon Man Visits.

C. C. Chormley, owner of the People's theater, Enterprise, Oregon, spent several days in Portland buying equipment for his house which is undergoing extensive alterations. He purchased two American Standard machines from the Service Film Company. Thirty feet will be added to the length of his building and he has purchased 100 first class opera chairs to put in the additional space. A new heating plant is also being installed.

Locher Leaves Pictures.

Fred Locher, until a few weeks ago manager of the Portland office of the World Film Corporation, has signed a contract with the Hearst newspaper syndicate and will enter the journalistic field in Los Angeles. Mr. Locher, who was a recent visitor in Portland, has been serving the World Film in Seattle in the capacity of assistant manager since his departure from the Rose City.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

H. G. Rosebaum, manager of Triangle at Seattle, was a recent visitor en route home from Spokane.

The Columbia theater was the scene of a fashion show in which living models were featured.

Censorship is spreading. The City Council at McMinnville, Oregon, passed an ordinance establishing a censor board for moving pictures. The town has two houses.

Frank H. Donnellan, who has been publicity man for the S. & C. interests on the Pacific Coast for some time, has left Portland for Seattle where he will become assistant manager of the Empress theater.

J. V. Lynn, publicity man for the Peoples Amusement Company, has left that concern.

L. B. Christ's Pickford theater contest is being received with much attention not only in Portland but throughout the territory and several Western exhibitors have written him asking the details of conducting the contest.

Will Rosenthal of the Sutton Feature Film Company, Seattle, was a recent visitor in Portland arranging the bookings of "Marvelous Maciste."

Orville Combs has sold the Opera House, Wallowa, Oregon, to Rudolf J. Brund.

H. M. Wilson, representing Kalem's "Social Pirates," passed through Portland recently.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Ralph Ruffner Attracts Attention.

SPOKANE, WASH.—To encourage latent constructive talent in the youth of Spokane manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theater offered a prize of $5.00 to the boy who could build the best model of an aeroplane, in connection with "The Flying Torpedo," a Griffith film production which was shown at that theater for the first three days of the week.

Eight aeroplanes were entered and placed on exhibition in the lobby of the theater.

Archie Bishop, age 16 years, took the prize, his model being a biplane of the Albatross type, complete with wireless equipment, machine gun and double motors.

Spokane Brevities.

The Casino theater has contracted for the first run of the Mutual Master Pictures and the Charlie Chaplin specials. The first pictures will be shown in May.

J. E. Gregg has started a picture show at Collie City, and will show Mutual Pictures.

A. R. Patton, Spokane sales representative of the Mutual has returned from Portland after covering that territory.

W. J. Morgan, of the Morgan Film Company, of Seattle, is here in the interest of the "Charlie" pictures, which consist of Charlie, Fatty and Mable pictures.

L. J. Schlaisar, of the Blue Bird films, who was in Spokane for the week, returned to Seattle.

W. Potter, of the Universal, announces that the Empress theater has signed up for the Universal pictures.

Clarence Crews, of Walla Walla, has taken over the Spokane theater, and contracted for the Universal pictures, of which 6 reels will be shown twice a week.

No objection from the local theater censor will be raised against the Willard-Moran fight pictures, although interstate commerce regulations prohibits the transfer of pictures of this character, yet if they arrive in Spokane they will surely be shown.

Local Film Hits.

Among the film hits in Spokane theaters for the week of March 26, were Fanny Ward in "For The Defense" and Marie Doro, in "Diplomacy" which drew large patronage at the Clemmer theater.

"The Flying Torpedo," and Bessie Barriscale in "Bullets and Brown Eyes," at the Liberty.

"The Price of Malice" and "Love's Crucible" at the Class A theater.

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

May Prohibit Handbills.

Calgary, Alberta.—At a special meeting of the city council held recently, consideration was given to the question of prohibiting the distribution of handbills, such as are often sent out by theaters and various business houses. The matter was taken up at the request of a deputation from the board of trade, who asked that the distribution of dodgers or handbills of any description be prohibited. The legislative committee requested the city solicitor to look into the question of control and regulation, but after investigation decided that nothing should be done in the matter for the present, at least.

Edmonton Manager Presents Cup.

Edmonton, Alberta.—Manager John Hazza of the Empress theater recently finished up a piece of the finest possible kind of publicity, when the "Empress Theatre Cup" was awarded to "B" company of the 51st Regiment, for attaining the highest score in miniature target practice. The cup was put up by the house some time ago, and was the cause of considerable rivalry between the various companies of soldiers in training here.

On the day of presentation the winning company, commanded by Capt. Lee, marched to the theater, accompanied by Lieut.-Col. Harwood, commanding officer, and headed by the battalion band. The cup was formally presented by Mayor Henry, and Capt. Lee followed with an explanation of the contest. In a speech thanking Manager Hazza for the donation of the cup, Lieut.-Col. Harwood commented on the intense interest which had been aroused, and drew attention to the fact that this branch of a soldier's training is especially important.

E. J. Huttelmayer is Sergeant-at-Arms.

Vancouver, B. C.—In the original announcement of the recent election of officers by the Vancouver Theatrical Federation for the current year, the name of E. J. Huttelmayer, sergeant-at-arms, was inadvertently omitted.

Western Canada Notes.

Edmonton, Alberta.—The Princess theater will hereafter show Metro subjects on Mondays and Tuesdays, and the initial showing of this brand brought good returns. School children were admitted free on these afternoons. Prices range from 2 to 25 cents, with "special rates for theater parties." Seats or boxes may be reserved in advance.

Edmonton, Alberta.—In response to the request by the authorities that returned soldiers be given positions whenever possible, Manager Hazza of the Empress theater has put two veterans on the permanent house staff. A. Spellman, wounded at Neuve Chappelle, is acting as doorman, while F. Miller, who was wounded in thirty-four places when a shrapnel shell burst near him at Ypres, is employed as operator.

Calgary, Alberta.—"The Battle Cry of Peace" had three big days at the Grand here, and will probably play a return date.

Edmonton, Alberta.—"The Girl and the Game" serial has been booked at the Gem, and the story is to run in the Edmonton Journal. This paper is also running "Graft," which is being shown at the Empress.

Vancouver, B. C.—Tickets to the Orpheum are presented to persons whose names appear in linear advertisements apprising them of the fact, on the want-ad page of the Vancouver "Sun."

Edmonton, Alberta.—Through arrangements just completed with the Famous Players exchange, no second run Paramounts will be shown hereafter in this city, the service being confined to the Monarch theater.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Famous Players local premises have recently been enlarged by the addition of a projection room, equipped with a new Powers 6A machine.

Western Canada Matters

The Official Canadian War Pictures, "Canada's Fighting Forces," Seen at the Walker in Winnipeg, First Time in Western Canada—What Is Shown in the Film—Other Items of Local Interest.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WINNIPEG, MAN.—The official Canadian war pictures, under the title "Canada's Fighting Forces," were given their first showing in western Canada at the Walker theater here late last month, being shown for an entire week at 25 and 50 cents. The photography is the work of Lieut. D. J. Dwyer, the official Canadian photographer, and cover the activities of the Dominion soldiers from their departure from various points in this country until their arrival in the trench region of France. Scenes of their embarkation at Quebec on the great fleet of transports which carried them to England, are included, with the accompanying cordon of cruisers and torpedo boats, and a review of forty thousand Canadian troops on Salisbury Plain is also shown. The various maneuvers in the battle of Ypres were graphically illustrated on the screen by animated diagrams, and an explanatory lecture was given by Sergeant Fred Wells, who lost an arm in this battle, and was captured by the German forces, being returned to England in an exchange of prisoners a short time ago.

On one evening during the engagement of the picture a big "Military Night" was featured, and the entire 22nd Overseas Battalion, under Lieut.-Col. Lightfoot, attended in a body.

STRIKERS AND SOLDIERS.

Local Newspaper Deplores the Situation —No Arbitrary Dismissals.

Calgary, Alberta.—The strike situation here remains unchanged. J. B. Cronk, manager of the Allen theater, and spokesman for the managers involved in the dispute with the union, states that the returned soldiers now at work are giving perfect satisfaction, and voices the opinion that it will be a long time before the striking operators will have an opportunity of returning to work. Whereas the former union scale was $22.50 per week, the veterans are now receiving from $24 to $26.50, the top price being paid to the two men at the Allen.

Commenting on the unfavorable conditions which may result from general developments along the same line throughout Canada, a local paper in the course of a long editorial brings up several questions touching on the broader aspects of the case. "The situation," says this paper, "is an exceedingly delicate one, and must be handled with a very great deal of tact. It is a problem bound to arise, but it has come sooner than many expected it. The delicate situation is caused through the sympathy which the public in general—quite properly—has with the returned veteran and the general desire to see him placed in a remunerative occupation. However, it is a very serious matter if in order to secure such occupations competent men must be thrown out of positions and labor unions destroyed. If union men can be replaced by returned veterans in this instance, it will be only a matter of time until every trade union in Canada will be destroyed, and the very satisfactory work done by labor people for many years—satisfactory for both the men and their employers—will tumble down. That is something which must not be allowed to occur. The British army is a labor army. There must be no trouble between the army and organized labor, and under existing conditions it is threatening."

On the other hand, it is stated by the theater managers that no union men were arbitrarily dismissed and replaced by soldiers; nor, as a matter of fact, were these soldiers trained in operating with a view of putting them in Calgary houses, but that it was planned to find positions for them in other parts of the province. Their particular objection was based on the closed-shop clause in the union agreement, and the necessity of accepting any operator assigned to them by the union.

OIL STOVE EXPLODES.

Universal Exchange Shaken—Little Damage Done.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Universal exchange here was recently the scene of an explosion, which, had it occurred at any other time of the day, might have had very serious consequences. During the lunch hour an oil stove in Manager James E. Finch's private office exploded with great force, and a puff of flame filled the entire room. Pictures on all sides of the room were burned and scorched, and the furniture also suffered considerably. A heavy door near the heater was broken by the force of the explosion, and a large area of plaster was loosened from the ceiling. The adjoining room, used by W. Walkley, booker, and W. F. Grunnah, bookkeeper, was also damaged to some extent. Danny Freeman, shipper, who with the exception of Miss Roberts, reviser, was the only person present at the time, summoned the fire department, and says he was quite a hero generally. After the excitement had died down a life-size cut-out of Billie Ritchie was found lying prostrate across Mr. Finch's desk.

Fortunately, the films were stored in a vault at the other end of the suite and were in no danger of burning.

FORD BOOSTS RECRUITING.

Ford Company of Canada Issue Free Topical—Helps Local Recruiting.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Ford Motor Company of Canada has for the past few months been issuing a topical reel of pictures each month, under the name of the Ford Canadian Monthly, and these are supplied free of charge to theaters which desire to use them. A specialty is made of military scenes, and in addition to this the company is making a practice in some parts of the Dominion of taking moving pictures of the various activities of the troops, and presenting the films to local recruiting stations, to be used to stimulate recruiting. Two cameramen are employed, and several topical subjects have also been leased from Cameraman A. D. Kean of this city. Copies of the monthly releases have recently been sent to France for the entertainment of the Canadian soldiers in the trenches.

The company has recently secured the Canadian rights for an exceptionally interesting film, three reels in length, dealing with the first automobile trip ever made across Australia, through the bush and desert country. The man who made the trip and photographed the scenes went unaccompanied, and was the first white man to make a successful crossing since the ill-fated exploration party under Burke and Willis, in the middle of the last century, was overcome on the desert, and reduced to one survivor.

Winnipeg, Man.—Andrew P. Keegan, western general manager for the Specialty Film Import, Limited, has announced that his company has just closed a deal which provides for the showing of "The Iron Claw," the new Pathe serial, in all the Pantages houses in Canada, at Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria. This now assures the exhibition of this serial in all Pantages houses in both the United States and Canada.

SELIG.

SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 25 (March 27).—

Chicago, Ill.—Society celebrates St. Patrick's day at the South Shore Country Club entertaining former President Taft.

Berkeley, Cal.—The U. of C. gives an excellent example to the colleges of the country in their work for preparedness. The student body work constantly at long practice marches.

Waltham, Mass.—Hurrah! Maybe ice will be cheaper this summer! Modern methods of ice cutting enable the ice merchants to harvest their crop much quicker and at less cost.

Fresno, Cal.—This section boasts of the only jitney railroad in the country—five miles—five cents!

Portland, Me.—The steamship Herman Winter, after catching fire, sinks in the harbor here. All hands were saved.

Boston, Mass.—With the aid of a carefully chartered canvas, patrons of a hotel here enjoy winter golf on the roof.

Columbus, N. M.—Battery A, Fourth Field Artillery and Field Hospital Corps No. 7, arrive here, awaiting instructions to join General Pershing in Mexico.

Chihuahua, Mexico.—General Carranza's crack cavalry troop passes through here on the way to co-operate with the American troops in the capture of Villa.

Mineral Wells, Tex.—Manager Rowland has his "White Sox" on the job here "limbering up" before getting down to real hard work of regular training.

Seres, Greece.—Some idea of the cost of war may be gained from this view of supplies and forage for the Allies' forces operating in Greece.

Yarmouth, Mass. — Three thousand mules await in the snow transportation to Italy for work in the Italian army.

Salonika, Greece.—Incessant activity in the harbor here demonstrates that the French navy is ever alert despite the fact that no great naval battle has occurred during the war. Nets are stretched across the harbor entrance to catch and entangle any hostile submarines venturesome enough to attempt to enter.

SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 26 (March 30).

Guantanamo, Cuba.—Shore sports are not overlooked by the crews of the U. S. battleships here for target practice. Basketball and fleet canteen cups in for full patronage.

St. Petersburg, Fla.—The Philadelphia Nationals and the Chicago "Cubs" engage in a spring practice game here. Score, 7 to 2, in favor of "Phillies."

El Paso, Tex.—The 23rd Infantry arrives here with full equipment and makes quick preparations to leave for "Somewhere in Mexico."

London, England.—Wounded soldiers from Charing Cross Hospital are taken for an airing in motorcycle cars.

Warbley, England.—With all regiments contesting the Irish Guards stationed here win the military cross-country race.

Ft. Meyer, Va.—Precipitately at the request of General Pershing the 5th U. S. Cavalry leaves here for Columbus, N. M., and possibly for the interior.

Nashville, Tenn.—Thousands are rendered homeless by a terrific fire which sweeps this city, destroying over thirty-five blocks and causing a property loss running into millions of dollars.

Bingham, Me.—Proverbial office seekers have one eye on the coming Presidential election and another on logging methods here. With a pull like this they could get anything.

Havana, Cuba.—Devotees of the "Sport of Kings" see "Wolf's Baths" with Jockey Connelly up, win the last race of the season at Oriental Park.

Havana, Cuba.—The closing of fashionable resorts abroad, brings to this city thousands of pleasure seekers who participate in the "Paseo de Carnival"—following the old Spanish custom of exchanging greetings. The steamer "Governor Cobb" entering Havana Harbor, breasting the roughest seas of the year. Morro Castle in background.

THE THREE WISE MEN (Three parts—April 17.)—The cast: Nellie (Bessie Eyton); William Owens (Thomas Santsch); Horace Johnson (Guy Oliver); Madge Fields (Edith Johnson). Directed by Colin Campbell. Written by Anthony McQuire. Madge Fields succumbs to the blandishments of William Owens, a wealthy roisterer, and when he tires of her beauty he casts her aside. Too late she realizes the wages of sin. She was loath to believe that Owens had deserted her and her little one. She wrote him letter after letter, pleading and tearful letters which would soften the heart of any one but a selfish rounder. But Owens came not. Christmas time was drawing near.

To William Owens and Horace Johnson, his friend, Christmas Eve meant the bright lights, the merry laughter of women and popping of champagne corks. At the height of the merry making of Owens, Johnson and their friends, enters Nellie of the Salvation Army. She refuses the brimming glass of liquor offered to her. "I don't drink," she says, "but let me tell you a story that was once told to you at your mother's knee."

"When Jesus was born in Bethlehem, there came wise men from the East to Jerusalem, saying, 'Where is He that is born King, for we have seen His star in the East, and have come to worship Him.'" Then the minds of the merry makers revert back to Biblical days when the Savior was born in the manger, and the wise men came bearing gifts.

"They crucified Him and two others with Him."

Then comes a vision of Bethlehem and Owens, by a miracle, finds a sudden distaste for the revelry and leaves the cafe. Seated alone on a park bench, in imagination, he is escorted through Galilee. On one side are his tempters and on the other side is the Salvation Army lassie. Suddenly he awakens by the Christmas morning bells chiming the message of peace and good will to all men. Standing there before him is Nellie, the Salvation Army lassie. Owen's thoughts go back to Madge Fields, the woman whom he had betrayed. Led by Nellie, he goes in search of Madge, finds her, and life's real happiness begins for both of them.

TOO MANY CHEFS (April 22).—The cast: Tom Forde (Tom Mix); Ruth Whitmore (Victoria Forde); John Whitmore (Joe Ryan). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

When Ruth returns to the Bar "G" ranch after acquiring eastern polish she chides the boys for chewing tobacco, cussing and smoking cigarets. When Tom, the foreman, orders the boys out on the range to round up cattle they are pleased, for they are anxious to be away from Ruth's constant admonitions.

Out on the range the cook becomes warmed with wine, is discharged, and in revenge puts his pipe and tobacco in the coffee pot. Tom sends a cowboy to the ranch and asks Ruth to find another cook for them. Ruth resolves to impersonate a French cook. She calls on Tom at the range in male attire. Starting in on her new duties, she makes a pan of fudge instead of cooking dinner. The boys are infuriated and are about to drive the French cook from the camp when she makes her identity known to Tom. Ruth is so attractive that Tom proposes on the spot and is accepted.

BIOGRAPH.

A CRY FOR HELP (Reissue, Apr. 17.) The cast: The Maid (Lillian Gish); The Tramp (Lionel Barrymore); Passerby (Dorothy Gish and Robert Harron); The Men (Harry Cary); His Wife (Claire McDowell); The Doctor (Walter Miller).

Knocked down by an automobile, the intoxicated tramp is taken to the doctor's house, revived and treated to a square meal. The husband of a patient who has just died, calls on the doctor, intending to kill him. The grief-crazed man is foiled several times by the return of the tramp, whom the maid at last pushes out of the house. She hears the doctor struggling with his assailant and faints. The tramp hears the doctor's cry for help and enters by a rear window, despite the objections of a policeman, in time to save his benefactor.

LUBIN.

FROCKS AND FRILLS (April 17).—The cast: The widow (Davy Don); the count (George Egan); Mrs. Ponweber (Florence Williams); her daughter (Patsy de Forest). Written and directed by Edwin McKim.

Otto is a member of the Wise Guys Club. Count Hunter, who is badly in need of money, sails for America to win a rich widow and relieve her of her money.

Count Hunter visits the club; Otto is there and the Count is introduced, but in his stiff and starched formality does not acknowledge Otto. This makes Otto angry. Otto shows an invitation to a masked ball to be held on the following evening at the home of one of the four hundred. The Count gets enthusiastic, and Otto offers him an invitation to go. He accepts. Otto, with two other club members, tells the Count what a wonderful catch the rich widow would be. The Count takes it all in.

The night of the ball arrives. Otto dresses as the rich widow. The fun is fast and furious. The Count wants to take off the widow's mask at the stroke of twelve, but his anxiety to win her and the fortune allows Otto to be quite safe from detection. The Count takes her home, asks to call again the following evening. He calls and Otto again dresses up as the widow. Otto carries the joke to the point where the Count proposes. He is accepted and is about to give her the ring when two friends of Otto's pull off his wig. The Count faints and is carried out by Otto's friends.

ONE OF THE PACK (Two Parts—April 18).—The cast: Pierre Moret (George Routh); Fred Hayden (Jay Morley); John Marston (Louis Fitz Roy); Helen Marston (Eleanor Blevins); Dr. Langham (George Berrell); Brant (Robert Gray); Dr. Schmidt (A. H. Hayn). Written by Tom Gibson. Produced by Leon D. Kent.

Helen Marston, daughter of an old scientist, is sought by two men; one, Pierre Moret, leader of a band of criminals known as "the Pack," who poses as a gentleman of leisure and who has tainted blood; the other, Fred Hayden, a young clerk, whom Helen favors. Dr. Langham, Moret's physician, is an old friend of Helen's father, and makes an informal call upon him. He warns Marston that he is slowly killing himself from overstudy, but Marston does not heed. Dr. Langham sees Moret with Helen, and divining his intentions, warns him that a marriage is out of the question.

Dr. Langham leaves town shortly afterward, and Moret takes advantage of his absence to call upon Helen again. While at her house one day her father suffers a break-down, and to save his life a transfusion of blood is necessary. Moret, fearing lest he be called a coward, is forced to offer himself for the operation. Fred, who has been summoned by Helen, also offers his blood. The samples of blood are taken for the test. The doctor turns his back for a moment, and Moret, seeing a way to dispose of his rival and shield his own condition, changes the samples, with the result that Fred is told he has an incurable disease, and Moret is chosen for the operation. Old Marston dies before the operation, and Helen is left alone in the world.

Fred, believing himself to be doomed, decides to end it then and there. He is seen by Brant, Moret's lieutenant, who persuades Fred to become a member of the Pack. With Fred out of the way, and Helen penniless after a settlement of her father's estate, Moret induces her to marry him. Dr. Langham returns from his trip, and learns of his old friend's death. He comes to offer his sympathy and finds that Helen has just married Moret. He sends her out of the room, and then has an interview with Moret. Moret, frightened by the doctor's manner, confesses everything. The doctor is bound by his profession not to divulge his patient's secret, but compels Moret to write a confession, telling him that as long as he stays away from Helen his secret will be safe, but should he ever try to come back, he (Langham) will place the confession in the proper hands.

The doctor takes Helen to live with him without explaining about Moret. Langham is unable to find Fred to explain that a mistake has been made. Moret sees him, and guesses what the doctor is trying to do. He tries to force the doctor to return the confession, but to no avail. Moret fears that if Fred ever learns of the trick played upon him, he will kill him (Moret), so he instructs his lieutenant, Brant, to get a man to open the doctor's safe, where the letter is, and secure it. Fred has thrown himself into his new life with such reckless abandon that he has earned the name of "the Wolf." When Brant is looking for someone to do the job for Moret, he chooses Fred. Fred goes to the doctor's house and opens the safe. He finds the confession, opens it and learns of Moret's treachery.

Moret, in the meantime, learns that Brant has put "the Wolf" on the job, and in a panic, hurries to the doctor's home in the hope of preventing Fred from learning the contents of the letter. He arrives just as Fred has read the confession, and knowing his only chance is to kill Fred, fires. The shot does not hit Fred, but he pretends it does, and when Moret enters the library to secure the confession, Fred grapples with him, and the fight to the death is on. Fred gets the upper hand, and when Helen and the doctor, attracted by the sounds of the conflict, come into the room, Moret is dead. Fred considers himself more unworthy of Helen than before, but the doctor instils new courage into him, and Fred determines to start life anew. Helen promises to go with him.

THE HEART'S TRIBUTE (Three Parts—April 20).—The cast: Dora Mills (June Daye); Ralph Taylor (E. K. Lincoln); Florence Lalor (Helen Greene); Mrs. Mills (Eleanor Barry); John Mills (Bernard Siegel); Alexander Taylor (Herbert Fortier). Written by Daniel Carson Goodman. Directed by Rene Plaissett.

Dora Mills, an employee in the big office of Alexander Taylor, goes with some friends to a neighborhood dance hall where she unknowingly meets the son of her employer, Ralph Taylor, who has just returned from college for his Christmas vacation. The two people have a love affair, sincere on Dora's side, but not so with Ralph, who is not aware of her employment in his father's office.

When the child comes, Dora is driven from her home and is the social derelict and outcast. While this is going on young Taylor marries Florence Lalor, a society girl. When Dora has no way to turn she sums up courage and goes back to the place of her old employment and there through the help of her forelady, who likes her, she gets back her old job.

Dora is in ignorance of her betrayer until one day when she happens to see on her employer's desk a picture of a man and woman and a baby. She learns the truth and seeks revenge. Florence, young Taylor's wife, calls up the office and asks for a stenographer. Dora is sent. She arrives in the home of her betrayer. Young Taylor comes in while his wife is upstairs, and there is a scene when he tries to buy Dora off. When Taylor goes out that evening with his wife, Dora stops her work, rushes upstairs, grabs the baby, and wants to kill it.

Then a better thought strikes her—a thought for a complete revenge. She rushes back to her hovel, grabs her own infant, hurries back to the home of young Taylor, puts her own child in the crib where she feels it rightfully belongs and is on the point of rushing away with the Taylor baby when she faints. She is found by the Taylors when they return home. There are explanations. Dora denounces the man who forsook her, and Florence drives the man who ruined Dora from her side and takes Dora in her arms for protection.

MILLIONAIRE BILLIE (April 22).—The cast: Billie, a tramp (Billie Reeves); Harold Vandewater (Francis Joyner); Mrs. Climber (Eleanor Blanchard); Tilly Climber (June Daye); Kitty Climber (Mary Rowland); Mrs. Brown (Margaret Moore); Joe Brown (Kempton Greene); Jennie Brown (Alice Mann). Written and produced by C. M. Greene.

Harold Vandewater, a sporting member of the Millionaire's Club, makes a bet with a fellow member that he can tramp his way from New York to Chicago entirely without funds, and without making any change whatsoever in his appearance, and the next day he is on his trip.

In the principal hotel of an intermediate town there are many people with high social aspirations, who are agog with excitement over the expected arrival of the millionaire tramp as promised in the newspaper accounts of his itinerancy. Among them is a family by the name of Climber, and another by the name of Brown, rivals in the social set.

Bille is a real "soldier" in the great hobo army, and after many rough deals at the hands of inhospitable farmers and their wives, he arrives on the outskirts of this particular town. Mrs. Climber and her two daughters, Tilly and Kitty, hearing of the approach of the millionaire tramp determine to entertain him, but capture Billie instead. To give the proper eclat to the event, cards are at once sent out for a dinner dance to Mr. Vandewater, the famous millionaire tramp. Mrs. Climber insists upon one of her daughters making a match with the illustrious though eccentric guest, and although each of them has a lover, one Joe Brown, the other Jim Smith, neither is averse to the securing of so wealthy a husband as is Harold Vandewater.

The entire social set of the town goes to the reception, with the two exceptions of Mrs. Brown and her daughter. Jennie. Joe Brown goes there much against his will, for no other reason than to prevent his sweetheart, Tilly Climber, from throwing herself away on this newcomer. The guests are much amused over the terms of the Vandewater bet, which specifies that he shall not, in whatever time it may consume to make his tramp, change his attire nor spend a cent of money. Much to the disgust of the two lovers, the Climbers are attracted to the newcomer, and the two lovers vow to get their revenge in some way or other. This comes, when after an altercation on the dance floor with Billie, Joe Brown is asked to leave the house, and on arriving at his own home, intercepts a procession headed by the real millionaire tramp, and summoning his mother and sister, he takes him to the Climber home. Their arrival throws great consternation in the Climber household, for the true millionaire tramp personally punishes the false one, and the Browns gain their end by presenting him to town society, while poor Billie ends his episode by sleeping behind the prison bars.

VITAGRAPH.

LIFE AND TRAINING IN THE U. S. N. (April 17.)—Taken in co-operation with the United States Navy, and with the permission of Secretary Daniels. Written and directed by Col J. E. Brady.

A series of intimate views which shows the life of our jolly tars during their work and play hours. In it are shown the drills of the cadets, both afloat and ashore. Artillery and boat drills, and views of the sailors climbing up into the crows-nest of the old frigate Constellation, are all revealed by the eye of the camera. The jackies are also shown partaking in their favorite sports and exercises, such as wrestling, boxing, high diving, etc. The cameraman just happened to be on hand when a sham battle was in progress, and obtained some excellent views of the marines landing from the boats and engaging the enemy forces in skirmishes. An infantry drill and football game on the Annapolis parade grounds are also shown. A fleet of battleships, destroyers and submarines passes in review before the camera.

HIS LUCKY DAY (April 21.)—The cast: Freddy (William Dangman); Felix (William Lytell, Jr.); Constable (George O'Donnell); Father (Harry Mayo); Daughter (Lucille Crane); Mother (Florence Natol). Written by James A. Stiles. Produced by Frank Currier.

Freddy, arriving in a new town, proceeds to "rub the Constable's fur the wrong way." Together with a drunken man he is arrested. At the town lockup Freddy manages to lock the constable in a cell, and escapes. On the street he sees a young girl in tears. She tells him that her father, a drunkard, had been locked up. Jumping at the conclusion that the man he had left in the cell was her father, Freddy returns and rescues him, too. After much difficulty he gets him to the girl's house, where he is not recognized.

Freddy leaves the stranger and walks down the street. A poster catches his eye, and on reading it he sees that $100 reward is offered for the return of an escaped lunatic. The description tallies with the man Freddy has just left, so he takes the poster and is returning to the house, when the constable, who has now freed himself, grabs him. Freddy pacifies his savage anger with the news of his discovery and they agree to split 50-50. They proceed to the house where the lunatic is captured. Freddy gets the constable to release the girl's father.

A CALIPH OF THE NEW BAGDAD (Broadway Star Feature—Three parts—April 22.)—The cast: Edward Gaston Van Dyke (Van Dyke Brooke); Alice Hope (Leah Baird); Mr. Rivers (Templar Saxe); I. Bawn (Edward Elkas); Tom McCarthy (E. A. Turner); Canby (Harry Fisher); Banut (Charles Edwards); Higgins (Joe Tucker). Written by William Addison Lathrop. Directed by Van Dyke Brooke.

Fond recollections of the days when he was a prominent actor, draw Van Dyke, now prosperous, to the boarding house which he knew so well in the olden days. Here he meets some of his old friends and they have a fine time, talking over the good old days. Here, also, he sees one Mr. Rivers, a society man, who is using the old game of telling a young girl, Alice Hope, that he will finance a musical comedy and put her in the leading role.

Van knew this trick in the old days, and he decides that Mr. Rivers shall be baffled. Rivers has Bawn, a theatrical agent, help him out in his scheming, by telling Alice that he will put on the production. Rivers goes out with Alice and Van follows with Canby, the owner of the boarding house, who, seeing his intentions, gets into an argument with him and threatens to eject him next day. The following day, Rivers, calling on Alice, reveals his character in the presence of Van and Canby, and leaves.

None of the people in the boarding house believe that Van is really rich. Alice and McCarthy, an actor, are married, and Van gives them a check for $1,000. McCarthy, however, thinking Van a poor man, tears up the check when he gets home. After the wedding Van decides to give the crowd a treat, so he tells them all to be down for a big blowout that night. When he sends a telegram saying that he cannot come, they all agree that he is a four-flusher, but then the chef enters with the big eats, and Van is "the real thing" and a "jolly good fellow." McCarthy, seeing that Van really has the dough, makes a dive for his room, where he goes down on hands and knees and picks up all the little pieces of the check, and pieces them together.

ESSANAY.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (Episode No. 11—"The Raid"—April 3).—This episode opens with Detective Sergeant Callahan on the witness stand and takes up his testimony of how Philip Langdon himself was for a long time suspected of killing Dave Pollock—a crime for which he was defending his sweetheart, Mary Page. The police officer detailed how he raided the gambling den of Big Jim and found Mary Page a prisoner. Arresting her together with the gamblers she was immune to questioning, as she was suffering from psychosis, although this was unknown to the police at the time. Langdon was seen in the vicinity and suspected and shadowed by Callahan. As it developed the young lawyer's visit to Pollock's office was in an attempt to discover some trace of the missing Mary. Finding her, Callahan overheard Langdon ask her to give herself up and that he would defend her to his utmost. It was then that Langdon was no longer suspected.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (Episode No. 12—"The Slums"—April 10.—The testimony of Bennett, friend of Pollock's, takes up this episode. He tells how, with Pollock, he dined with Mary Page and Amy Lerue, and how after dancing they made a slumming tour. Chinese opium joints followed visits to gambling dens and the city was thoroughly "done." Pollock, by this time strangely lively, invited the party to enter a shooting gallery in the heart of the district. They did, and all tried with both rifle and pistol. Mary was the last to shoot and surprised her companions by her skill with the revolver. Pollock, who had been drinking, lurched toward the girl he desired at this exhibition of another of her various capabilities. He made a remark, unheard by the rest, but sufficient to make Mary wheel suddenly and declare: "Another word like that from you and I will discharge this gun in your face!" That ended the party, and Bennett's only further knowledge of the case was overhearing Pollock instructing gunmen to "get" Philip Langdon, Mary's sweetheart.

THE ELDER BROTHER (Two parts—April 18).—The cast: Phillip, the elder brother (Francis X. Bushman); Irving (Bryant Washburn); the dancer (Gerda Holmes); Leider (John H. Cossar).

Phillip and Irving are left equal parts of their father's fortune. Irving promptly begins to spend his share and, falling in with Leider, the two soon win the reputation of being "the biggest sports in the city." Phillip has studied medicine and has begun practice. The life his brother is leading is only vaguely known to him. Irving becomes infatuated with a cabaret dancer, who has not been contaminated by her surroundings. However, in her childish way she liked Irving only for the pretty things he purchased for her. Leider came to like her too, and this jeopardized his friendship for the younger man.

Finally they quarrel over who will see her home and in the midst of it she steals out another door, tripping on the threshold and twisting her ankle. Phillip drives along and picks her up and takes her home. Later Irving tells his brother of his infatuation and persuades the physician to accompany him to the cafe. Phillip sees the girl he befriended and, viewing her among the surroundings, is disgusted. On the contrary, she grows madly in love with him. Leider attempts to injure Irving by giving him adulterated cigarettes. He is a wreck and brought to his brother's home for attention. Phillip discovers cocaine in the cigarettes and accuses the girl, who has come to the house. Leider bursts in at this moment and confesses his duplicity. Irving swears never to smoke again and Phillip, realizing the girl is not as bad as he had pictured, takes her in his arms and tells her that he, too, is in love with her.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 9 (Cartoon by Wallace Carlson—April 19).—An interview with Gen. Runteboat Debandski, one of the principal marshals of the Czar's army, features the latest Canimated Nooz, which takes up the first five hundred feet of this split reel release. Western scenic has the other half. The general is some stepper, the correspondents find, and can keep several leaps ahead of the biggest shells while answering his interviewers' questions. The new spring fashions, designed by Lucy Hill, form part of the latest news features. Among these is the "full" skirt with abbreviated length and whatchamacallit trimming, apparently the last word in class. The Zeppelin gown and a skirt which is very "full" are also shown. Hunky Dory, a well-known ale hound, is introduced to Canimated Nooz followers. His morning exercise is startlingly original, though imitation is not suggested.

HER NAKED SOUL (Three Parts—April 22).—The cast: Marvin Dexter (Darwin Karr); Shirley Davis (Nell Craig); Rupert Chadwick (Hugh Thompson); Rupert Chadwick, Jr. (Edmund F. Cobb).

Demure little Shirley Davis, stenographer, finally permits her employer, Chadwick, to take her out to dinner. The trips become more frequent thereafter, and wine is no longer strange to the erstwhile typist. Chadwick tires of her and discharges her. Embittered by being so lightly and harshly cast aside, she undertakes the primrose path absolutely.

A year or two finds her one of the leaders of the midnight crowds. One evening she entertains in her apartment. Chadwick and a few companions, intoxicated, come in unbidden. His words so infuriate her that she announces she is through with the sordid life and orders the entire party from her home. Next day she seeks work as a stenographer. Marvin Dexter, a young broker, skids his machine as he rounds a corner and the girl is knocked down. She is uninjured, however, and when Dexter asks what he can do for her, all she asks is a position. He hires her.

Some few years later Dexter and Shirley, now happily married are living in a western city. He suddenly meets Chadwick, also a resident of the same city and an old college chum. He invites him to his home. Chadwick attempts to get the old hold on the wife of his friend by threats of revealing her past. Dexter senses it and she tells him all. After his rage at her he sets out with a pistol, ostensibly to kill Chadwick. Shirley hastens to warn the intended victim, not for his sake, but to save the man she loves from being a murderer.

On Chadwick's door steps she discovers his dead body. Dexter arrives a moment later and the police shortly after. "I killed him," announces Dexter to protect his wife. He is alarmed when she tells him she did not kill him. But for Garvey, the detective, Dexter's confession would have convicted him. But the detective notes the disappearance of Chadwick, Jr., the dead man's dissolute son. He is captured and confesses that because his father would not pay his increasing debts he shot him. With Chadwick out of the way, Dexter and Shirley start life anew.

NESTOR.

HIS NEIGHBOR'S WIFE (April 17.).—The cast: The Bachelor (Neal Burns); Mr. Newlywed (Ray Gallagher); Mrs. Newlywed (Billie Rhodes); The Boss (Harry Rattenberry). Written by Neal Burns. Produced by Horace Davey.

Neal lives a bachelor's life in an apartment house. Across the hall live the Newlyweds, Ray and Billie, whose acquaintance Neal has made. One morning as Neal and Ray are talking, the former tells Newlywed that he is going to ask for a raise in salary, but he doesn't know just how to work the boss to get it. Ray suggests that he pretend to be married, as that is always a good lead to ask for a raise. Neal tries it on the boss and is successful.

The boss asks Neal about his home life, and states that he was so glad to hear of Neal getting married that he intends to take dinner with them that night. This puts Neal in a fix, and he is in a quandry as to what to do. He returns home discouraged, and meets Mrs. Newlywed in the hall. She notices his downcast appearance and asks what troubles him. He tells her of the raise he is receiving and how the boss is coming to celebrate, expecting to meet his wife. Mrs. Newlywed can suggest no way out of the difficulty, when Neal has a bright idea, and suggests that Mrs. Newlywed come over and pretend to be his wife. She tells him that if it was not for her husband coming home that night she would do so, and Neal returns to his room expecting to get fired by the boss.

Ray meets a bunch of friends who insist that he have dinner with them downtown. He 'phones his wife, telling her that he won't be home until late, and not to wait for him. Billie has prepared a sumptuous dinner for her lord, and decides that as he won't be home she will be doing an act of charity to help poor Neal out, so she calls him, and suggests that he bring his boss to her apartment and pretend that they are man and wife. This suits Neal fine, and the boss arrives to find the two anxiously awaiting him.

Ray's friends meanwhile have had to leave and he decides to return home earlier than he expected. He comes in in the midst of the dinner and catches Neal kissing his wife. He cannot understand the "going on" in his apartment, and begins to make trouble. Neal tries to hush the matter up by pretending that Ray is "slightly demented" and forcibly shoving him across the hall and locking him in his own apartment. Ray resents this treatment, and finding a revolver determines to wreak vengeance. He crawls through the window and goes into his own apartment. There is a wild scramble to escape, and the police, hearing the disturbance, call out the reserves. The boss is taken to the lock-up. Ray makes a complaint against Neal and the boss and Neal are brought in to answer. The boss recognizes the sergeant and is allowed to go. Poor Neal pleads with him to give him a recommendation, but the boss absolutely refuses to recognize him and he is locked up without bail. Ray returns home and his wife explains the reason for the party. She begs him to dismiss the charge against Neal, but Ray remains adamant.

EDDIE'S NIGHT OUT (April 21.).—The cast: Eddie Newlywed (Eddie Lyons); His Partners (Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Neal Burns); Mrs. Newlywed (Betty Compson); Her Mother (Stella Adams). Written and produced by A. E. Christie.

It is quite strange that Eddie, being a newlywed, should be down-hearted, and his two partners, who are his pals, comment quite frankly on his discouraged look. Eddie has quite a job of shopping every day after he leaves the office and generally arrives home smothered with bundles. His partners insist that he tell them what is worrying him, as they might be able to help him out. Thinking he is having trouble at home they ask if this is so, and Eddie, in a resigned voice, repeats "Trouble at home? No, only a mother-in-law, and she is a terror." The boys suggest that he meet them that night at the club and forget his troubles.

Eddie's reception at home that night inclines him to take the boys' invitation up. Mother-in-law is lord of all she surveys, even Mrs. Newlywed pulls under the dominion of her mother and as a consequence is unhappy. "The straw that breaks the camel's back" is when Eddie is ordered to bathe the parrot. He rebels, and escaping from the house, goes to the club. He tells his woes to the boys and they try to drown them in gurgling waters. As night wears on, Eddie gets consolation from the drinks he has taken and vows to return home and assert his rights as head of the house. The boys go home with him but leave him at the gate. Filled with bravery, Eddie tries in vain to get in. His wife tries to sneak him in, but the eye of his mother-in-law foils his plans. Poor Eddie is forced to spend the night in the park and next morning wakes full of fight.

Determined to get in the house by hook or crook, he calls his two pals to his aid and by smuggling him in a box they get him inside. Mother-in-law hears the noise in the box and tries to hold him down until the police can be summoned, but Eddie "comes home" and tells "who's who." Frightened at the unexpected authority displayed by her son-in-law, mother-in-law forgets her high and mighty ways and there is a change for the better.

THE GAMBLER (April 20.).—The cast: Vance Thomas (Fred Church); Roberta Daly (Myrtle Gonzalez); Walter Boynton (Val Paul); Thomas, Sr. (Alfred Allen). Written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

The desire to gamble seems hereditary with Vance Thomas. At twenty-five he was a confirmed gambler and the exact antithesis of his best friend, Walter Boynton, who was a steady, reliable young man. Both men were rivals for the hand of Roberta Daly.

Vance had been found short in several gambling deals and he went to his friend Walter for a loan. Walter gladly loaned him the money, but remonstrated with him and tried to win him away from that sort of life. The two urged the girl to make a definite decision and luck favored the gambler. While she believes Walter would make an ideal husband, she fears that they would soon tire of each other because of his regular habits.

Few gamblers reform by marrying, however, and Vance graduated from petty gambling to a higher class of finance. His father had remonstrated with him several times for drawing against the former's account and threatened the boy with legal punishment the next time the occasion should arise. Vance had what he considered a "sure tip" one day, and gambles on fluctuating stock. The result is that he draws on his father. The stock takes a downward trend and he goes broke. That night he disappears. Near the river bank they find a note, and the clothes he had worn. This was a blind, however, for after changing his clothes he slipped away and went west.

The years rolled by. Vance's supposed death was almost forgotten. Roberta had begun to depend on Walter more and more, when the years slipped by, cheating him of happiness. This is forcibly brought to her notice one day when she sees that Walter is beginning to grow gray. She finally consents to his pleadings and plans a hasty wedding. Vance Thomas had done better in his change of location and has quite a bit of money. He determines to run back to his home town, and look about. He arrives on the night of the wedding, and as he wanders through the garden grounds he sees Walter and Roberta about to be married. He hesitates whether to go forward and disclose his identity and finally decides to make it a gamble.

He throws dice to see whether he should go and disclose himself or return from the scene. Fate is against him and he abides by the decision. This time the river is not cheated of its prey and all that is left of the gambler is a few ripples which gradually fade away.

OH! WHAT A WHOPPER (Two parts—April 20.). The cast: Billy Bibbs (Harry Coleman); Clara Bibbs, his wife (Charlotte Lillard). Written and produced by Sidney Goldin.

Billy Bibbs, a hen-pecked husband, has promised to take his wife on Saturday afternoon to Manhattan Beach. On Saturday morning he sees a "double-header" advertised and decides to attend the game at the Polo Grounds. Accordingly he sends his wife a telegram calling off the seaside engagement on account of being unexpectedly detained. Wifey is something of a baseball fan herself and when she receives Billy's telegram she calls up her brother and they also go to see the game.

Billy secures a seat on the grandstand, advertised and decides to attend the game quite unaware that his wife and her brother are seated four rows back of him. As the game proceeds he grows more and more excited and makes himself decidedly objectionable. Finally he makes himself such a nuisance through his interference during a dispute between the umpire and the players that he is ignominiously ejected from the Polo Grounds.

His wife, thoroughly mortified, leaves immediately afterwards and manages to get home before him. On his arrival home Billy gives her a thrilling account of an unexpected adventure. According to this adventure Billy is on his way home to keep his seaside engagement when a piece of soap is thrown from the window of a house he is passing. Attached to the soap he finds a note stating that the writer is a young woman who has been kidnapped by a "black hand" gang, and that they are holding her captive until they can arrange for her ransom.

We next see Billy engaged in a heroic rescue of the young woman, who invites him to her home, where her father offers him a reward of $10,000, which he politely refuses, declaring that he has merely done his duty. Billy's wife listens patiently until the end of his remarkable story and then denounces him a a cast-iron liar. At first Billy protests that he is telling the absolute truth, but collapses when wifey reveals to him how she had seen his disgraceful behavior at the baseball game. The domestic entente cordiale is finally restored by Billy's promise never to go to the Polo Grounds without taking his wife along with him.

THE PASSING OF HELL'S CROWN (Two parts—April 22.).—The cast: "Chuck" Wells (Bill Nye); Sheriff Bill Graney (Neal Hart); His Daughter Rose (Olive Fuller Golden); "Blaze" (Harry Carey); Cowboy (Hoot Gibson); His Girl (Peggy Coudray). Written by W. B. Pearson. Produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Hell's Crown, a town where law and order are as scarce as preachers, is ruled by "Chuck" Wells, a former gun man. He has a dupe in Blaze, the terror of the town, and holds him by keeping him well supplied with money. A sheriff is appointed at Carson City on account of the horse rustlers.

On the sheriff's arrival at Hell's Crown he has a brush with Blaze and shows he isn't a man to be fooled with. Chuck seeing his power slipping from him, gets Blaze to run him off. Blaze starts out with that intent, but meets Rose, the sheriff's daughter. Old memories are recalled while Blaze is with her.

The next day Chuck takes four men and corners the sheriff on the street. Blaze jumps to the sheriff's side as he falls wounded, and cleans up the town. He wings Chuck and Chuck's men quit. After the doctor has pronounced the sheriff out of danger, Rose is attracted to Blaze, and the story closes with the sheriff on the road to recovery, and Rose and Blaze the best of friends.

THE BEST MAN'S BRIDE (April 18—Two Parts).—The cast: Winthrop Gray (Herbert Rawlinson); Edith Henry (Francelia Billington); Upton Phillips (Charles Gunn); Mrs. Henry (Helen Wright). Produced by William Worthington.

Winthrop Gray, a wealthy globe-trotter, was much disturbed by the receipt of a telegram from his Aunt Adelia requesting him to stop in San Francisco and act as representative of the family and best man to his cousin, Upton Phillips. Winthrop is the only available relative and agrees to carry out his part with bad grace. He receives a cool reception at his cousin's home, for Upton is not at home and has failed to leave any word regarding the expected relative. Before leaving, however, Gray inquires of the butler the fiancee's address, and the butler, surprised, tells him Miss Henry's address before thinking.

Gray reaches the house and makes himself known. The relations between Gray and his cousin have not been of the best. Upton, while a lad, had been egotistical and self-seeking, and the trait has followed him to manhood. Knowing his cousin as he does, Gray could imagine the girl to whom he was engaged being some shallow-headed, giddy, butterfly sort of girl, caring only for the present. His surprise was very great upon meeting Miss Henry, and her cordial reception of the only representative of the family present made friends between them at once. They had talked but a short while until Gray noticed an underlying sadness in the girl's voice whenever she spoke of the marriage. She unconsciously let drop several hints that the marriage was a loveless one, being for practical purposes only.

Gray leaves the girl that night with a desire to help her but does not know how to do so. Not knowing anyone especially and not caring for the usual round of theaters, he decides on a trip through the Barbary Coast. Not knowing the place to which he sets out, however, Gray wears his evening clothes and several valuable articles of jewelry. Miss Henry and Upton are dining at one of the large cafes after the theater. She noted near them several lively parties. Her particular notice was called to a bunch of city sports. Upton's attention is attracted by a lively bunch nearby and he recognizes one of the girls as an old acquaintance of his. Edith has reproached Upton for his neglect of his cousin and her remonstrances lead to a small quarrel. Thinking to punish her, Upton leaves her for the table of his friends.

Some time later she sees Gray wandering about dazed. His clothing shows signs of hard usage. The bunch of men nearby notice him and suggest that he be invited to join them to see the town. The girl realizes it is for no good to him that they wish him to join them, and with the assistance of one of the waiters she succeeds in getting him to a taxicab. The men follow them out and pursue the fleeing taxicab. Their driver eludes them and the girl has Gray taken to the home of her godmother, where the expected wedding is to take place.

Gray still acts dazed, and the girl, fearing he is in a serious condition, tries vainly to revive him to a knowledge of the present. Fearing to leave him alone, she sits up the greater part of the night and at daybreak she lies down on a couch to rest and falls asleep. She awakes several hours later in terror, fearing all sorts of accidents may have befallen her patient. She is reassured when her knock is answered by the cheery voice of Gray, who demands to know where he is. She explains how she brought him from the hotel and tells him of his strange condition. He is very much embarrassed, as he believes the girl thinks he was merely drunk. He then tells her of having been doped and robbed of all his valuables.

He realizes the position the girl is in on his account, and suggests that the only way out of the matter is to marry her. She does not agree. The real idea of the marriage of the girl and Upton was to relieve the girl's family to some extent as well as to help out the younger children, and the girl, though it means sacrificing herself, refuses to disappoint her family. Gray overrules her objections, however, and finally confesses that it has been a case of love at first sight with him, and impetuously tells the girl of his love. With a glad cry she asks him why he had not said so in the beginning.

Gray is energetic, and soon has a license and a preacher, and also makes arrangements to sail on the steamer that evening. As the ceremony cannot be performed without witnesses, the two are in a quandary. This is easily remedied, however, for Upton, the girl's mother and the balance of the family, worrying about the girl's absence, come in a bunch to the house and are welcomed by Gray, who blandly suggests that Upton act as his "best man." While the surprise is a shock to everyone, Upton is glad of the opportunity to withdraw from his engagement. Gray and the girl hasten to catch their boat, followed by the good wishes of every one.

LOVE LAUGHS AT DYSPEPSIA (April 18).—The cast: Achilles Payne (Victor Potel); Sallie Sloppus (Jane Bernoudy); Cupid (Zoe Beck). Written by Hal Clotworthy. Produced by Roy Clements.

Sallie Sloppus, desperately in love with Achilles Payne, finds that the path to the wedding altar is not a speedway, owing to a dyspepsia treatment which Achilles is taking, which forbids him from surrendering to his emotions.

Sallie consults the famous work of Cecilia D'Amour, "The Maiden's Guide to the Wedding Altar," but everything that Cecilia advises Sallie to try on Achilles, Dr. Bilkem's famous Dyspepsia Treatment, which Achilles is taking, forbids Achilles from engaging in.

Just as Sallie, in despair, is about to surrender her hope of winning Achilles, Cupid comes to her assistance, and directing her "love-making," harpoons Achilles for her and incidentally cures his dyspepsia.

THE HAUNTED BELL (Two Parts—April 21—The cast: John Lane, a novelist (King Baggot); Mrs. Lane, his wife (Edna Hunter); Prof Nassaib Haig (Joseph Granby); His Servant (Sam Crane); The Butler (Frank Smith); The Curio Dealer (Joseph Smiley). Produced by Henry Otto.

The picture opens with a close-up of a Hindu priest kneeling before a large bell. This fades into a scene of Hindu girls engaged in a lively Oriental dance. Again the scene fades out and we see John Lane, the novelist, seated at a desk in his den, gazing with apparent amazement at a large bell that is hanging near an open window. His wife enters and he asks her to close the window, telling her that the bell rang of its own accord.

The scene then shifts to the apartment of Prof. Nassaib Haig, who is praying with a priest at a shrine of Buddha. The professor dines the following day with John Lane, who tells him that his descriptions of India will be a great help to him in writing his novel. On entering the noveilst's den after dinner the professor sees the bell and bows to it, greatly to the surprise of Mr. and Mrs. Lane. After the professor has left Mrs. Lane looks in a dazed manner at the bell and suddenly screams and falls in a faint to the floor.

Lane and the butler rush to her assistance. On recovering from her faint she insists that the bell is haunted, as she heard it strike nine times. This seems to rouse the curiosity of the butler, who examines the bell. Later we see the professor confiding to the priest that he has discovered the long lost sacred bell of Tajmahal Temple, and they plan to get possession of it. Accordingly, the professor goes to a curio dealer and gives him a commission to secure the bell, warning him that Mr. Lane must never know of whom it is being purchased.

The curio dealer calls on Lane and tells him that, knowing him to be a fancier of antiques, he thought he must have some he would care to dispose of. Mrs. Lane suggests that her husband dispose of the haunted bell, but he tells the curio dealer that he wouldn't sell it for $1,000, having made up his mind to solve its mystery, and the butler is a silent witness to their conversation. On reporting Lane's refusal to part with the bell for $1,000, the professor authorizes the curio dealer to offer him $5,000 for it, and a Hindu servant overhears this from behind the portieres.

Back in the Lane parlor Mrs. Lane notes that the clock registers noon, and, on entering the novelist's den, both she and her husband are astounded to hear the bell ring twelve times.

Presently the curio dealer enters and makes the offer of $5,000 for the bell. That evening, while trying to solve the mystery of its spontaneous ringing, Lane sees that it is ten minutes to nine by the steeple clock in the distance and regulates his clock accordingly.

Ten minutes later he hears the clock strike nine and a light dawns upon him, as the bell rings at the same time. Mrs. Lane enters the den and he tells her that it is a case of sound vibration, explaining that the steeple clock and the bell are in tune when the window is open, but when the window is closed the sound vibration is cut off. Next morning Lane discovers in his den the body of the curio dealer. Meanwhile the butler is leaning against the door with pajamas in his hands. Lane goes to the door, opens it and the butler falls into the room in a nervous fright. Lane orders him to report the murder to the police, and the butler hides the pajamas behind the door. Mr. and Mrs. Lane find the pajamas, the coat of which is spotted with blood.

When the butler returns from telephoning the police Lane confronts him with the blood-stained pajamas and accuses him of the murder, but the butler declares he can explain the blood stains. He tells them that, after going to bed, he heard a gun discharged. He jumped up, ran into the hallway and found a man stretched out on the floor. In placing his hand over the man's heart to ascertain if life was extinct his hand became stained with blood, which he tried to wipe off on his sleeve.

Lane doubts his story and presently admits a detective, several policemen and the Hindu servant of the professor. Requested to give an explanation of the Hindu's presence, the detective says: "This man was arrested in this neighborhood last night. We brought him along, thinking he might be concerned in the case." The detective then asks to see the dead body, and proceeds to put the Hindu through the third degree. The Hindu acknowledges the crime, while Lane turns to his wife and says: "Now, I will get rid of the haunted bell."

HIS WORLD OF DARKNESS (Three Parts—April 23).—The cast: Philip Kent (Ben Wilson); Anita Kent, his wife (Clata Eyers); Beauty Kent (Lois Alexander); Henry Ives (Charles Ogle); Dr. Stone (Jack Newton). Jack Wilbur (Bert Busby). Written by Stuart Paton and Norbert Lusk. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Philip Kent while at the law office of his friend, Henry Ives, receives news that his wife has given birth to a girl. Suddenly Kent is stricken blind. Specialists are consulted, but they are unable to restore his sight. Taking advantage of her husband's blindness, Mrs. Kent, a frivolous, pleasure-loving woman, engages in an open flirtation with Ives.

Some years later Ives is in the library when a letter arrives from a noted eye specialist stating that, after a thorough examination he is convinced Philip will regain his sight. Ives suppresses his letter and makes Philip believe that the specialist has reported that he is hopelessly blind. Subsequently Philip's former college chum pays him a visit and induces him to have his eyes treated by a prominent specialist in another city, leaving Mrs. Kent under the impression that he is simply taking Philip on a trip for his health. After Philip has departed Ives obtains Mrs. Kent's consent to elope with him.

The operation proves a success and Philip is no longer blind. Instead of telegraphing the good news to his wife he decides to surprise her. Accordingly he returns home and, simulating blindness he "feels" his way with a cane up to the door and is admitted by the maid. Mrs. Kent, accompanied by Ives, comes home with bundles which she has purchased preparatory to her elopement. As she comes into the room Philip is about to jump up to greet her when he sees her kissed by Ives.

Philip, still feigning blindness, calls his wife by name and asks her if she is alone. Ives motions to Mrs. Kent to keep silent about his presence, and she replies to Philip: "Why certainly! When did you get home?" Philip feels for his wife's face and his fingers stiffen, as he is tempted to choke her for her deceit, but he controls himself and pats her with seeming affection. A few hours later a boy arrives with a message from Ives requesting Mrs. Kent to be at his apartment at 8 o'clock that evening. Philip rises from his chair, "feels" his way with his cane to where his wife is sitting and reads the message over her shoulder. After packing her grips Mrs. Kent stops at the library to tell Philip that she is going over to a neighbor's house. As soon as she is gone Philip rushes out of the house and is next seen coming through the window portieres of Ives' apartment.

He seats himself and waits for Ives, who presently unlocks the door and comes in, expecting to greet Mrs. Kent, when Philip looms up before him. Believing Philip still blind, Ives starts to leave, when Philip points to the adjoining room and says: "She's in there dead!" Philip then takes out his watch and calmly announces: "It is now five minutes of 8; at 8 o'clock you will also be dead!" Then, without taking his eyes from Ives, he draws a pistol from his pocket and sits down to wait.

Ives pleads with Philip. Philip remains silent. Ives clutches at his heart and finally falls dead. Philip then goes to the portieres and leaves the apartment the same way he entered it. Shortly afterwards Mrs. Kent comes in to keep her appointment with Ives, and, seeing her lover lying dead across the table, she staggers into the street. When Philip walks up and faces her on her arrival home she stammers: "You can see!" Philip stares at her and fairly hisses: "Yes, I have seen everything that has gone on today."

She pleads for mercy, but he is through with her, and as his fingers close on her throat he shouts: "You are too vile to live." "Beauty," their daughter, is awakened by his voice and calls "Daddy!" Philip hears her story in the library. He loosens his hold on his wife's throat and exclaims, pointing to the door: "Go, and never let me see your face again!" Then follows a symbolic scene in which the unfaithful wife is seen on the downward path departing over a hill, and, as the picture fades out, we see Philip seated in his library, lost in memories of the past.

A MEETING FOR A CHEATING (April 19).—The cast: The Husband (Billie Ritchie); The Real Burglar (Dan Russell).

Billie was rather proud of his wife's jewels and warned her repeatedly about leaving them lie so carelessly around, but without impressing her. Bill decides to have a friend play the part of a burglar so he writes a note to him, but is careless enough to let his wife get hold of the note.

Unfortunately, that night a real burglar breaks into the house. Bill's friend was late, so Bill himself decides to play the part of burglar. Soon the three are working around the house, dodging each other. The police arrive, but do not catch the real culprit until after some wildly exciting chases over the roof, down chimneys, etc. Bill and his friend have an exciting time proving their identity. But all ends well for them and the real burglar is carted off to a cell.

and the monkey decides to take a ride. He hides in the bus, and is carried to the home of John Stevens, a wealthy banker. Bob Stevens, the son, has just had an unpleasant scene with his father, who has refused him more money for card debts.

While the delivery boy is flirting with the house maid, the monkey enters the library through an open window, and, finding the safe open, takes a pack of bank notes and buries them under the hedge. A little later a policeman finds the monkey wandering about and returns him to his owner. Mr. Stevens acuses his son of stealing the money and orders him from the house.

Helen Davis, ward of Mr. Stevens, and sweetheart of Bob, later buys the monkey for a pet. The monkey picks up Mrs. Stevens' handkerchief, one afternoon while they are seated on the veranda, and takes it to the same place where he buried the money. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens follow him and discover Helen and Bob in the garden. Bob's father again orders him away, but Helen sees the monkey dig up the money and things are all satisfactorily explained.

THE STOLEN MELODY (April 15.)—The cast: Dolly Grey (Doris Pawn); Homer Pasmore (Sydney Ayres); Tobias Grey (Mr. Wadsworth); Fraulyne Walker (Val Paul); Pert Pasmore (Nancy Sweet). Scenario by M. R. MacKinstrey. Produced by Sydney Ayres.

Homer Pasmore, a composer, living in a little village with his sister Pert, is in desperate search of an idea for an opera. Dolly Grey, his sweetheart, stealing away from home, brings him a large bouquet of Cherokee roses and, standing in his doorway in her quaint little dress, she furnishes him with an inspiration and he begins composing an opera which he calls "The Flower Girl."

Mr. Grey, Dolly's father, the village banker, holds a mortgage on Pasmore's little home and opposes the match between Pasmore and his daughter. Franklyn Walker, a successful man and the favored suitor for Dolly, comes down from the city and is immediately taken into the family circle. Dolly, however, cannot be found until her visit to the Pasmore home is discovered.

Walker calls in person to take Dolly home, but she refuses to accompany him. When he attempts to force her to return with him, Pasmore angrily throws him out of the house. Old Grey then denounces Pasmore and closes the mortgage in retaliation. Pasmore then takes up his residence in a New York attic where he plans to complete his opera and market it. By coincidence he is in the same house in which Walker lives. Walker hears Pasmore playing his music and jotting it down, steals the piece before Pasmore feels that his score is perfected. In Walker's hands the opera meets with ready sale.

In the meantime Walker has intercepted Pasmore's letters to Dolly and she is left in a forlorn state of mind. To escape marrying Walker she leaves her father's house and later answers an advertisement for singers in a new opera. To her amazement she finds that the orchestra is playing Pasmore's music.

Meanwhile Pasmore, walking down the street, is amazed to hear the strains of his opera coming from the building. He investigates and finds Dolly discussing the stolen music with the producer. Walker is sent for and put under arrest. Pasmore derives his just reward for his music.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

GRAFT (Episode No. 18, "The Hidden City of Crime"—Two Parts—April 10).The cast: Major Harding (Richard Stanton); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak); Stanford Stone (Glen White).

Dorothy Maxwell is seated in a restaurant with a party of friends. They are anxious to go "slumming," and are particularly desirous of seeing Chinatown, so the party arrange to make a trip there after the theater. As they leave the place a man at the next table, who has had a newspaper before his face while they were present, lowers it and the features of Stanford Stone are revealed. He has heard all and hastens to Chinatown and lays his plans.

At nine o'clock Harding, having overheard a mysterious telephone conversation, is strolling about the deserted cemetery when a slight noise near the far end attracts his attention. Several men are about an open grave removing a great quantity of small tin cans. Harding watches the work for some time, but unable to determine what the men are up to, boldly walks among them and inquires. The answer comes from behind—a well-directed blow from a sling-shot, and Harding falls, unconscious, into the open grave. The men quickly spade the earth over him, burying him alive; then, loading themselves with the cans, they make their way to an auto waiting some distance from the spot.

Harding, once his senses have returned, has little difficulty in pushing his body clear of the loose earth, the grave being a shallow one. One of the gang returns for the last of the little cans. As he stoops over to pick them up, Harding, with all his remaining strength, hits him over the head with a spade. The fellow is knocked out. Harding takes the man's coat and hat and puts them on, discarding his own clothes. The leader of the party curses Harding for his slowness, but does not discover that Harding is not "Mike," a new member whom the gang have picked up that day.

Harding climbs into the auto and it speeds toward the city. Their journey ends in a dark and deserted alley. The cans are removed and carried down a flight of stairs into a bare room, where a couple of Chinese guards are stationed; then down another flight into a room furnished in Oriental splendor. Here the cans are deposited. In this room is a richly dressed old Chinaman, Won Chin Foo, and his daughter,

SHERMAN HOTEL CHICAGO, ILL.

Fan Lo; also Hector Graham, a respectable club man and society favorite to the world, but in reality the keeper of gambling dives, the head of the opium traffic and a white slave dealer.

As his reward Graham takes Fan Lo forcibly and holding her helpless, kisses her with brutal desire. Harding has remained in the background up to this moment. Now he springs forward, and, to the surprise of all, knocks Graham down and frees the girl. The gang [illegible] who is forced backward to the opposite wall. When he reaches it, the old Chinaman quickly presses a small button. A section of the floor beneath Harding drops downward and he slides into the cellar beneath. All of the angry mob rush for the stairs, bent on wreaking swift vengeance on the traitor. Harding just has time enough to look about his prison when the door is opened and Fan tells him to follow her quickly. Fan leads the way up a short flight of steps which is covered by a trap door. Opening this they enter a room above.

Dorothy and her party have looked into Chinese restaurants, the tea houses and the like, when a Chink, hired for the purpose by Stone, offers to guide them through the underground world. They are led into the opium joint. Harding, drawing far back in his bunk, for fear some of the party should betray him, does not see Dorothy. He has determined to save the girl whom Stone is plotting against. The guide throws open a door and tells the party to run, as all the Chinks have jumped to their feet and seem to threaten them. Dorothy is the last to leave. A Chink "gives her the needle" and she falls back into his arms unconscious. She is carried to the back room and placed on the floor. The balance of the party fly through the underground saloon, and reach the street before they discover the absence of Dorothy.

Harding has recognized Dorothy as she is carried to the back room. He tells Fan that he must rescue the girl. His interest in Dorothy arouses Fan's insane jealousy. Harding pleads with her, as he risked his life to save her, to try to save the helpless girl. Fan is finally won over and suggests a plan. While Harding turns his back the two women exchange clothing, then Fan shows him the way to the upper world. Harding is loath to leave her, but there is no other way, so leaving Fan weeping softly, he and Dorothy slip out of the room and make for the door. They reach the door when suddenly it is flung open and Stone steps in.

Harding attempts to slip past, but Stone insists on seeing the Chink girl, and when Harding attempts to push him aside pulls the latter's cap off. Upon recognizing him Stone jumps aside and tells the Chinks to get him. Harding snatches an oil lamp from the wall and hurls it in their midst. The lamp explodes and catches fire. Harding and Dorothy rush through the door. Stone and the others are about to follow when their way is blocked by Fan, armed with a long sword, who keeps them back for a time. The cooks above have heard the noise and all pull weapons for defense. Into this belligerent throng Harding dashes with Dorothy. With quick wit he shouts to the inmates "Fly for your lives, the place is on fire!" Behind them Stone, Fan and the Chinks are fleeing from the smoke that is rapidly filling the place. Harding and Dorothy, more dead than alive reach a place of safety.

The next day Hector Graham is surprised at receiving a request from the mayor for an interview. He calls and when the mayor asks him about certain opium deals of which he is accused, Graham flies into a rage and threatens to make it hot for the mayor to dare to suggest that he was ever mixed up in anything crooked. The mayor then invites Fan to step forward from her concealment. Next he produces Foo in irons and last he has Graham look into his face that he may recognize the man who struck him the night before. Graham collapses. Harding has won another victory.

AMERICAN.

PENDULUM OF CHANCE (Two parts—April 13).—The cast: Carl Churchill (Edward Coxen); Samuel Pelton (Charles Newton); Alice, Churchill's wife (Lizette Thorne); Ned Wallace (George Fields).

The head of his own business, a solid, substantial concern, Carl Churchill feels that he is successful. He is pleased with the slow, steady development and follows the customs inaugurated by his father, the founder of the company. Alice Churchill, his wife, is, however, of a different stamp. She tries to awaken Carl's ambition, at least to the point where he will change his business policies.

At this time Ned Wallace, formerly in love with Alice, and Carl's rival, speculated unsuccessfully and establishes a brokerage business in competition with Carl. He also meets Alice again and eventually Carl becomes aware of Alice's admiration for Wallace, and the discovery stings him to determination. He takes efficiency as his motto and commences to reconstruct his business accordingly. Under the new plan the first to go is Samuel Pelton, his aged bookkeeper, confidential man and the advisor of his father before him. The old man, cast adrift at his time in life, is unable to obtain employment and is soon in actual need. Meanwhile, as Carl becomes absorbed in his work, Alice turns to Wallace.

At a time when Carl's every effort is concentrated upon the big deal by which he hopes to clear a fortune, Pelton sees Wallace in company with Alice. His conclusion is that Carl's indifference has spoiled her life as well as his. It rouses his hatred of Carl to fury. He determines to see Wallace and through him endeavor to wreck his vengeance upon Carl. He calls upon Wallace at the exact moment when, having been refused by Alice, he has decided to break Carl to get her. Wallace accepts Pelton's cooperation and he is sent back to Carl to beg back his position and act as Wallace's spy. This succeeds as Carl is at the time in need of certain statistics which Pelton possesses.

Through Pelton's aid, Wallace ruins Carl, and Pelton, knowing Carl's plans, wins heavily in the market and becomes the firm's chief creditor. He discharges Carl immediately as inefficient, the same cause for which Carl had, a few months previously, discharged him. Returning home late that night, Carl struggles to determine the course to take. Silently he slips into his room and packs, but Alice is awake and watching. Her eyes opened to Wallace's methods, she is only too glad to receive Carl's forgiveness and go with him to start in anew.

THE WAYFARERS (Three Parts—April 16). The cast: Frank Andrews (Alfred Vosburgh); George Renfrew (George Periolat), Grace Deering (Vivian Rich); Jim Martin (George Webb).

Frank Andrews has been defrauded of his savings by George Renfrew, an investment shark. When Andrews reads of his loss in the paper, he goes to Renfrew's office with the intention of forcing him to make good. His protests are received by Renfrew with contempt and he is ejected from the office by a clerk. The noon hour comes slowly and the office force go to lunch with the exception of Jim Martin, whom Renfrew sends on an errand. Andrews, still smarting under the wrong, decides to return again to threaten Renfrew with exposure unless he makes restitution. When he enters the office, he finds Renfrew has been killed with a stiletto paper knife. Martin, returning from his errand, finds Andrews holding the blood-stained knife and accuses him of the murder. Andrews realizes that the evidence is against him, hurls Martin aside, and, rushing out of the office, goes to his room, where he hastily gathers a few belongings together and starts away.

The police have been put on his track, and he hears them questioning the landlady in the hallway below in time to turn back. He bursts into the first door he comes to, where he finds a girl just in the act of taking a bottle of poison. His surprise overcomes his fear and while he is taking the bottle away from the girl, the officers pass by, enter, and search his room and depart. Grace tells him she was desperate and was taking the only way out. She begins to tell him her story, but he stops her, saying that they are both desperate and can keep their secrets. Andrews persuades Grace to steal away with him, and in a distant place under another name they begin a life of happiness together.

All goes well until destiny takes Martin to the same place on his vacation. He comes in contact with Grace while Andrews is away on a surveying trip, and desires her. When Andrews returns, Martin recognizes him, and later returns during Andrews' absence to threaten Grace with Andrew's exposure unless she consents to go with him. She has agreed to save her husband, when Andrews enters, declares he is not guilty, and explains the circumstances.

Grace realizes that she can still have Andrews and declares she can prove his innocence, and confesses that she killed Renfrew. He had betrayed and deserted her sister, who committed suicide. When she went to call him to account, he jeered at her. In a frenzy she attacked him with the paper knife and in their struggle he fell on it and was killed.

Martin declares that it makes no difference to him who did it, that he is going to have the reward offered for the capture of the murderer, and goes for the authorities. Andrews and Grace decide again to escape, but as they start away, Martin is brought in dead, from a collision with an auto. Their secret dies with him, and their future happiness is assured.

VOGUE.

RUBE'S HOTEL TANGLE (April 11).—The cast: Rube (Rube Miller); his wife (Alice Neice); Art (Arthur Neice); his wife (Madge Kirby). Written by Rube Miller.

When Rube visits the city he takes Alice, his wife, with him, not because he wants her along, but because she wants to go. Arriving at the hotel in the city, Rube sees Madge in the writing room and flirts with her. Art comes in and sees them. This, of course, starts a fight which Alice finishes when she comes looking for Rube. Rube, leaving her to fight his battle, runs upstairs, and in his fright gets into the wrong room, which happens to be Art's. Madge chases him out. Art, who is just coming along the hall sees him. From then on it is one riot of laughter. There is a cross-eyed maid, a monkey faced porter, a despondent man who tries to kill himself, several girls that are on the point of retiring, guests, etc. As a gloom chaser, and a grouch dispeller, it is all that, and more.

A MIX-UP IN PHOTOS (April 16).—The cast: The Little Blonde Lady (Rena Rogers); Jack, the college boy (Arthur Moon); his father (Jack Gaines); the rich spinster (Louise Owen). Directed by Jack Dillon. Scenario by P. A. Dillon.

Jack, a college man, receives a letter from his father, a book publisher, that the old gentleman has found a wealthy bride for him. Jack, after reading the letter, writes his father that he must first see the photo of his bride-to-be. Father then visits the rich spinster (his selection for Jack) and not being impressed with her photographs, he steals the picture of the spinster's secretary, a little blonde lady.

Jack, when he receives the blonde lady's photo, is so smitten that he hurries home from college, only to find that his bride-to-be is a homely gaunt old maid. He refuses to marry her, and is disowned by his father. The little blonde lady that night writes a story which she submits to father the next morning for publication, and the story father reads is the life of his son married to the spinster. Many humorous situations happen in the blonde lady's story, with the result that father is brought to a realization that a handsome young man is no husband for a spinster, and he tells his son to choose his own bride. Of course he chose the little blonde lady.

COUNTERFEIT LOVE (April 18).—The cast: The mysterious one (Rube Miller); the villain (Arthur Tavares); the go-between (Alice Neice); Gumshoe Madge (Marge Kirby). Scenario by Thomas Delmar. Produced by Rube Miller.

Madge, female detective, is sent out by her chief to round up a gang of coutnerfeiters which have been giving him a lot of trouble. Madge joins the gang, and when she has enough evidence to convict the gang, Rube, the mysterious one, joins the gang and Madge falls in love with him. Then, to inform on the gang means that Rube will get the same as the others, so Madge is torn between love and duty. Rube has trouble with the head of the gang about Madge. The police capture them all, and Madge and Rube find out that they are both in the same line of work.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME (Fifteenth and Last Episode—Two parts—"Driving the Last Spike"—April 3.).—The "Superstition" cut-off completed, Helen is picked to drive the last spike. A special train is to carry Helen, Rhinelander, Storm and a gay party of guests to the scene. Seagrue, angered by a sense of defeat, adopts a course of fiendish revenge. Calling his servants, Adams, Seagrue sends for Ward and instructs the two to "get" Storm and Spike.

At the cut-off, officials of the operating department await the arrival of the special. When it arrives two men, hidden on the hillside, looked down with unfriendly eyes as the golden spike is handed to Helen. To complete the ceremony, Rhinelander arranges for Helen to start the first train over the cut-off. She climbs into the cab and as the great drive wheels slowly revolve, she slips to the ground to join the party.

Storm and Spike, standing at the switch, do not notice two men silently creeping toward them. Suddenly Ward and Adams pounce upon them, making them helpless. Storm is carried unconscious up the track to await the coming of the train of empty ore cars—Ward and Adams planning to place the two men in one of the cars, leaving it to the ore to do the rest when the heavy mass of rock plunges down the chute from the mine.

Returning to bring Spike in like fashion, they find him gone. A hasty search not revealing his hiding place, Ward and Adams return to make sure of Storm. Bound and gagged Spike rolls along the track to the bridge, where he hopes to drop out of sight. As Spike tries to throw himself from the bridge the cord with which his wrists are bound catches on a projection and he hangs suspended by his wrists. As he struggles wildly for freedom he hears footsteps of men running along the track. With the cord sawing into his wrists, he gave a terrific jolt, the strands part, and he falls exhausted to the ground and hurries into hiding. In their hurry Ward and Adams overlook the hiding place of Spike and in another moment he is running toward the special.

In a few words Spike tells of Storm's fate. The next moment Helen jumps into the cab of the waiting train and uses every bit of power to reach the mine in time to save Storm's life. In the meantime Ward and Adams load Storm into an empty car. At the very moment that Helen drops from the engine the operator pulls the lever. Instantly the girl turns the dumping key of the car. Storm drops through the car bottom to the trestle.

Ward and Adams return to Seagrue. That evening Helen entertains to formally announce her engagement to Storm. The guests arrive. Among them is Seagrue. His two paid murderers wait in the garden. Spike hears the shot, learns that Seagrue had been killed, hears the murderers making their getaway in an auto, and he and Helen give chase. At the railroad crossing the train crashes into them and Ward and Adams are instantly killed. A week later Spike reads an account of the marriage of Helen and Storm.

MUSTANG.

UNDER AZURE SKIES (Three Parts—April 8).—The cast: Bill Hardy (Art Acord); "Pop" Dennis (Dick Lareno); Jim (Lawrence Peyton); Joe (William Tedmarsh); Al (Sid Algier); Mrs. Dennis (Madeline Fordyce); Nell (Nita Davis). Scenario written by Karl Coolidge. Directed by William Bertram.

Bill Hardy, fresh from the cow country with a load of steers, cashes in his six months' pay check, and is drawn into a card game by a couple of sharks at a "club." He discovers he is being cheated and gets into a fight, from which he emerges by way of a secret chute, badly battered and minus his pile.

Bill is rescued by Nell, a nurse in the Salvation Army Hospital, and cared for until he is able to go on. He is ashamed to face the boys with the story of his mishap, so he drops off at a strange pasture. By saving Mrs. Dennis from a runaway, Bill wins a place on the Flying U Ranch, owned by big hearted "Pop" Dennis. This is not to the liking of Jim, the foreman, who scents a rival.

Mrs. Dennis is an invalid and Dennis decides to send for a nurse. Bill suggests the little nurse he left behind, with his heart, and Bill gets his further enmity by riding a bucker Jim could not manage and he knocks Bill down, for which he is discharged. Jim plans to get a big bunch of cattle before he goes and his plan is overheard by one of the boys, who notifies Dennis, and they take the trail. Nell and Bill, riding, are attacked by Jim and his gang. Bill is roped, but Nell escapes. As Jim is about to string Bill up, Nell rides through, cuts the rope and Bill, jumping on behind the cowboy who has come to warn them, they escape. In the end Bill is happily tethered with Nell and the baby.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE.

APRIL (American—Five parts—April 10.).—The cast: April (Helene Rosson); Jefferey Gordon (E. Forrest Taylor); Tim Fagan (Harry von Meter); Martha Fagan (Louise Lester); Doc Jenkins (Charles Newton); Judge Devore (Al Fordyce); Mrs. De Voe (Marie Van Tassell); Casper (Harry McCabe); Cora, the nurse (Nellie Widen).

Judge De Voe and his wife are robbed of their baby girl, Mary Katharine, by a nurse in retaliation of her discharge. The nurse takes the baby to the mountains seeking the aid of her cousin, Martha Fagan, in hiding the child. Martha is the wife of Tim Fagan, a brutal mountaineer. They have a baby—the same age as the De Voe child, whom she calls April and who her husband cares nothing about. While he is on a hunting trip, their baby dies. The nurse arrives while Martha is at the grave of her child, and leaves the stolen baby while she goes out in search of Martha. In passing a deep canyon she makes a misstep and is dashed to death. When Martha returns and finds the child, she thinks that it is a gift from heaven to take the place of her child, and calls it "April." When her husband returns she lets him believe it is their child.

Eighteen years later April is still in the mountains with her supposed parents. Martha Fagan has aged with the hardships of life, and has become sullen and bitter; but she still loves April. Tim Fagan is engaged in counterfeiting with a young mountaineer, Casper, who wants to marry April. Tim agrees to sell April to Casper for $500. April dislikes Casper, though unaware of the bargain. The only one of the mountain folk who appreciates April is Doc. Jenkins, and between these two, there is a strong affection.

Jerry Gordon, of high social standing, has written a book of poems. He takes a trip to the mountains for his health. He meets April and she recognizes him as the author, having read his book, and friendship is established between the two. He pitches his camp nearby and she brings him his vegetables, milk and eggs. As the days go by, they become more interested in each other, but he hesitates to tell her of his love as he feels the gulf of social standing between them.

One night Casper comes to Fagan and induces him to sell April for $3.50. April overhears this and goes to tell Jeffery about it. Jeffery is out hunting, a storm takes place and April stays in his tent for the night. He is obliged to find shelter elsewhere. In the morning Fagan discovers April's absence. He and Casper start out immediately in search of her. Just as they are nearing Jeffery's tent, Jeffery returns as Fagan is about to shoot him, April comes between them and at this moment, Doc Jenkins appears on the scene. Casper declares that he loves April and that she belongs to him, while April clings to Jeffery who, declares that he is going to marry her. Doc Jenkins says that the ceremony must take place at once in order to settle the matter and performs the ceremony while covering Fagan and Casper with his gun.

In the meantime Martha Fagan becomes seriously ill and dies. Before her death she tells Doc Jenkins of April's identity and that the baby clothes she wore when she was first found were concealed in a chest. In the meantime, the DeVoe's are visiting Jeffery and when they find out of his marriage to a girl living in the mountains, are very much horrified and shocked. April hears this and decides to throw herself into the ravine. Just as she is about to leap off the rock, Casper finds her and tries to save her. She struggles with him, and in the struggle, he loses his balance and falls to his death.

When Doc Jenkins goes to the camp and meets the DeVoe's they quickly discover that they are the parents of April as they recognize the baby clothes that Doc has with him. In the excitement Doc asks for April, he finds her standing on the rock preparatory to sacrificing her life. She is saved from her impending fate, learns the truth regarding her parentage, and that Jeffery really loves her and wants her.

HIS WIFE'S MISTAKE (Keystone—Two Parts—April 2).—The cast: Roscoe Arbuckle, Al. St. John, William Jefferson, Minta Durfee, Betty Gray and Arthur Earl.

Roscoe begins work on his new job as janitor of the Shortacre Building in New York. While performing his duties he enters the offices of a broker, I. Steele. The broker is out, but his wife, who knows that her husband expects a rich customer in with a check for $10,000 to close an option, mistakes Roscoe for this Mr. R. U. Stout of Showme, Missouri. Thinking to be of assistance to her husband in his business, Mrs. Steele is very affable and finally invites the supposed Mr. Stout to go to luncheon with her.

Steele returns with the necessary papers and is told by his office boy that his wife has gone to a gay cafe with the new janitor. The option expires in fifteen minutes, but Steele longs for blood and takes a revolver from his desk and starts for the restaurant. No sooner has he departed than the right Mr. Stout appears. With Al, the office boy, he goes in pursuit of the broker.

Meanwhile Roscoe and Minta are having a pleasant meal, entirely unaware of the danger in which they are about to be. Mr. Stout develops unexpected speed, keeps pace with the bounding Al and they arrive in time to prevent a murder and get the necessary papers before the expiration of the option.

THE HABIT OF HAPPINESS (Fine Arts—Five Parts—April 2).—The cast: Douglas Fairbanks, George Fawcett, Dorothy West, George Backus, Macey Harlam, Grace Rankin and William Jefferson.

Sunny Wiggins is regarded as worthless by the other members of his family, who have risen to the social station where they are snubbed by the best people. The morning of the day the play begins his sister is preparing to entertain a party of butterflies, among whom is the mentally lacking beanpole she intends to marry. Sunny is in bed with as queer a lot of associates as could be collected. He has recruited his following from the bread line; two of them are in bed with him while the others are sleeping on the carpet, and one has even gone to rest in the bath tub. Not too willingly do all hands go to the shower, but it is a wash or no breakfast.

Down-stairs goes the motley array and into the dining room. Sunny thinks it fine that such a spread has been prepared for his guests and there is little left when sister enters with her guests. Of course, Sis at once tells father and Sunny is called to book. Dismissing his own guests, he finds that he has only one friend in the place, one of his sister's guests, and he doesn't know her name. She thinks Sunny is splendid and when his father has sent him out to try his sociological theories along the Bowery, she wishes him luck.

There in a cheap lodging house Sunny teaches the derelicts to laugh, and with such success that an eminent specialist drafts him to cure a millionaire grouch of dyspepsia. In the rich home of the dyspeptic he finds that the girl is the millionaire's daughter. She enters heartily into his plans but an aged 'cellist, whose favorite music is Chopin's "Funeral March," exerts more influence in the household than he. But when father has discovered his daughter and the supposed physician in fond embrace there is a fight, which ends with father a prisoner in his room, to be cured by starvation.

Meanwhile a broker, whose offer of marriage has been refused by the daughter, is plotting to ruin her father in Wall street. How Sunny thwarts the attempt, cures the grouch, becomes his son-in-law and partner and thereby is reinstated in the good graces of his own family, is the story this comedy tells.

THE WAIFS (Kay-Bee—Five Parts—April 2).—The cast: Jane Grey, William Desmond, Robert Kortman, Carol Holloway, J. Frank Burke, Fannie Midgley, Lewis Durham, Truly Shattuck and Harry Keenan.

The story derives it plot from a practical joke perpetrated by underclassmen at the theological seminary from which Arthur Rayburn has just been graduated. At the reception following his ordination these jokers put rum in the punch served and Rayburn becomes intoxicated. In this condition he is unfrocked by the bishop and the latter's daughter, Rene, breaks their engagement.

Down into the slums goes Rayburn, where he falls under the influence of a pretty piano player, Rags, in a saloon. Rags tries to redeem him, but makes little headway until she prevents the young preacher's attempt to commit suicide in the river. She loves him without reserve and under her guiding care he recovers from his degradation and opens a club for workingmen. He is so successful that the enterprise comes to the attention of the bishop of the diocese. The bishop visits the club, recognizes its leader and promptly reinstates him in the ministry.

With his future assured, Rayburn turns in gratitude to the girl of the slums who has saved him. He asks her to marry him but in spite of her love, knowing that he still loves Rene, Rags refuses him and returns to the life in which he found her.

A BATHHOUSE BLUNDER (Keystone—Two Parts—April 2).—The cast: Mae Busch, Joseph Belmont, Frank Hayes, Polly Moran, Blanche Payson and Don Likes.

Hayes and Polly arrive at the beach with their son, Belmont, to spend their vacation. Father is looking forward to a gay time and starts right in flirting with girls in the lobby of the hotel. He is whisked away by Polly but returns to find his son and Mae, the bathing instructor, together.

From now on complications pile up with great rapidity. Hayes attempts to keep his son away from Mae; Polly tries to keep her husband away from Mae; and Belmont does his best to escape being snared by Blanche Payson, the girl of his parents' choice. Before the general explanation at the end nearly all the principals have received a good wetting in the ocean.

THE GIRL WHO WON (Balboa—Two Parts—April 8).—Nancy, a street gamin, is the daughter of a noted woman pickpocket, and is allowed to run practically wild. One day she finds a dog whose foot is badly cut, and brings the poor animal to the office of Dr. Warden, a big surgical specialist. The doctor is so taken up by the innocent effrontery of the girl that he fixes up the sufferer.

The wife of Dr. Warden has an affair with Dinistesky, a foreigner, and in attempting to get rid of him is killed. Poor Nancy sees the crime, and, since she was on the doctor's grounds at the time, is suspected. In court, however, she proves her innocence, and Dr. Warden adopts her, sending her to school.

Two years elapse and vacation time comes. Nancy is to come to her new home and be chaperoned by Mary Caldwell, fiancee of the doctor. Teddy Wilmont, a local bachelor, falls in love with the girl, but Mary tells him of her origin, and he ceases his attentions. Heartbroken, she prepares to go back to school, and one day sees Mary drive up to the house in a carriage. The horse bolts and runs away, but Nancy succeeds in catching him, saving Mary's life. The poor girl is injured in so doing, but is more than repaid when the doctor, disgusted at Mary for her disclosure, confesses his love for Nancy.

LUKE'S DOUBLE (Phunphilm—April 12).—Luke falls asleep and dreams that he has a double of himself. He has an awful time about it and can't quite figure it out. They go along and Luke No. 1 gets into a "jam" with an officer of the law. The result is that No. 2 gets all the blame for all the trouble. Then Luke No. 2 arouses the anger of a young lady in the park and makes his escape. The result of this is that the policeman called into the case runs across Luke No. 1 and arrests him.

Finally he is thrown into jail and is languishing there when his other self appears on the outside of the cell door. His only remark to this new phenomenon is "Whether I'm me or you, or who's what, you're in wrong." But while rolling around in his bed he comes to his senses and realizes that it was all a horrible dream.

TEDDY AND THE ANGEL CAKE (Pathe—April 15).—A cartoon comedy by Earl Hurd. Teddy is usually a mighty good boy, but this day he is tempted to make away with a new angel cake which his mother has just baked. Fury rises within the maternal breast and mother pursues her offspring into the neighboring wood where he has fled. Teddy leaps a stream with the agility of a gazelle and, in attempting to follow, mother lands into the stream on all fours. Her young hopeful runs to her rescue and pulls her to safety, but all this is forgotten when they reach home, for Terry gets what is usually meted out to erring youths when they transgress the laws of the kitchen and pantry.

ALGERIA, NEW AND OLD (On the Same Reel As Foregoing).—The remarkable march of progress and the contrast between the old order and the new is most clearly shown in this subject. Oran, an important shipping point for Algeria, North Africa, which France is converting from a primitive country into a prosperous colony, and its vicinity, being the subject taken, the picture shows the changes wrought by progress. Oran at the present time as a modern city, and surrounding it, as yet untouched by improvements, utter primitiveness is pictured. Many of the old Moorish relics are shown; Tlemcen, an old inland city which the French engineers have rebuilt; El Figuig, an ancient desert city; views of an oasis and a caravan in the desert, and other interesting sights go to make this picture a worthy educational release.

THE GIRL THAT DIDN'T MATTER (Balboa—Two Parts—April 15).—Judge Hoover, who presides over a small county court in the middle west, is a man beloved by all and metes out justice according to his lights. One day there comes to him an orphan, Myra Wilson, homeless and charged with delinquency. Moved with pity for the poor girl, the judge orders her sent to his house, over which a spinster sister reigns. The girl is just tolerated by the sister and everything possible is done to make Myra feel uncomfortable.

Later, Hoover is elected State Senator and is forced to go to Washington. He then sends Myra to a boarding school, feeling that she will be treated better there than at home while he is away. But the girls of the school soon learn of Myra's court experience, and such is the chaffing she receives that she leaves the institution and hurries to the Capital to her guardian. Big-hearted Hoover wires for his sister to come on at once to take charge of the apartment he has taken.

Meanwhile, the Senator has been "rushed" by a crowd of lobbyists anxious to secure the passage of a certain bill in the Senate. It is their idea to catch Hoover in a compromising position with Marie Straska, a female lobbyist, and they bend all efforts in this direction. The Senator is about to prove a willing victim when Harry Lentham, a suitor of Myra, learns of it and arrives at Marie's house in time to prevent trouble. Later, Myra, who kept secret her love for her guardian, discloses it to him, and he is overjoyed, having thought that Lentham was the man in whom she was most interested. The spinster, of course, turns up her nose, but what care the happy Senator and Myra?

MIRROROID

The screen that is used by over 9,500 exhibitors, leading colleges, state, public and government institutions.

The screen that is the result of a definite purpose to supply a definite need, definite results and finality.

Now made absolutely seamless—with that uniformity of surface and matte finish that so many tried hard to imitate.

Increased factory facilities, latest coating machinery (our own) enables us to make this statement: We can turn out, ready for shipment, more screens in one day than all of our competitors put together can in a month.

RESULTS—MIRROROID—Is now sold for 33 1-3 cents a square foot; $3.00 a square yard.

You have the reasons. We are satisfied to reduce our price, because facilities and complete organization give us complete control of the situation. Our profits are satisfactory in every way.

Write—do it now—for our large, free samples. Test, compare with any screen on earth.

Therefore use the brains God gave you.

Why pay from 50 to 75 cents a square foot for a coated window shade?

Mirroroid is made in 3 tints—silver white, pale gold, silver flesh—all 33 1-3 cents a square foot.

Realize we are the oldest, the largest, the pioneer screen manufacturers of the world.

Mirroroid is guaranteed for five years against cracking, peeling or turning in color.

It is the only screen that will give you true perspective and color tone. Eliminating all eye strain, hazy, out-of-focus effect, and fade-a-way at close up or angle view. A very pronounced defect in all other metalized screens.

of the mine, an old and infirm man, wills the property to Jim on his death, leaving living expenses for his nephew, who is a doctor and victim of a drug which he distributes. He makes repeated requests to Jim for money, but they are turned down. Later Jim incurs the enmity of a mine foreman, and the latter, with the doctor, attempts to blow up the mine. They are partially successful, and in a fight over the spoils, the cashier is killed, Jim being accused of the murder, and sent to jail. He escapes and goes to a foreign land.

Coming back several years later, he meets socially the Craigen family, which is prominent in New York society. He falls in love with the daughter of the house, and learns that she is a drug victim, who receives the drug from the doctor, who was responsible for his incarceration. They meet face to face and the doctor, in mortal fear of Big Jim, admits that he killed the man who, it developes, is the only son of Mr. Craigen. Reconciliation follows and Big Jim, after an uphill fight, finally manages to wean his beloved from her unfortunate habit.

THE GREAT PROBLEM (Five Parts—April 17).—The cast: Mary Carson and Peggy (Violet Mersereau); Bill Carson (Dan Hanlon); George Devereaux (Lionel Adams); Peggy (the child) (Kittens Reicherts); Skinny McGee (William J. Dyer); Mrs. Devereaux (Mrs. J. J. Brundage); Joseph (Howard Crampton). Written and produced by Rex Ingram.

Bill Carson is sentenced to twelve years for housebreaking. He vows that he will, upon ending his term, have vengeance upon George Devereaux, the prosecuting attorney, whose speech swayed the jury to conviction. The little daughter of Carson is left in charge of his pal Skinny McGee, when the mother died of shock, because of Carson's conviction.

When Skinny dies the girl Peggy turns to picking pockets for a livelihood, Skinny having brought her to proficiency in this line, as her only education. There is a scene pictured in the board rooms of a reform organization. Devereaux accepts a challenge that he cannot take a criminal and reform him by improved and beneficial surroundings.

Peggy is brought into a police station on charge of picking pockets, and is chosen to be the one upon whom Devereaux shall practice his experiment. Taking her to his palatial home, Devereaux seeks for two years to train Peggy in the better way. His efforts are variously successful, and finally a young man proposes marriage to Peggy and is accepted.

Upon arriving at the church Peggy discovers that she is in love with Devereaux, and flees from the wedding party in consternation. She decides to return to her old life, and departs from the Devereaux home without making her intentions known.

About this time Carson ends his term of imprisonment. He seeks to conclude his vengeance by shooting Devereaux, and for that purpose waits for him to come from his house. Carson is hiding behind a tree when he is recognized by Peggy and when, on the instant that Carson is about to fire a revolver at Devereaux, the girl throws herself before her father and receives in her own body the bullet intended for Devereaux.

The story acquires its ending in the recovery of Peggy, the avowed reformation of her father, and the final picture shows Peggy once more established happily in the Devereaux home where we are led to believe she will, in legal and ceremonial form, eventually become a permanent resident.

GREAT NORTHERN.
